Miniature motion picture machines, using only an inclosed incandescent electric lamp and approved acetate of cellulose or slow burning film, will not be required to pay the proposed tax.

The Wagner-Mitchel matter superseded all others at Albany the past week with the result that there was no meeting held by the Codes Committee in connection with the legalizing of Sunday movies. Senator Charles Newton, who is the chairman of the Executive Committee which will consider the proposition, served the past week as chairman at the Wagner-Mitchel hearings, making it utterly impossible for him to give the Sunday propositon any consideration.

It is expected, however, that a meeting of the Codes Committee will be held within the next few days, at which time the matter will be reported out of committee as outlined in a recent issue of the Moving Picture World, after which it will be put to vote. C. L. GRANT.

TULA BELLE IN GOLDWYN PICTURE.

In Goldwyn's second Mae Marsh production there is one of the loveliest children who have ever been seen in motion pictures. Her name is Tula Belle, and her age is seven years. This attractive youngster is a Norwegian, who first attracted attention among screen fans by her work in "The Vicar of Wakefield."

Opposed to Wheeler Bill

Executive Committee of the N. A. M. P. I. Decides That It Is Unjust and Unfair to the Picture Industry.

AT a meeting of the Executive Committee of the N. A. M. P. I., held Thursday, April 5, considerable attention was given to the proposed Wheeler motion picture license and tax bill, of which rough drafts had been received. The members of the committee present decided that the proposed bill was unjust and unfair and that they were opposed to it.

The committee recommended that the several attorneys of the companies belonging to the national association act as a committee to which all legal and legislative matters may be referred.

The work of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers in behalf of military preparedness was indorsed and full cooperation on the part of the national association was guaranteed.

The following companies were elected to membership: Goldwyn Pictures Corp., represented by Samuel Goldfish, Producer Class A; Sanger Picture Plays Corp., represented by Eugene Sanger, Producer Class A; E. I. S. Motion Picture Corp., represented by Dixon Boardman, Producer Class C; Charters Feature Films, represented by Lucille Chapin, Producer Class B; Argus Laboratories, represented by Frank T. Elliott, Producer Class C, and Acme Lithographing Co., represented by L. P. Weber, Supply and Equipment, Class No. 3. In addition to these the following individuals were elected to membership in General Division, Class 5: J. Robert Rubin, R. W. France, Jesse L. Lasky, Whitman Bennett, Emil E. Shauer, Roswell Dague, Thos. S. Barrett, Wm. E. Allen, Hiram Abrams, C. C. Burr, Charles R. Meyers, J. Albert Thorny, Wm. W. Eines, Lloyd Robinson, James Steele, Arthur S. Friend, James Gilleen, Hector Turnbull, Maurice O'Hare, W. S. Butterfield and E. C. Beatty.

In the absence of President William A. Brady, who is out of town, and Chairman Walter W. Irwin, who was unable to be present, William L. Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Corp., presided at the meeting, which was attended by J. E. Brulatour, Eastman Films; P. A. Powers, Universal Film Manufacturing Co.; Arthur James, Metro Pictures Corp.; Samuel H. Trigger, Exhibitors' League of America; Louis F. Blumenthal, Auditorium theater, Jersey City; Louis L. Levine, Regent theater, Brooklyn; Judge A. F. Tugwell of Los Angeles, a director of the association; Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary, and William M. Seabury.

Considerable routine business was transacted, including authorization to arrange for a lease for another year of Rooms 805 and 806 in the Times Building, now occupied as offices by the national association.

OLIVE TELL IN "THE SILENT MASTER."

Olive Tell, famous actress and renowned beauty of the English stage, will make her film debut in "The Silent Master," in which she plays the leading role opposite Robert Warwick. "The Silent Master" is taken from E. Phillips Oppenheim's book, "The Court of St. Simon," and also marks the debut of Director Leonce Perret. This play requires an exceptionally accomplished leading woman, and Mr. Warwick favored Miss Tell from the very beginning, but she was somewhat reluctant in joining the ranks of the movies, not that she did not consider the screen an excellent medium for her art, but rather because she felt the stage more alluring and more promising. After some persuasion, she consented in taking the part, and so successful did it turn out that Mr. Warwick has tendered her a contract for his fourth Selznick production. Being a beauty of distinctive type, Miss Tell registers and photographs perfectly, making an ideal leading woman in every sense of the word.

MASTERS GOES TO WASHINGTON.

E. Lanning Masters, as secretary of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, has gone to Washington in behalf of the advertisers' campaign to increase army and navy enlistment. Mr. Masters appeared before the members of the National Council of Defense.

Another gun was fired in the campaign when film leaders and trailers, slides, posters, newspaper advertisements and stories, etc., were collected and sent to Washington.

Charles Moyer was elected to represent the A. M. P. A. in the organization's dealings with the Vigilantes, an association of writers and artists which is working along the same patriotic lines as are the advertisers.

Technical Men Discuss Trade Progress

Society of Motion Picture Engineers Holds Its Third Meeting at Atlantic City—Interesting Papers Read

THE Society of Motion Picture Engineers held its third session at Atlantic City, N. J., on April 6 and 7. The society contains in its membership many of the prominent technical men in the industry. Its chief avowed object is the bringing about of steps looking to the standardization of machinery used in the manufacture and projection of motion pictures. Nor does it intend to overlook any factor which will have an influence for the betterment of manufacturing and exhibiting conditions. The sessions proved to be of marked interest.

It was 12 o'clock Friday when President C. Francis Jenkins, of the Graphoscope Company of Washington City, called the members to order. Present were: E. Kendall Gillett, Motion Picture News, secretary; H. A. Campe, Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, Pittsburgh; A. S. Victor, Victor Animatograph Company, Davenport, Ia.; Dr. Hermann Kellner, Bausch & Lomb Company, Rochester, N. Y.; H. M. Wible, in charge of supply department, Westinghouse Company, Pittsburgh; W. C. Kunzmann, National Carbon Company, Cleveland; Harry T Wilkins, special agent traffic department, Pennsylvania Railroad; Carl L. Gregory, Moving Picture World; Max Mayer, M. J. Wohl & Co., Brooklyn; F. B. Cannock, Precision Machine Company; J. S. Spear, General Electric Company, Will C. Smith, Nicholas Power Company, and Nat I. Brown, Minusa Screen.

"We will be respected in the motion picture industry by our ability to control our organization and to further its stability," said Mr. Jerkins in opening. "No important movement has ever been begun and pushed to a conclusion without the confidence of the members in the ultimate success of a fixed purpose. Our purpose is to standardize the industry. I think you would be surprised if you knew the number of people who are looking to us. Everybody wants a standard —anything that is the consensus of opinion or judgment of you engineers. I take it our members are to concentrate, get together and tabulate the consensus of opinion of our industry."

Mr. Jenkins submitted for the consideration of the members a short list of definitions of words and phrases in use in the industry—a sort of glossary, as it were, and the meeting, after devoting three-quarters of an hour to a dozen-word definition of "motion picture," sent the whole list to a special committee for report Saturday morning.

Mr. Wible read an important report of the committee on electrical devices on the compilation of which much care had been expended. The members were not quite ready, however, to have their conclusions printed, and the document was returned to them at their request.

"To my mind the camera is the nucleus from which radiates all the things in the industry," said Mr. Gregory before beginning the reading of his paper.

"It's the egg before the hen," interjected Mr. Jenkins.

"It seems to me more of the camera problems should be settled before we proceed," continued Mr. Gregory, as he took up his manuscript. "The camera is the keystone in the arch of picturedom. Without the camera the whole structure must fall to the ground. It is therefore of the utmost importance that the first attention of this august body be directed to the vital center upon which every other section of the industry depends."

Mr. Gregory pointed out the many variations in cameras from a uniform standard. The camera must accept all the imperfections associated with an absence of standards and do good work. The speaker told of personal experiences illuminative of points to which he was directing the attention of his hearers. He paid much attention to the absence of uniformity in establishing the frame line. He referred to the practice which has grown up of manufacturers expecting a cameraman to supply his own instrument; he deplored it, too, as being responsible for many inconsistencies.

President Jenkins reported the acceptance of the application of the society for membership in the National Fire Protective Association and of his appearance before the biannual meeting of the latter body. Here he had appealed for a more liberal interpretation of the restrictions in the way of insurance, storage, transportation, booth construction, etc. The president emphasized the importance to the society of the affiliation inasmuch as the association makes rules which are followed by practically all municipalities in making motion picture regulations.

Dr. Kellner, after a talk on the science of optics, had been provided with a blackboard and in black and white elucidated many of the principles he had been describing. At the conclusion of the doctor's talk and of the long discussion participated in by many of the members, he was invited to contribute a paper.

The meeting at 6 o'clock adjourned to 9 o'clock the following morning, President Jenkins providing for the evening by naming every one on a committee to sit in the interim.

Saturday's Session.

The question as to what constitutes the safety limit of the angle of throw from projection booth to screen took up much of the attention of the members on Saturday. In the forenoon final revision was given to the list of definitions of technical terms which the society is preparing. The work was done in no haphazard fashion; the delegates went after the best descriptive terms they could weave.

Nat I. Brown, of the Minusa Screen Company, was asked to tell the delegates something about the screen market. Mr. Brown very promptly urged the preparation of a paper outlining the angle of projection beyond which it was unsafe to go—that is, the extreme point away from right angle from projector to screen which would mark the difference between satisfactory and unsatisfactory results. He said his company at the present time was engaged in the making of extensive experiments looking to the determination of this factor, but that it would be a couple of months yet before there would be a final result in the way of charts and readings.

"One of the most important things in the industry in an exhibiting way," declared Mr. Brown, "is this question of angle of throw. Some of the finest theatrical structures in the country are setting bad examples for the men who are building houses. There are two of these theaters in New York City. The greatest service this society can do to exhibitors is to establish by thorough investigation the particular point of divergence from the right angle of projection beyond which it is impossible to get satisfactory projection.

"These great structures which are doing business with the high angle throw, and by reason of the supplementary and complementary attractions with which they surround their exhibitions continue to draw big houses, are doing a disservice to the industry. They are getting results in a business way, but these results are not obtained on their projection. I can name a number of houses that have been recently built at a cost of from $150,000 to $350,000 in which exist the exact conditions as are to be found in the two large houses I have named. When the builders have been asked why they committed such an error in designing they invariably cite these houses for their authority."

In the course of the general discussion, in which mention was made of houses in which projection was ideal, Mr. Brown said he believed the great need was the determination for the benefit of architects and exhibitors of the extreme limit of safety in deviation. Ideal conditions were known, but the outside angle limit which would give "satisfactory" results had not been authoritatively determined. In answer to a question he said that screens that would work perfectly at a distance of, say, sixty feet would give absolutely bad results at other distances.

President Jenkins added to the committee on projection Messrs. Brown, Will C. Smith, of the Nicholas Power Company, and F. H. Richardson, of the Moving Picture World.

Mr. Mayer moved that a committee be appointed to prepare a paper defining how far from the straight throw an exhibitor may depart and obtain satisfactory projection, that an arbitrary standard be established and that the committee offer substantial reasons and proofs in support of its conclusions. This was adopted.

Chicago was selected as the place of the next meeting of the society. The date was set to make it simultaneous with the annual meeting of the exhibitors, July 14-22. The dates of July 16 and 17 were entatively agreed upon for the sessions. The president appointed Messrs. Victor, Rothacker and Bell as a committee of arrangements.

Secretary Gillett brought up the question of the society taking over the work of the standardization committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, saying the matter had been brought to his attention by Executive Secretary F. H. Elliott, of the latter organization. He suggested that it seemed desirable in order to avoid confusion and the possibility of working at cross purposes that some steps be taken for the two societies to get together. The delegates agreed with him and it was decided that Secretary Gillett should get in touch with Secretary Elliott looking to the taking over by the society of standardization matters.

It was decided to have prepared a list of the subjects which are believed to be in need of standardization and that there be made definite recommendations looking to the putting into effect of the report of the committee.

"I know we will make our institution permanent," said President Jenkins just before adjournment. "We are going to do something. I know what we want to do is the one thing for which we were organized—standardize the industry—and I think the resolution we have just passed is the most important that has been put before this society since we began business last July. I believe this action is the thing that is going to make us worth while. Nothing else we have done has any comparative value."

Farewell Feed to Douglas Fairbanks

Pete Schmid Invites a Lot of Newspaper Folk to Help Him Eat It, Too.

FURTHER proof that Douglas Fairbanks is the living definition of the title of his second Artcraft Picture—"A Regular Guy"—was forthcoming at a farewell feed tendered him by the Artcraft Pictures Corporation in the Peacock Room of Murray's Restaurant, New York. The luncheon preceded by one day "Doug's" departure to Los Angeles. The guests were mostly representatives of daily newspapers and motion picture trade journals.

During the course of the luncheon several stunts were pulled, all of which suspiciously smacked of the space-grabbing proclivities of Pete Schmid and Bennie Zeidman. One of the stunts that got a laugh was a cablegram supposedly from ex-Czar Nicholas, which read: "Have just terminated contract with Government. Am open for proposition in your next picture. Can play mob scenes. Photos by mail." Our advice to Pete is to get a "received" instead of "send" blank next time.

"Doug" received a horseshoe tied with a ribbon of film from George M. Cohan. He admitted that he was no speechmaker, and then disproved it by entertaining with several stories. Al. Lichtman, general manager of Artcraft, also spoke.

Those present were Douglas Fairbanks, Wid Gunning, Bennie Zeidman, Helen Duey, Women's Home Companion; Elizabeth Sears, Film Fun; P. F. Atkinson, Metropolitan Magazine; F. M. Gould, Metropolitan Magazine; M. L. Malevinsky, Dennis F. O'Brien, John Emerson, Walter E. Greene, president of Artcraft; Al Lichtman, Artcraft; John Fairbanks, Adam Hull Shirk, Dramatic Mirror; James Beecroft, Exhibitors' Herald; Ben H. Grimm, Moving Picture World; Pete Milne, Motion Picture News; Weed Dickinson, Telegraph; Milt R. Lowenthal, New York Star; H. F. Rendall, New York Review; Jim Milligan, Billboard; Randolph Bartlett, Photoplay Magazine; Bide Dudley, Evening World; Arthur Ungar, New York Clipper; William Bournazel; Edwin M. La Roche, Motion Picture Magazine; T. E. Oliphant, Evening Mail; Frederick Gage, Louis E. Loeb, J. E. Edwards, Billboard; Allan Rock, Harry S. Bressler, Francis A. Gordan, Herbert S. Clark, Eugene Kelcey Allen, K. C. Beaton, Charles Condon, Motography; W. C. Waters, New Magazine; Frank O'Malley, New York Sun.

MERGER RUMORS DENIED.

Rumors of a merger of the General Film, V-L-S-E and Greater Vitagraph is emphatically denied by Walter W. Irwin, general manager of V-L-S-E. Others in position to know are grimly silent on the subject.

In behalf of Pathe, J. A. Berst, the vice-president and general manager of that organization, denies that his company is in any way concerned with the proposed mergers.

ROHLFS WITH GENERAL.

J. G. Rohlfs, for the past three years with the Mutual Film Corporation, has joined the General Film Company as purchasing agent, with headquarters at 440 Fourth avenue, New York.

American Eclair to Resume Business

President Jourjon, on Furlough in Paris, Orders Litigation Stopped and Manufacturing Taken Up.

FROM the office of the Eclair Film Company, Inc., comes the announcement that the suit instituted against them and other allied companies and individuals by the Societe Française des Films et Cinematographes Eclair of Paris, France, shortly after the outbreak of the European War, has been withdrawn by the French company and a satisfactory agreement has been reached. This suit, which was based on certain charges made against the management of their various companies here, would never have been started were it not for the fact that during the absence of Charles Jourjon, the head of the French company, who has until recently been confined to the trenches on the west front, the management of the French company was misinformed by outsiders as to real conditions in America.

After a continuous service of two and a half years, during which time he has several times been mentioned in dispatches for bravery, Mr. Jourjon was granted a short furlough and immediately went to Paris and took up the matter of his American business. The false impressions he had received were quickly dispelled from his mind upon his being presented with the facts, and he immediately ordered that the suit be dropped and an agreement entered into.

The management of the American companies will remain as heretofore with Emile Offeman, whose work in the film business has long been known and recognized to be of the highest quality, at their head.

The board of directors remains the same: E. Offeman, president and treasurer; A. W. Varian, who since the inception of the companies in America has been their secretary and legal adviser; A. C. Rieger, assistant treasurer and assistant secretary; F. Rawolle and H. M. Simon; with the addition of G. Deveaud, who is the personal representative of Mr. Jourjon.

The companies are prepared to manufacture immediately and will entertain any meritorious proposition. They still retain their office at 18 East Forty-first street, New York City.

Billie Burke With Famous-Lasky

Signs a Two-Year Contract by Permission of Flo. Ziegfeld—"Mysterious Miss Terry" First Picture.

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announces that it has concluded a contract for a period of two years with the celebrated dramatic artist, Miss Billie Burke, by arrangement with Florenz Ziegfeld, whereby Miss Burke will be seen in a series of productions to be made in either the Famous Players or Lasky Studios. This contract was closed last week by Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, according to plans arranged by Jesse L. Lasky before Mr. Lasky left for his trip to the Western studios. It is so arranged that Miss Burke will do her photoplay posing in the summer months. Her screen work will consequently not interfere with her regular seasons as a dramatic star, and she will open in a new play September 5 under Mr. Ziegfeld's direction.

During the term of her contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Miss Burke will not appear in photoplays under any other management whatsoever. Miss Burke's first vehicle will be "The Mysterious Miss Terry," a delightful and whimsical photoplay, the scenario of which has been written by Gillett Burgess, who, by the way, becomes now a photoplay author for the first time. The story details the experience of a very charming and self-reliant young woman of great wealth who is weary of her surroundings and who takes an extremely novel method of finding a truly noble and disinterested man worthy of her love. Miss Burke is to begin work at the Famous Players Studio in New York within the next fortnight. The first production will be directed by J. Searle Dawley.

Mr. Caine will make his Broadway debut as a screen star in "The Deemster" at the Broadway theater, Sunday, April 15.

The Illinois Censorship Bill

Hearings Made Both For and Against the Bill in Chicago Will Be Concluded the Ensuing Week.

THE sub-committee of the Illinois House Committee on License and Miscellany, appointed to hear discussions on the proposed State censorship bill, held the first meeting in the Hotel La Salle, at one o'clock, Saturday afternoon, March 31.

The members of the committee of the Chicago Local appointed to discuss the question were present, as were also Arthur J. Peglar, who represented the Mutual Film Corporation, and George L. Reker, of counsel for Essanay. In addition there were quite a number of members of various woman's clubs of Chicago, headed by Mrs. Guy Blanchard, the framer of the bill.

The meeting was given over entirely to the proponents of the bill, chief among whom were Mrs. Blanchard and Guy Guernsey, who introduced the bill in the House. Mrs. Blanchard made the opening speech, and the main point of her argument, as well as of the other speakers who followed her centered on the censorship of moving pictures from the child's welfare standpoint.

Much surprise was created by the speech of David T. Alexander, an attorney who introduced himself as a member of the F. I. L. M. Club of Chicago, and chairman of the legislative committee of that organization. He strongly advocated State censorship in preference to local censorship.

The meeting adjourned at 4.30 P. M., the next meeting being fixed for Monday afternoon, at 2.30 o'clock.

The Monday meeting was chiefly devoted to a hearing of the opponents of the State censorship bill. The discussion was opened by Arthur J. Peglar of Mutual, and he was followed by Dr. Samuel Atkinson of Los Angeles, who was retained by the Chicago Local for the occasion. Dr. Atkinson's speech was comprehensive, able and logical. He refused to acknowledge the right of any authority to censor the moving picture, and this stand was also taken by all the members of the committee selected from the Chicago Local. Joseph Hopp, Wm. E. Heaney, Alfred Hamburger, M. S. Ludick, George D. Laing, M. A. Choynski and F. H. Franke followed with pertinent and pithy remarks.

The consensus of opinion of Joseph Hopp, Alfred Hamburger, Wm. E. Heaney, Wm. J. Sweeney and Fred H. Hartman, on the Chicago Local committee, is that it would be wiser to accept State censorship than to have the censorship of various local boards in cities throughout the State. They take into consideration the heavy expenses that would be placed upon the industry by having many taxes levied for censorship instead of one. If the State censorship bill should pass the Chicago local censor board will be abolished.

Mr. Reker, representing Essanay, was next, and he was strongly in favor of local cenorship for Chicago rather than State censorship. The Rev. Father Dinneen, who followed, spoke in the same strain, as did also Mrs. Henry D. Solomon, of the Chicago Woman's Club. Mrs. Solomon was very strongly opposed to State censorship and was disposed with equal strength in favor of Chicago censorship.

Chairman Thomas Curran adjourned the meeting at 5 o'clock P. M., announcing that the next meeting will be held some day during the week of April 9, at the same place, the date to be announced later.

Brooklyn Exhibitors' Meeting

Supplementary Report Tells of Action Against Birth Control Subjects.

ONE of the most enthusiastic meetings ever held by exhibitors took place last Saturday night, when the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn, one of the largest locals in the country, held their annual elections at the Triangle theater. Those elected for the ensuing term are William Brandt, president; Rudolph Sanders, vice-president; H. Clark Mooney, second vice-president; Robert Israels, treasurer; William Bland, financial secretary; Samuel Lesselbaum, recording secretary, and Adolph Stockhammer, sergeant-at-arms. On the board of directors there were spirited contests, the victors being John Manheimer, C. Cranides, William Hollander, M. W. Lane, Otto Lederer, J. Schaeffer and H. Haring.

The treasurer reported a balance in the treasury of over $1,500, while the secretary reported practically every theater in Brooklyn as being a member of the organization. Several questions of extreme importance to the entire industry were taken up and acted upon. The question of being assessed by the Authors' Society for the use of copyrighted music was fully discussed, and it was decided, in view of its national importance, to defer action until the matter could be placed before the national convention at Chicago in July. The following resolution was unanimously passed:

Whereas, certain advertisements have appeared in the trade papers announcing the release of a picture on "Birth Control," featuring a person who has received considerable notoriety through advocating same, and

Whereas, it is the judgment that themes of this nature hurt the industry through exploitation on the screen, therefore be it

Resolved that the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn go on record as being opposed to the use of the screen for such purposes; be it further

Resolved that the widest publicity be given this resolution in order to prevent even the announcement of contemplated releases of this kind.

A committee was appointed to devise a plan whereby the organization could act as security where the exchanges request an advance deposit, and the zeal of this committee was evidenced by the fact that, in spite of the lateness of the hour, it immediately convened and organized.

A banquet will be tendered shortly to the outgoing and incoming officers. Judge Tugwell, of Los Angeles, acted in the capacity of teller during the election, and was given a rising vote of thanks. Sam Trigger, the venerable president of the New York local, spoke on the Sunday question, and clearly outlined the necessity of concerted action.

The meeting adjourned in the wee small hours of the morning, after those present had partaken of refreshments.

Herrington on the Road

The National Organizer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League Starts on His Itinerary.

FRED J. HERRINGTON, official organizer of the National Exhibitors' League of America, started last Thursday on an organizing campaign in the Middle West. Much credit is due Mr. Herrington for the able way in which he conducted the affairs of the league during his presidency. He was elected president at the convention held in San Francisco in July, 1915. At that time the league was several thousand dollars in debt; when he relinquished the office to its present incumbent there was six thousand dollars in the treasury. His regime was accentuated by the sincerity and fidelity with which he threw himself into the work of organization; by his personal effort and persuasive appeal he brought into the league Ohio, New York, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Massachusetts, Florida, Mississippi and Iowa.

Players for Baltimore Ball

Committee Sent to New York Gain Many Volunteers—Arrangements Now Complete.

THE envoys extraordinary, Frederick Clement Weber, L. A. De Hoff, Joseph Brodie and J. Louis Rome, who constituted the committee of the Maryland Exhibitors' League, selected to go to New York to execute the mission of inviting some of the greatest stars of the screen to attend the ball to be given by this organization on April 28, returned to Baltimore on Wednesday night, March 28. They brought glad tidings with them, for it was announced that they had secured the promises of eleven, whose scintillating brilliance is unquestionable. They are: Alice Brady, Ethel Clayton, Pauline Frederick, Peggy Hyland, Anita Stewart, Carlyle Blackwell, Thomas Meighan, Antonio Moreno, Earle Williams, Robert Warwick and Edward Earle.

On Tuesday, April 3, another meeting of the board of directors of the league was held at their headquarters in the New Theater Building. Practically all the general arrangements have now been completed and according to the estimated ticket sales, the affair will be a complete success. A popularity contest is now being waged to determine the mind of the general public in regard as to who should lead the grand march.

The program for the attending stars, as now outlined, is this: As they arrive in the city, each will be met and conducted to one of the finest hotels in the city. At nine o'clock P. M. all will be escorted to the Lyric and the grand march will take place. After this, an appointed committee will escort the honored guests through the boxes, introducing them to the occupants. Then, as the dancing proceeds, the distinguished visitors will be tendered a very hospitable reception by those present in true Maryland style. They will be invited to do a little speechmaking, a little handshaking, a little dancing and a little heart to heart tete-a-tete. Then, at twelve o'clock, a well arranged banquet will be served in the Lyric dining hall for the exceptional visitors, the promoters of the affair and their friends. On Sunday the guests will be taken on a sightseeing tour of historic Baltimore.

Kansas League Meeting

Will Be Held at Hutchinson on April 23 and 24—Big Attendance Expected.

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Kansas will hold their next convention at Hutchinson, Kansas, April 23, 24, 1917. We expect to hold one of the biggest conventions ever held in the State. The Exhibitors' League has more members and is in better financial condition than they have ever been before.

During the meeting of the last legislature an active lobby was carried on in behalf of the exhibitors. The League succeeded in having the censorship board moved from Topeka, Kansas, to Kansas City, Kansas, which in itself was quite a victory for the exhibitors, inasmuch as the exchangemen have agreed to eliminate the censorship fee of ten cents per reel, which is now being charged the exhibitors in Kansas, if they would succeed in getting this change made. They also succeeded in securing the removal of one of the most narrow-minded men that ever sat on a Censor Board, and at the present time the Censor Board is composed of very intellectual people, who are in a position to censor the pictures in the right way. Censoring pictures will be done hereafter at absolute cost, and the maximum which can be charged is $2 per reel.

The officers of the league are very anxious that all the exhibitors of Kansas attend this convention, as many things of vital importance are to be brought up at this time.

Yours truly,
C. E. GLAMANN,
President M. P. E. L. of Kansas.

NEW YORK LOCAL IS WITHOUT A SECRETARY.

Tom Howard has tendered his resignation as secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, New York Local No. 1, on account of incompatibility. The appointment of his successor has not been announced.

APPLICATIONS IN NEW JERSEY STATE LEAGUE.

Applications for membership in the New Jersey State branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America can be obtained at the league headquarters, 216 Globe Building, 800 Broad street. Secretary Bornstein reports that many exhibitors have already sent in their applications, together with the annual dues of $6, but in order to do more effective legislative work more money is necessary.

Illinois State Convention

Officers Elected, Also Delegates and Alternates to the National Convention in July.

THE Chicago local held the regular monthly meeting in Hall 512, Masonic Temple, Friday, April 6. The session was held behind closed doors from 11 o'clock a. m. until 3:30 in the afternoon.

The reports of standing committees were read and passed upon, but the long session was devoted chiefly to a discussion of advance deposits on films. It was finally decided, in order to arrive at a fixed policy, to hold a special meeting for the final discussion of this question on Friday, April 13. Lee A. Ochs, national president, who will be in Chicago on that date, will attend and address the meeting. The state convention was held immediately afterwards.

The following members from outside cities were in attendance: W. W. Watts, state treasurer, and Ed. Kunz, member of the state executive committee, Springfield; Wm. Bradley, first vice-president, Ottawa; C. J. Law, member of the executive committee, Pana; Wm. Sauvage, member of the executive committee, Alton; F. M. Bond, Pontiac; S. W. Goodell, Beardstown; Harry Grampp, Rockford, and W. J. West, Kewanee.

Green M. Luttrell, of Jacksonville, the president of the Illinois League, was unavoidably absent.

The reports of the various officers were read and accepted, and afterwards the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

Green M. Luttrell, Jacksonville, president; Wm. Bradley, Ottawa, first vice-president; Andrew C. Karzas, Chicago, second vice-president; W. W. Watts, Springfield, treasurer, and Sidney Smith, Chicago, secretary.

The following were elected as members of the state executive committee:

Chas. J. Law, Pana; Paul Sittner, Robert R. Levy and Chas. Stewart, all of Chicago; W. E. Burford, Aurora; Dee Robinson, Peoria, and Ed. Kunz, Springfield.

Delegates and alternates for Illinois to the coming National Convention in July were then elected, the names of these delegates and alternates being withheld for the present.

During the meeting of the Chicago Local, Donald M. Ryerson was given the privilege of the floor. He made a brief speech, in which he explained a patriotic movement, known as the "Four-Minute Men," for which he asked the support of the league, which passed the following resolution:

The members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of Chicago express their patriotism and interest in the welfare of the nation by giving their endorsement to the "Four-Minute Men" movement for permanent protection of this country through universal military training for young men; and that hearty co-operation with the plan outlined at the meeting by Donald M. Ryerson be given by its membership; and that a copy of this resolution be given the executive committee of the "Four-Minute Men" and be sent to members of the League.

NEW ORLEANS EXHIBITORS WORK FOR LEAGUE.

The suburban exhibitors of New Orleans at a meeting of their association Monday, March 26, voted to work for the organization of a State exhibitors' association, and as such to join the National Exhibitors' Association. W. Stephen Bush, editor of the Exhibitors' Trade Review, Inc., under stood to be representing his publisher, Lee Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, spoke. Mr. Ochs is making a campaign for re-election.

NOTICE TO INDIANA EXHIBITORS.

The regular meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of Indiana will occur at the Hotel Severin, Indianapolis, Wednesday, April 18, 10 a. m. The meeting will be a strictly business meeting and a closed session for exhibitors only. Very important matters will be taken up and it is requested that all exhibitors in the State be present. This meeting will take the place of the regular quarterly meeting which would come in May, but has been called earlier on account of urgent matters that need attention.

FRANK REMBUSCH, State President.
RAY ANDREWS, State Secretary.

Ralph and John Ince Join

Ince Productions, Inc., Formed and Brothers Will Produce for Independent Field.

INCE Productions, Inc., with Ralph and John Ince as equal owners and active heads, is the latest important addition to the producing firms of the motion picture industry. The plans of the organization, a closed corporation in which no stock will be sold and no financiers interested, were announced this week by Ralph Ince for the first time.

Twelve important productions a year of approximately six and seven reels in length will be the producing schedule, with the first release to make its appearance on or about June 15. The first production will, in all likelihood, be the filming of a novel, now immensely popular and the rights for which a noted author has refused twenty thousand dollars.

Ralph W. Ince.

The Ince Productions, Inc., was capitalized under the laws of New York for ten thousand dollars. "We could have as well capitalized for five million," said Mr. Ince, "but we are going to be conservative, avoid bluster, stick to our knitting, produce the best we know how and not spend two million dollars a day, on paper."

Ralph Ince has contracted with Harry Rapp forces to produce "To Day" for them, which will be exploited as an Ince production, after which he will devote his entire time to the Ince concern's efforts. He will begin actual work on Ince features May 1.

The idea of release and distribution to be followed by the Ince concern will be of the franchise nature, the distributing exchanges receiving the entire twelve pictures, with the usual financial obligations imposed upon the exchanges. The fact that five territories were closed for the entire output, without any intimation being given of their intentions, conclusively demonstrates the equitability of the Ince project.

John Ince.

Even balanced casts of well-known motion picture personalities will characterize the pictures. "Balanced casts," according to Mr. Ince, are more susceptible to direction, absorb better the directors' ideas and are more crucible in the handling, hence, stars, in the sense of those of marked exorbitance in point of salary, will have no place in the Ince lexicon.

Studio arrangements are going forward rapidly. Whether a plant of sufficient dimensions to accommodate two companies will be built, or the present plan of leasing a studio, now under advisement, will be adhered to, Mr. Ince was not ready to divulge and stated that this matter was one of future development.

John Ince, who will share activities with Ralph Ince in all productional matters, most recently created "Sealed Lips" and "The Struggle" for the World Corporation. Each of these pictures were referred to by the trade reviewers as 100 per cent productions. Since he resigned from the World staff he has traveled about South America and South Africa, accumulating a library of elaborate sun sets, cloud effects, coast and maritime views, which he will place at the disposal of the organization, which bears his family name.

Harry Reichenbach is to take charge of the exploitation departments of the new concern.

The Ince Productions offices will be temporarily located at 1600 Broadway until offices, now being equipped, are ready for occupancy. Scenario, technical, productional and distributional departments will be under the direction of known experts with the executive departments under prominent business men, acquainted with the intricacies of the film trade.

The modesty of Messrs. Ince in their capitalization, their quiet, unvarnished statements, their stated policy of dignified aiding and abetting of their branches, and their statement of policy, bears fruitful promise of big things to come within the next year.

General Film Company of Canada

Organization to Handle G. F. Releases With Headquarters in Montreal.

A NEW company, which will distribute in Canada the same product handled by the General Film Company in the United States, has been organized and will be known as the General Film Company of Canada, Limited. Its headquarters will be in Montreal and it will have branches throughout the Dominion. The business of the company will be conducted from the main office at Montreal. The officers of the company are: President, T. A. Hubley; vice-president, Harold Bolster; secretary and treasurer, T. Coppelman. The directors are T. A. Hubley, Edward English, Harold Bolster, W. F. Rodgers and W. M. Gulick.

The General Film Company of Canada, Limited, is the result of a desire upon the part of the executives of the General Film that its Canadian business be handled by men who are personally interested in the organization and in close touch with local conditions. T. A. Hubley, who became the president, is a Montreal business man of many years' experience in the paper business. He organized and conducted the Howard Smith Paper Mills of Montreal, and is known as one of the most successful business executives in Canada.

It is his intention to make the new distributing company the most comprehensive operating in Canada, and to see that the Generael Film product reaches every section of the tremendous territory offered by the Dominion of Canada with its constantly increasing market for high-class motion pictures.

Goldwyn to Establish Exchanges

Will Distribute Its Own Product by Its Own Organization in United States.

GOLDWYN Pictures Corporation will own and operate its own distributing organization in all of the principal distribution zones of America. This announcement by Samuel Goldfish definitely ends the speculation that has been going on in film circles since the Goldwyn Corporation was organized last December.

Plans are well under way for the opening of offices in the various cities into which distribution has been concentrated, and these Goldwyn branches will be ready to deal with exhibitors early in June. Meanwhile, all negotiations and correspondence are being handled directly by the New York offices of the company.

McCLURE PICTURES MOVES OFFICE.

McClure Pictures, now releasing Seven Deadly Sins, the series of seven five-reel features, has moved its office from the McClure Building, 20th street and Fourth avenue, to the sixteenth floor of the Berkeley Building at 25 West 44th street.

The McClure series department of the Triangle Distributing Corporation and the McClure publications also have moved to the new address.

WARNER OLAND IN NEW PATHE SERIAL.

Warner Oland, who played the role of Baron Huroki in the International serial, "Patria," has been engaged by Astra, and is now at work in a new Pathe serial, which is being directed by George B. Seitz. Pearl White is the featured player in this production and her leading man is Earle Fox. Ruby Hoffman is another member of the cast.

Allan Dwan Now at Work in East

New Eastern Triangle Supervising Director Discusses His Plans for Production at Yonkers Studio.

ALLAN DWAN, the new Triangle supervising director in the East, is hard at work at the Yonkers studios of his company. A World man last week found him in his sun parlor over the front entrance of the former Clara Morris mansion, in Riverdale avenue. It was a "location" not conducive to hard work for any one susceptible to spring fever, but apparently Mr. Dwan is immune to this Eastern malady. Plainly he is a worker.

Allan Dwan.

The man who stands to the Triangle in the East in the same relation to that company as does Thomas H. Ince in the West has been a director of motion pictures for seven years. In that time he has worked for seven companies. He began work with the Essanay, from there going to the American, with which company he remained for a long time. Then after a considerable period with the Universal he was engaged by the Famous Players, where he directed among other players many subjects in which Miss Pickford was starred. Then he went to Triangle Fine Arts. He resigned this position to direct Norma Talmadge, and after the completion of "Panthea" was engaged by Goldwyn. Here he directed one subject, in which Maxine Elliott was featured, and at the conclusion of this picture again was engaged by Triangle to supervise its production in the East.

Mr. Dwan was born in Toronto about thirty years ago, being therefore one of the youngest veteran directors. With his parents he removed to Chicago as a child. He was graduated from Notre Dame University as an electrical engineer, and during 1907 taught electrical engineering in that institution. Then he became a scenario writer for Essanay, and two years later became scenario editor for the American. It was not long before he was directing his own company.

While with the Fine Arts Mr. Dwan directed Douglas Fairbanks in "The Habit of Happiness," "The Good Bad Man," "The Half Breed" and "Manhattan Madness." The producer writes his own working scripts, and it is in this division that he capitalizes his long experience as a scenario writer.

Two companies at present are at Yonkers, under the direction of Arthur Rosson and Albert Parker. With Mr. Rosson is his brother, Richard, the two working together, something on the same plan as that employed by the Franklin brothers. With them as leading players are Jack Devereaux and Winifred Allen. With Mr. Parker are Wilfred Lucas, Mrs. De Wolf Hopper and Joseph Kilgore. The latter company is now filming its first subject, the working title of which is "Her Excellency, the Governor." Mr. Dwan describes it as a virile man and woman story, and illustrative of the possibilities in the enlargement of the dramatic field by reason of the extension of the suffrage to woman.

The complement at the Yonkers studio shortly will be increased to six companies, the Eastern division taking over all of the work formerly done at the Fine Arts plant. Aside from those players mentioned but one of prominence is at present slated for transfer to the East—Enid Bennett. Bessie Love will remain with the Ince forces. It is Mr. Dwan's intention to draw on the New York field for his players. It is not his intention to build up large stock companies. He will construct his casts around his principal players. Neither does he have in mind starring any other player.

"We are going to make serious pictures here," said Mr. Dwan; "pictures that pulse with the problems of today. We are going to accentuate the value of ideals in industry and business, to attempt to show how men and women may be honest and highly successful, too. The tendency in business today is toward the idealistic, and we are going to try to do what we can to help it along."

There are several acres in the Yonkers Triangle property, with abundant room for expansion beyond present requirements. Already there is a glass-inclosed studio with a stage capacity of 75 by 100 feet. It is fully equipped with lamps. Downstairs are many dressing rooms adequately fitted for the convenience of players. Another studio, also glass inclosed, larger than the present one, is to be constructed on the Riverdale avenue side of the present building. The north wall of the latter will be knocked out and the two thrown into one. Alongside of the present structure will be built a good-sized open stage. Work also will begin immediately on a laboratory for the development and printing of sample or working prints.

All indications point to a busy season at the Yonkers studios. The accession of six working companies to the Eastern territory will be welcomed by those players who prefer to work in the East. Also it will be a demonstration of the continuing desirability of the New York territory for motion picture producing purposes.

William Humphrey With Ivan

HAVING enjoyed the well-earned rest and rejuvenation which is the portion of those who can afford to dwell in the Paradise of the Pacific (Hawaii) William Humphrey is again "in our midst." The seven successful consecutve years spent as director with one of the largest motion picture companies in the country have made him a host of friends, and it is with more than usual heartiness that he is welcomed back home. He sure looks younger than ever; his eyes have that conquering Napoleonic look, and that not merely because he is known as the best Napoleon on the stage. The Ivan Film Productions, who are continually enlarging their scope of operations, have arranged for Mr. Humphrey's services as director, and judging from the standing of Mr. Humphrey in the profession and the contemplated cost of the productions to be made, they ought to be "The Big Thing."

William Humphrey.

Mr. Humphrey was leading man with Mrs. Langtry, played with Julia Arthur, Julia Marlowe and Keene before the day of moving pictures; his thorough knowledge of film dramatics gives the Ivan people that sanguine feeling that the Humphrey pictures will become a tale of two continents, more talked about than even "A Tale of Two Cities," one of Mr. Humphrey's notable pictures of a few years ago.

EDNA WHISTLER WITH TALMADGE CO.

Miss Edna Whistler, who will be pleasantly remembered as having appeared in support of Julian Eltinge two seasons ago at the Knickerbocker theater, is now a member of Miss Norma Talmadge's film company. She will be seen with Miss Talmadge in the latter's latest picture, "Poppy," which is soon to be released. The story of "Poppy" is that of a South African girl, and the film version is an adaptation of the book by Cynthia Stockley. Before she joined Miss Talmadge's forces under the management of Joseph M. Schenck, Miss Whistler appeared in such productions as "The Nigger," in which William Farnum starred. More recently she was seen in "The Hungry Heart" and "The Social Leper."

FRED RATH APOLLO SCENARIO EDITOR.

Fred Rath, well known as a motion picture writer and journalist, has just been appointed scenario editor of Apollo Pictures, Inc., releasing on Art Dramas program. Mr. Rath has just completed the adaptation of "The Mystic Hour," written by Fletcher Bain, which is to be released in May.

Triangle's New Booking Policy

Plan Devised Offers Inducements to Exhibitors to Use Triangle Productions.

TRIANGLE is about to put into effect a new service which will combine the best features of the program system, together with the advantages that attend open market booking. This is the most radical step that has been taken by any of the large film organizations, and it is expected will do much to clear up the present unsatisfactory conditions obtaining in the motion picture market. R. W. France, general manager of the Triangle Distributing Corporation of New York, has issued the following statement relative to this new distributing plan:

"I have just received a letter from W. W. Hodkinson, president of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, who is at present in Los Angeles, in which he has outlined in detail the new plan which has been adopted in order to afford to our exhibitors a more flexible booking schedule than has ever been offered before under the program system.

"We have realized that the greatest problem confronting the exhibitor for some time past has been whether to use program service or to go into the open market for his features. We have seen this problem growing more acute from day to day.

"While we are firmly convinced as to the soundness of the program method of distribution and thoroughly believe that this method will inevitably survive all others, we nevertheless realize that the present chaotic and unsettled conditions (brought about principally by skyrocket promotion tactics and irresponsible and destructive management) make it necessary for us to inaugurate some modification of the program idea. We have endeavored to formulate a plan which will enable our exhibitors to book productions of the more pretentious type without being forced to relinquish their valuable program contracts. Briefly, our new plan is as follows:

"Beginning on or about the first Sunday in June and continuing thereafter on or about the first of every month we shall issue a special production in place of the regular program release scheduled for that date. These special productions we shall confine to one a month unless we find that conditions call for an increase in this number. In that case we contemplate issuing as many as may be needed to keep Triangle exhibitors where they rightfully belong, at the head of the procession. These special productions can be roughly classed as:

"First—Productions featuring the biggest and best stars obtainable, regardless of cost.

"Second—Unusual productions by such master-directors as Thomas H. Ince, Mack Sennett, Allan Dwan and others.

"Third—Prductions having extraordinary drawing power because of special publicity or advertising, or productions containing exceptional features which make them box office attractions of unusual merit. All of these special features, which will probably be known as Super-Triangles, will contain some or all of the foregoing qualities. They will be super-productions in the truest sense.

"Our exhibitor may avail himself of any one of three options.

"First—He can book the special picture. A schedule of prices is being arranged which will little more than cover our costs.

"Second—In the event of his rejecting the special production the exhibitor may rebook any Triangle subject which he has already shown at a fifty per cent. reduction from the price he originally paid for this subject.

"Third—In case the exhibitor does not care to book the special production or rebook a Triangle program feature he is free to go into the open market. He will be under no rental charge to us for the period on his program which is left open through our release of the special production.

"The purpose of this plan, we are frank to say, is to supply to our exhibitors a type of production which we cannot afford to give them for the moderate sum paid for our regular program service. We will say, however, that we look forward to a time when we will be able to furnish these special productions at program rates, and when that time comes (which will be just as soon as our volume of business is great enough to make it possible) this policy will be put into immediate execution."

IN SOUTHEASTERN TERRITORY.

The A. Luther Chochlete Co. of Roanoke, Va., are interested in purchasing rights of Virginia, North Carolina, Maryland, District of Columbia and West Virginia.

Goldwyn Campaign Successful

Trade Journal Advertising Has Already Been Fruitful—New Methods in Film Promotion.

AN ADVERTISING and promotion campaign that has attracted much attention in the film industry both among exhibitors and manufacturers is that of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. In five months Goldwyn has received, solely as a result of their motion picture trade journal advertising, a few less than twenty thousand letters from exhibitors and distributing factors. These direct replies are only the material manifestation of the wide appeal made by the campaign; the psychological effect cannot be measured.

The Goldwyn executives have applied advertising principles that long ago have been proved practically infallible, and their paper-salesmanship methods are in effect the same as the methods that have been used in creating a national demand for thousands of products. Goldwyn's campaign was inaugurated ten months before it is planned to market the product.

Speaking of the campaign, Samuel Goldfish, president of the Goldwyn Corporation, said:

"Goldwyn set out to build confidence and respect. Its copy has always been positive, never negative. It has steadfastly declined to compare its methods or plans with those of other companies. Aware of the existence of certain evils in the trade, Goldwyn has merely declared that the perpetuation of such evils will find no place in its scheme of things.

"Goldwyn Pictures has no 'publicity department' as that word is known throughout theatrical and picture industries. It supplanted the old-style department with an editorial department, which corresponds, in a way, to that of any large daily newspaper. The editorial department is the very keystone of sales management.

"There has been introduced through all other phases of the campaign a constant element of 'exhibitor appeal.' Exhibitors have been invited regularly to assist the Goldwyn executives in outlining the methods of organization to be employed by the company. The response has been highly satisfactory, as about twenty thousand letters attest."

DIRECTOR IRVING TAKES VACATION.

George Irving, responsible for all the successful film plays from the Frohman Amusement studios, resigned from that organization's staff last week and left immediately for a thirty days' vacation on the Pacific Coast. The trip West was taken in behalf of Mrs. Irving, who has not visited her folks at Los Angeles for ten years. While on the Coast Mr. Irving will study studio conditions and improvements for use with his new association, upon his return to New York early in June.

Mr. Irving, before he decided to seek new fields, was offered positions by various big producing concerns, but decided to consider only such an offer as would permit of his following out the very successful policy he instituted at the Frohman plant, that of making only special features. His new affiliation, which will be announced upon his return, is for a period of two years, and during that time he will make big productions with prominent stars in the casts.

Mr. Irving's work with the Frohman concern has been generally recognized as consistently good, exceptionally successful, and, as Mr. Irving announced before leaving, he has been very happy with that concern, but desired a larger field.

M. H. HOFFMAN EXPLAINS.

Numerous expressions of surprise at the sudden resignation of M. H. Hoffman as exchange manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company has caused Mr. Hoffman to write an explanation of his action to the Moving Picture World. He says that his resignation resulted from a difference of opinion on a matter of policy between himself and Mr. Laemmle, president of the company, but that their parting was of the most friendly nature and that he has the best wishes of Mr. Laemmle in any undertaking he may attempt. Mr. Hoffman has not decided what he will do, but whatever it is it will be on his own hook. In the mean time his address will be the Universal, 1600 Broadway, New York.

"THE DEEMSTER" AT BROADWAY THEATER.

Hall Caine's "The Deemster," converted into a massive photoplay from the distinguished author's famous book of the same title, will be the attraction at the Broadway theater beginning Sunday, April 15. A special orchestration, together with appropriate effects, will be introduced at the Broadway theater to lend atmosphere and charm to the new production.

Richardson Lets Out a Link

Takes in Knoxville, Cincinnati, Louisville, Evansville, Nashville, Birmingham and Montgomery and the Trip Assumes the Nature of an Endurance Test

At Knoxville.

LOCAL union, Knoxville, Tenn., received the editor kindly, treated him with every consideration, did wonders in getting both managers and operators out, and sped him on his way with hearty hand shakes and words of good cheer.

At the depot we were met by a reception committee, consisting of Robert R. Field, chairman; George W. Lane, Jr., A. L. Worsham and Maynard Baird, whose kindly intended plans for entertainment were promptly sidestepped in favor of much needed sleep and rest. In the evening, however, three of the theaters were inspected. The entrance to such operating rooms as visited have striking resemblance to a very poorly constructed corkscrew, but, once reached, the rooms are of ample size.

The Queen theater, G. H. Shovey, manager, presents decidedly novel features. The screen is at the front (street) end, which ordinarily is highly objectionable. In this case, however, while I would not consider it as desirable, still it is not bad. The house seats 844, is long, quite narrow, and has a balcony which extends clear down front on each side, in the form of a narrow passage which leads back to the balcony proper, and is the entrance thereto. Under this, and at its edge, is a row of supporting pillars which extend clear back to the rear of the house, and these pillars are ornamentally carved, or cut, and between them and the side walls is a space about four feet wide, which forms the aisle, connecting directly with the entrance doors. This prevents those entering from being visible to the audience until they are well into the theater, and serves to minimize the evils of the screen-at-the-front house. It is, however, only applicable to a narrow house which requires no center aisle. The picture was of proper size, the light quite satisfactory as to brilliance, and well, though not perfectly, handled.

The operating room is reached by devious paths leading to the roof, over it and down again. The room is ample in size, and has dead black walls—good! Maynard Baird and George W. Lane are the operators. The show is run to schedule, and the schedule is fixed, regardless of the length of time required to properly project the reels of the various shows, which is decidedly bad. One six-reel show might require, say, 108 minutes, and the very next one only 90, in order to get the best possible result. Ordinarily there is not that amount of variation, but at times there is; also. it may be even greater than that. The method of ventilation of the operating room provides plenty of air, but should be changed pronto, because the air is sucked down through the room into the auditorium, and that is a decidedly dangerous condition.

At the Rex theater, C. D. Haug, manager, the operating room is reached as follows: Up one flight and turn right, then left twice, then up another flight; turn right and walk maybe 25 feet in the green glare of a G. E. rectifier tube. Down one flight, turn right twice; down another flight, through a short passage, and—there you are. Very simple. Very simple, indeed. The notes concerning this room have been lost, but, as I remember it, the walls were light in color and there were incandescents burning. The Majestic, Lloyd Wayland, operator, has two Power's six A machines and a G. E. rectifier. At midnight a Dutch lunch was served in the Central Labor Union Hall, and was enjoyed by all the operators and most of the managers of Knoxville, who afterward listened attentively to my sermon on projection, and pronounced it good. My compliments to the Knoxville men. They are heading in the right direction.

Cincinnati, Ohio.

From Lexington to Cincinnati, Ohio, the Queen & Crescent train amply proved its thorough mastery in the art of standing still, and we arrived one hour late. The telegraph company had balled things up real nice by making the word "leave" over into "arrive," so that I was presumed to have arrived at 7:45, whereas I really left Lexington at that hour. But the reception committee was on the job at the depot, just the same, in the persons of Charles Weigel, manager Alhambra theater, chairman entertainment committee, representing the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and Associated Film Exchanges of Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce; A. G. Hetesheimer, manager Orpheum theater; L. W. Greenstein, Standard Film Service; A. L. Emmert, representing his father, F. L. Emmert, president Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, who was confined to his home by illness; J. A. Ackerman, Glenvoy theater; Walter Harris, who shares with Mr. Weigel the management of the Alhambra theater, and H. Serkowich, managing secretary Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

What Cincinnati Pinned on Richardson.

Each of the committee wore a red button with a ribbon streamer labeled with the legend, "Cincinnati Welcomes Richardson," which somehow gave me the idea I was in the hands of friends. At the Gibson House more button wearers appeared, and really the editor began to feel quite chesty, for Cincinnati is no country village, you know, and to be thus received in a real metropolis was encouraging, for I knew the welcome was for what I represented as much, or more, than it was for me personally.

A short five years ago the idea of an exhibitors' league or film exchange organization bothering itself to welcome an exponent of better projection would have been considered as utterly absurd, therefore, I repeat, my reception was both fully and distinctly encouraging. It helped to put heart in me to face the long, long grind of thousands of miles still ahead, and let me say right now that the league and associated exchanges of Cincinnati did not confine their efforts merely to a reception, but did everything possible to make every moment of my stay in the city pleasant; to make the guest feel that his presence was not to them a burden, but a pleasure. I shall long remember the Cincinnati exhibitors and exchange men, and shall prize their friendship as among my most valued possessions.

Lack of time prevented my inspecting more than two theaters—the Orpheum and Lubin—and the latter but very briefly. The Orpheum, managed by A. G. Hettesheimer, a live, progressive manager, who took the house over as a losing proposition, but has placed it on a paying basis, is a two-balcony theater seating 2,160, with an airdome on the roof seating 960. The plant is a very complete one. There is a Wurlitzer, Hope-Jones unit, under the stage, so located that the music enters the auditorium through lattice stage front, at the point the orchesra would occupy, if there were one. There is a vacuum cleaning system, automatic fire pumps and sprinkler system. The air, before entering the theater, is thoroughly washed by water, and is heated in winter and cooled in summer by the Powers system of automatic control, which maintains the temperature within a variation of 3 degrees. Power for projection is had from an A. C. supply, through a Hertner transverter, which is supplying satisfactory service. There is, however, an auxiliary 40-horsepower motor, pulling a 150-ampere capacity generator, so that, in case of trouble with the transverter, merely by throwing over a switch the projection current is supplied by the big motor and generator. There are two passenger elevators in front to carry patrons to the balcony and the airdome on the roof; also a freight elevator in the rear. I suggested certain operating room and auditorium lighting changes, which Mr. Hettesheimer assured me would be made. Mr. Hettesheimer impresses one as a man who is competent and capable. He understands his job and attends to it and its details.

The Lubin is a downtown theater, and is one of a rather queer combination. On Fifth street there are four theaters, the fronts of which adjoin each other, except that between two of them is a rather narrow store. One is the Colonial and one the Avenue, one the Lubin and the other the Alhambra. I glanced into the auditorium of the Lubin theater just long enough to discover the fact that there was altogether too much light on the piano and on the clock face, but that Brother H. E. Harbaugh, chief operator, was delivering the goods on the screen in the shape of evenly distributed bright, white light and a very excellent definition. The operating room is of fair size, but the walls are too light in color, and there is altogether too much light therein. The machines are Power 6A; the rewinder is motor driven and is geared down fairly well. Friend Harbaugh looks like a man of ideas and brains; also, I believe he is. D. P. Smedley is assistant operator. Messrs. Harbaugh and Smedley have invented what is known as the Har-Dan film protector, which consists of a magnet mounted on the lamphouse cone and controlling a dowser. This magnet is controlled by means of a switch, which in turn is operated by a rocker arm on the end of which is a roller riding on film just below the lower sprocket.

I watched this device operate, and it certainly is a very simple affair, which, so far as I am able to see, cannot fail to deliver the goods in the matter of shutting off the light and stopping the projector should the film break; also, it performs these offices instantly. It is one of the simplest contrivances of the kind I have as yet examined, and I see no reason why it should not have the commendation and approval of this department. It is designed to prevent any danger from fire, should the film break at the intermittent sprocket and stop over the aperture. The Lubin is managed by Joseph Hennegan.

In the evening the Associated Exchanges and Exhibitors' League gave a banquet in the editor's honor at the Cuvier Press Club, at which there were present the following exhibitors and exchange men, plus ten or fifteen operators, who most modestly have requested that their names be withheld:

Right here comes something deserving of more than ordinary censure. When planning this tour I wrote the operators' union in Cincinnati, asking them to take care of the matter of my visit to the city, to which I received a reply that they could not do so because "the Moving Picture World did not bear the union label." Not by reason of the stand taken by the Cincinnati operators' union, but because I had long wanted it on, and the paper had always been entitled to it, the union label was put on, and this was done in ample time to have allowed the Cincinnati operators' union to get busy and take care of the matter of my visit to that city, if they wanted to. At the very least, they could have shown ordinary courtesy and have accepted the invitation of the Cincinnati Exhibitors' League and Associated Exchanges to be their guests for the evening, or at least have been gentlemanly enough to have replied to the invitation. Nothing of this kind took place, however, and I was told by members of the operators' union that the word was actually passed around that the members were to remain away, and some individual members are said to have remarked that any one attending would be fined. Glorious! Imagine the "progressiveness" (?) of an operators' organization which proposes to punish any of its members who have the petrified nerve to attend a lecture on projection and try to learn something about the technical end of their business!

The two-hour talk I gave the exhibitors, operators and exchange men was very well received, indeed, and after the lecture some very kind things were said to me by both exhibitors, operators and exchange men.

I hope some time in the future to have the pleasure of visiting Cincinnati again. I also hope that the Cincinnati operators' union will mend their ways and never, never, never again pull off such an utterly ridiculous and absurd stunt as they did on this occasion.

Louisville, Ky.

At Louisville, Ky., I was, much to my regret, prevented from visiting many theaters by utter exhaustion, coupled with an annoying headache brought about, I suppose, by exertion and loss of sleep. I found that no arrangements had been made for my coming beyond the securing of the use of the Orpheum theater, by courtesy of Judge Kinney, its owner; this arrangement having been made by the Central Film Service which, however, had apparently not followed the action by any vigorous effort to get out an attendance. In fact, such exhibitors as I saw disclaimed any knowledge of the affair, and the operators seemed to be but little better posted. Merely by chance I dropped in at the Alamo and met its manager, who informed me that he was secretary of the Exhibitors' League. He agreed to notify the exhibitors, and presumably did so, as there were several of their number present.

In the course of the evening I visited three houses, and through a partial misunderstanding landed on the operators thereof pretty heavily. Being later told that my information as to the reason that the union did not take the matter of my visit up was not based on what I had been repeatedly told it was, but entirely on poor financial condition, coupled with the mistaken idea that they would have to pay my hotel and railway expenses, I promptly did what any gentleman must do when he finds himself in error, namely, apologized both to the individuals and the organization.

I was particularly pleased to learn that I was in error in this matter, because, from the glance I had at three sources, I am led to believe that Louisville has some corking good men, who know their business and can and do deliver the goods on the screen. The three operating rooms I saw were fairly ample in dimensions, fairly well located, and, except in one case, of ample size. But there were several other points open to severe criticism. However, the Louisville screen result, as exemplified by the three screens I saw, is very much above the average, but, in all cases but one, was sadly injured by the auditorium lighting. I was told the sidelights were required by law, but in one house the manager has reduced their nuisance to a negligible quantity by covering them with such dense shades they do very little harm. If this can be done in one house, why not in all?

At midnight a small gathering listened to me for two hours, but, although I did my best, my physical condition prevented any possibility of doing full justice to the subject under discussion.

Evansville, Ind.

Crawling out of a comfortable bed at the unholy hour of 6 a. m., I clambered aboard an L. & N. train, and rolled southward 114 miles to Owensboro, where George A. Bleich, President George A. Bleich Amusement Company, holds forth. Friend Bleich had insisted that I stop off in Owensboro and take lunch with him, investigate the chronometer balance and cylinder escapement of his theaters, and then proceed by boat on the Ohio River, which at the time closely resembled a young Atlantic Ocean, being in flood and out of its banks.

The George A. Bleich Amusement Company, Owensboro, owns the Empress, Queen and Grand theaters. Brother Bleich is a live wire, and the real goods in the matter of theater management. The Empress theater is his particular pet, and, lemme tell you, it is quite some considerable pet. Although the house was built five years ago, it would do no discredit to the Great White Way of Gotham. The auditorium lighting is not bad, though susceptible of considerable improvement, as pointed out to neighbor Bleich. The operating room is of fair size, well ventilated, has up-to-date machinery, is clean and well equipped, but is, as usual, flooded with light. I don't seem to have made note of the operator's name, but just a few questions discovered the fact that he stands in sad need of study as regards the technical end of the projection of pictures.

Brother S. C. Ruchmeier, chairman of the entertainment committee, Evansville Local Union No. 367, had come over to Owensboro to meet and escort the editor into Indiana with due pomp and ceremony.

Evansville Local Union No. 367 is a decidedly progressive organization. It had written asking us to visit Evansville, and, having secured the date, set about vigorously making preparations to get the greatest possible amount of good out of the affair. H. E. Shaw, manager Central Film Service Company, met us at the train with his gasoline cart, and bubbled us over the city for two hours. During the evening we inspected several of the theaters, and the vocational department of the Evansville high school, where the members of Local Union No. 367, or a goodly number of them, are taking a course in mechanics, learning to make practical repairs on their equipment. It is the intention of the men of Local 367 to follow this up by a course in applied electricity, and to also take a course in elementary optics, which will give them a good grounding in the action of light through lenses. This action on the part of the members of No. 367 cannot be too highly commended, and Brother S. C. Ruschmeier must be given credit for having inaugurated the plan. It is a public school proposition, and entirely free. Local Union No. 367 has an apprenticeship system which is worthy of study and emulation by other unions. The local requires the apprentice to serve a term of three years, and he must be 21 years of age before he can complete the course.

The union will not accept an apprentice who is less than 17 years of age. The apprentice pays 25 cents a month dues, which sum is set aside in a separate fund, though I did not learn how this fund is applied. The apprentices hold separate meetings of their own, and are given practical and theoretical instruction by members of the local. An apprentice may be used temporarily as an operator, provided he has had sufficient experience, if the union is short of men, but he must give up the position and return as a helper as soon as a competent operator can be had. At the end of three years the apprentice is graduated, becomes a member of the local and is given a card. All apprentices must attend the school sessions of their union.

During the evening several theaters were inspected. As a general proposition the auditorium lighting of the theaters, while susceptible of improvement, is not, except in a few instances, very bad from the projectional point of view. The operating rooms will compare favorably with those of other cities, but in several instances they are much too small; also, some of their ceilings are too low. At the Princess, A. J. Merrill, manager; E. S. Musgrave, operator, I found a good operating room, with black walls; Simplex machines are used; the light is white and brilliant; the definition of the picture is good, and the ports are of goodly size. Brother Musgrave is a man of mature years, and a progressive operator, who understands his business at least reasonably well. He is the oldest operator in town. In his little office, adjoining the operating room, I found the handbooks and a set of the Hawkins works.

Messrs: Hilman and Wallenberger manage the Alhambra theater, of which P. F. Hallen is operator. This theater is the first I have seen in many moons where the operating room has only a single machine—a Simplex. The walls are light in color, and a big incandescent lamp was blazing away full blast right over the operator's head. Current is taken through a Wagner rotary converter. Mr. Hallen is the only non-union operator in town. I would respectfully suggest to him that he is pursuing an unwise course in remaining outside the organiaztion of his fellow workmen. At the Strand, R. R. Russell, manager; Earl DeWitt, operator, a Westinghouse motor generator set supplies current to two Simplex machines. This operating room is located on the ground floor, practically central with the screen, and is peculiar in that it has a basement, in which the motor generator set and rewinder are located. The walls are black, and the room is ventilated by a fan.

The Liberty theater, Schone and Kluthe, managers; S. C. Ruschmeier, operator, H. O'Brien, assistant, has a large operating room, with good ports and white walls. Fairbanks Morse generator set supplies the current. The wiring of the projectors is very bad, but neighbor Ruschmeier has just taken charge and intends to rewire them and darken the operating room walls. In the auditorium the exit lights are bad, as is also the piano light.

Harry Kornblum manages the Criterion theater, George Gallman and Roy Summers, operators. The picture is small, but plenty large enough. Its size is a distinct commendation. The room is small, has black walls and good ports, and a G. E. motor generator set supplies 40 amperes of current to two Simplex projectors.

Local Union No. 367 had arranged to hold a banquet in honor of the editor at the new Vendome Hotel, which is Evansville's swagger hostelry. An elaborate menu had been prepared, in which I observe such things as "Strand olivers," "New Orpheum potatoes," et cetera. S. C. Ruschmeier covered himself with glory as toastmaster, and be it said to the everlasting credit of Evansville that every manager, operator, helper and exchange man in the city was present, as also were E. C. Kerth, City Building Inspector: E. C. Graham, Director of Vocational Education, Evansville high schools, and other local men of note, whose names I am sorry to say I did not get.

Oh, yes, and I almost forgot: George A. Bleich, Owensboro, Ky., and some other out-of-town theater men were there. And it was at this gathering I got the surprise of my young and unsophisticated life, because, whereas this was an affair given by Local Union No. 367, the toastmaster being a member of the union, yet directly through his initiative an earnest attempt was made to bring about an organization of the exhibitors. Moreover, it is believed that the result sought will be accomplished. Another surprise came when one of the exhibitors openly stated, in course of his remarks, that he believed the operators of Evansville were underpaid, and suggested to the other managers present that it would be wise for them to "loosen up," which remark brought forth thunderous applause from the operators present, also the managers contributed a good, hearty laugh.

The affair was a pronounced success. The editor finished his lecture at twenty minutes to four o'clock a. m., tired, but happy, because who could help feeling that way after such a warm hearted, royal reception?

Nashville, Tenn.

Nashville is one of the famed cities of Dixieland. Ten years ago it droned away a sleepy existence among the sunny Tennessee hills. Today it is a thoroughly wide-awake Southern metropolis, and, incidentally, the highest priced of any I have thus far visited. The motion picture industry is represented by about, if I rightly remember, fifteen theaters, only two of which I was able to visit, and these but briefly. The operators' union has been engaged in a fight with the theaters owned and controlled by Tony Sudekum, and for a long time the battle has waxed pretty fierce. The men are progressive. They are willing and anxious to learn. They are not unreasonable in their demands, and in my opinion Mr. Sudekum is simply standing in his own light and working against his own true interests in seeking to defeat the men. This is said in all kindness.

I said the union is not unreasonable, and this is proved by the fact that it asked the non-union men, who naturally are considered as their enemy, to hear my lectufe, and thus reap equal benefit with themselves. Surely this is broad minded enough for any one. Several of them came, too, and were treated with every courtesy. And if you win the fight, Neighbor Sudekum, have you really gained anything? True, you will have proved your ability as a fighter, but is there, after all, so much glory in that? You will have whipped a handful of working men, who, even then, are not likely to stay whipped very long. But you will have discouraged advancement in the application of brains to projection, and will be, in the long run, actually the loser, so far as finances be concerned, because, while you will have reduced the wage expense of the operating room, you will have made the projection of your pictures in every other way more costly and less efficient by reason of the fact that the cheap operator is, like the cheap pair of shoes, a rather poor article, and the scale demanded by the Nashville men most emphatically is neither unreasonable nor excessive, nor more than is necessary to induce competency in the operating rooms of a city the size of Nashville.

It has remained for Nashville to supply what is the star piece of "legal" foolishness, as evidenced by the following letter received by all Nashville operators:

CITY OF NASHVILLE.
Commission Government,
Nashville, Tennessee.

December 9th, 1916.

Dear Sir: Your license as an operator of moving picture machines expires on December 31st, 1916. Renewal of your license is necessary if you desire to continue in the business, and under the new law it is encumbent that you obtain and file a letter of recommendation from your employer with this office before receiving a renewal of license.

Yours truly,

(Signed.) JAS. H. YEAMAN,
Supervisor of Buildings.

This is, I believe, the most outrageous law which has up to date come under my notice. Why, according to this letter, if a man were out of a job, having no employer, he could not get a license, and, as he could not get a job without a license, he would automatically be put out of business. Fine! Does the city of Nashville really believe that it can put over a stunt like that, and make the employer absolute czar to the extent of saying whether an individual shall or shall not receive a license, and thus be permitted to earn his daily bread at his chosen avocation in life?

Why, under this "law" (?) the employe would be absolutely at the mercy of his employer, who at any license renewal period could refuse a "recommendation" and thus prevent the employe from ever again operating a moving picture machine in the city of Nashville. Nonsense! It would be laughable, were it not so utterly absurd.

At the Knickerbocker theater, W. H. Waussman, manager, I found Brothers F. H. Irwin and W. J. Craus in a fair-sized operating room, having black walls and good ports, but no ventilation to speak of when the big typhoon house ventilation fan is not in operation. An adjoining closet contains toilet and basin with running water. A. G. E. mercury arc rectifier, with unprotected bulb, flooded the room with light —bad, very bad. The Auditorium lighting was fair, but the exit lights near the screen are light colored, whereas they should be very dark red; also the side lights are objectionable, although fairly well shaded. Two Baird machines are in use.

At the Strand, I found Fred Carter, secretary Local Union No. 626, just preparing to close the show. He has one Motiograph and one Power's 6A. The room is small, but has black walls and good ventilation. The auditorium lighting is, however, from the projection point of view, simply awful. The house is rather narrow, and right beside the screen are two light-colored exit signs, a clock with bright white light, and an advertising announcement board with, at the time, five or six lines of letters in white lights. What all this does to the eyes of the audience it is a shame to tell, besides detracting immensely from the beauty of the picture. At 11:30 every union operator in Nashville, and a number of non-union ones, too, and several managers gathered to hear the lecture. Germain Quinn, international organizer, presided, and for two hours careful attention was given to the things I had to lay before them. Clifford P. Cochran, City Electrical Inspector, was present. After the lecture Brother Quinn, the officers and members of the union and the city official all expressed warm approval of our efforts. Following the lecture, a photo was taken and a surprise sprung in the shape of a lunch. I had expected nothing of the sort, as a union engaged in battle needs every penny of its resources for more important uses.

In closing, let me say that Nashville was the second union in which I found a man who could and did correctly answer most of the few technical questions I propounded. Fred Carter, secretary Local Union No. 626, was the man.

The Pittsburgh of the South.

Oh, joy. It was 206 miles south from Nashville to Birmingham, Ala., known as the Pittsburgh of the South. The city lies on beds of coal, and is surrounded by mountains of iron ore, the former being used to convert the latter into materials for battle ships, pants buttons, needles and curling irons. The operators' union had turned us down, and we would get a sadly needed day of rest—how strange and sadly sweet the sound of that word—hence the opening words. In anticipation of the aforesaid day of rest we put in every moment of time on the train writing, and that Pullman seat table looked like the desk of a busy captain of industry. Ah, ha; finished, we cried, and left the train in Birmingham to be—grabbed by a reception committee consisting of J. H. Coleman, secretary Strand Amusement Company; W. O. Harding, business agent Local Union No. 236, J. A.; C. B. Vining, president Stage Hands' Local Union No. 78, and C. D. Cooper and J. C. Harper, members of No. 236. We were hustled into a choo-choo cart, introduced to a hotel, and then we must see the city, especially the steel mills, a mere trifle of seven or ten miles or so away, and right then and there our day of rest dream exploded with a bang. It was a genuine surprise party, all right, all right, and, rest or no rest, I was heartily glad to see the boys.

Operating conditions in Birmingham are most decidedly not good, the rooms I visited are fair to large in size, and some of the walls are black and some are white, but in them all altogether too much light. On one room the ceiling was so low this scribe could not stand upright. and in another very large room (fully fifteen feet square), the ceilings at the front sloped down until the operator could only see the screen by either standing on his knees or sitting on a low chair—very bad for the pictures on the screen. Such projection machinery as I saw was pretty old, and one house had dinky little old Power's lamphouses and lamp, and six mechanisms mounted on a well-worn wooden table—a fairly good outfit about six years ago. All the other machines except two were Power's 6A.

I visited the Franklin theater, D. S. McEachern, manager, in a suburb called Ensley, where the steel mills are, but did not inspect it. I also visited the following houses in Birmingham proper: The Odeon, M. Wise, manager; Leo Nation and W. A. Moor, operators. Operative room fair size, but ceiling is low and conduit is on the floor, which latter is very bad and entirely needless; Power's 6 lamphouses and wooden machine stand; lots of daylight in room at matinees—very bad. No ventilation except windows—worse than bad. Nation only toasts his head in the hot air, but Moor, being tall, cannot stand erect; current 110 volts D 6 through rheostat located outside the room—good. Auditorium lighting fair, except far too much light on clock near screen, and exit lights near screen too brilliant.

The Alcazar, B. Whan, manager; C. E. Cooper and Carl Jones, operators, has two Simplex-machines. Operating room large; high ceiling; too much light. Light at the piano and bright exit lights near screen—bad. Screen illumination brilliant, using 35-40 amperes.

The Strand, T. S. Abernathy, president Strand Theater Company, manager, has no white light near screen—good. J. C. Harper, chief operator, and J. F. Mankin, assistant. Have charge of a large room with high ceiling, but, except around the ports, the walls are white, and there is lots of light—bad.

At the Triangle, L. B. Leftwich, manager, I found John Amberson, chief operator, and W. D. Harding, assistant, in charge of a fifteen-foot square room, with light walls and lots of light. The ceiling at the front of the room is very low, and, in consequence, the ports badly located. The Auditorium lighting is good; two Power's 6A projectors.

All this was viewed somewhat hastily, and only the readily noticeable good and bad points noted. Summed up, Birmingham's operating rooms as a whole need decidedly less light, better ventilation and more up-to-date machinery.

The lecture at the Strand theater was followed by a lunch, which every one said made a fitting ending for a most profitable evening. Everything considered, the attendance at the lecture was very good. Birmingham is scattered all over the surrounding landscape, and little operators who stay out late are apt to have to walk a trifle of ten miles or so to their homes.

Montgomery, Ala.

It has remained for Montgomery, Ala., to supply the surprise of my young and unsophisticated life. By and large, thus far, viewed broadly, projection and operating conditions in the South have not been of the best. There have, of course, been notable exceptions, but until I struck Montgomery I found no theater in which there was practically nothing deserving of criticism, either in the operating room practice or auditorium lighting.

I was invited to visit Montgomery by R. B. Wilby, manager Strand Amusement Company, Montgomery, which gentleman, I want to say right here, very completely fulfills my idea of a thoroughly competent moving picture theater manager. I had dinner with Mr. Wilby, and we talked over matters pertaining to the projection of pictures for nearly two hours. I hadn't gotten very far before I came to an understanding of the fact that I was speaking to a student manager—a man who made a study of the moving picture theater from the screen to the front of the sidewalk. My compliments to Mr. Wilby. I wish we had more like him. If we had, the moving picture industry would almost immediately take that high plane of excellence and efficiency and esteem in the minds of the public which it ought of right to occupy.

R. B. Wilby.

During the afternoon, without the knowledge of either operator or house manager, neither of whom even knew that I was in the city, I visited the Strand. The time of my visit was 12:50 p. m., at which period there are but few people in the house, and we might expect carelessness on the part of the operator, if there would be carelessness at any time. I sank into a seat with a sigh of relief, for on the screen was a beautiful, evenly and brilliantly lighted picture, projected at proper speed; also the lighting of the auditorium, from the projectional point of view, was perfect. There was absolutely no white light in the front end of the auditorium, and only two very dark red exit lights. The auditorium itself was tastily decorated, and the screen was bordered in black; also the picture was of correct size.

Mounting to the operating room, I found it to be of goodly size and well ventilated. The lights were out; also the ports were of ample dimensions and rightly located. The room was of galvanized iron, however, and the interior walls were unpainted, this latter being absolutely the only criticism I have to offer on the entire plant. Mr. William Doster is the house manager, C. B. Willis, chief operator, and Harris Wardell, assistant operator. Two Power's machines take current through a motor generator set, consisting of a motor belted to a generator. Mr. Willis admits that this is not the best proposition from the economic point of view, but current is had in Montgomery City (some of you managers prepare for heavy shock) at 1½ cents per kilowatt hour, so that efficiency or lack of efficiency in the motor generator set would not make enough difference to justify the installation of a modern set.

At the Colonial, I. Butt, house manager, the auditorium lighting could not, in my judgment, be improved upon. The orchestra lights are hidden by a screen, and there is no objectionable white light near the picture. The setting for the screen is very pretty, but runs a little too much to light colors, though, due to sane auditorium lighting, this is not particularly objectionable. The speed of projection was correct, the picture was of proper size, the light was brilliant and well handled, and the front row of seats an ample distance from the screen. R. Nussbaum is chief operator; Jerome Cone, assistant.

The room is of goodly size, but the walls were light colored and there was too much light. This, however, was not so objectionable as it would be in ordinary cases, because of the brilliancy of the picture and the well located observation ports of even more than ample dimension. Baird projectors are used, and Mr. Nussbaum, chief operator, has made two or three improvements, one of which I would recommend to the attention of the Baird Company, viz.: He has made and installed an endless belt for the take-up. The joined belt caused considerable trouble, and I myself believe the endless belt is a better proposition. He has also put on an eye protector and a very clever tension for the upper magazine reel spindle. Adjoining the operating room is a workroom of ample size, in which is located a Westinghouse motor generator set. The room also contains a substantial workbench and an excellent equipment of tools.

It is with very genuine pleasure I pay the foregoing tribute to the men of Montgomery. They cannot be accused of having "slicked up" on account of Richardson's coming, because they did not know that I was in the city. It is a relief, too, for once, at least, to have nothing but good words to say. I have found several cities in which the conditions were not bad, but Montgomery is in a class all by itself, and I believe Mr. Wilby, general manager of the Strand Amusement Company, deserves the major share of credit for this condition.

Scores Scenario Schools

Edison Studio Manager L. W. McChesney Says 99 Per Cent. Are Fakes—Promises to Get After Them.

A CAMPAIGN on the part of the large motion picture producing concerns, to be directed against the scores of fake scenario writing schools that are operating throughout the country, and that are making victims of thousands of people of little means, is advocated by L. W. McChesney, manager of the studios of Thomas A. Edison, Inc., who asserts that the concern with which he is connected will be glad to take a prominent part in any movement of this kind that may be organized. Unless such a campaign is set under way, an active effort to secure the conviction of some of these swindlers who are mulcting large numbers of poor and comparatively ignorant people out of their hard earned savings is going to be made directly by the Edison company through the United States Post Office Department.

"Some shameful instances of the manner in which these fake organizations operate recently have come to my attention," said Mr. McChesney, "and we are resolved to take some action to discourage this plain form of swindling. We receive a constantly increasing number of letters from people who state that they are the graduates of such and such correspondence courses and, because of this, consider themselves proficient script writers. I can say without hesitation that 100 per cent. of the matter received from such people is absolutely worthless, which shows just how little benefit they derive from the alleged "courses" in scenario writing schools. Ninety-nine per cent. of these institutions were formed solely for the purpose of getting the money of people who believe, or who are persuaded to believe, that they can make fortunes writing scenarios.

"I would suggest that all other large producing companies assist, as far as possible, in this movement to bring to an end this vicious and widespread form of swindling. The best interests of the industry demand that abuses of this kind be stamped out, and we, for one, always will be ready to cooperate with others or lend our individual strength to abolishing the evils that are revealed from time to time in the business in which we are engaged."

H. H. Van Loan Leaves Universal

HERBERT H. VAN LOAN, for the past two and a half years publicity manager for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has resigned from that organization to become identified with the staff of the Motion Picture Magazine as feature writer. The announcement of Van Loan's resignation comes as no surprise to his wide circle of friends in the film and newspaper game, as it has been known for some time that various magazines have been seeking his services. His departure from the Universal's publicity desk will be in the nature of a distinct loss to that concern, as Van, as he is popularly known, long has had the reputation of being one of Broadway's most proficient press agents.

H. H. Van Loan.

Van Loan made his film debut with the Universal company, and during the two and a half years that he has held down the berth of publicity manager has been responsible for some of the biggest "stories" of the industry. Before entering the film world he had wide experience as a newspaper man. Some of the special publicity "stunts" which he promoted and engineered were the Universal's famous beauty contest, the handsome man contest, and the Universal film trophy automobile contest. Van Loan handled all of the Universal publicity for the screen debut of Anna Pavlowa in the photoplay, "The Dumb Girl of Portici"; also for "Where Are My Children," "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," "Liberty," the serial which he novelized, and other Universal features too numerous to mention.

It was H. H. Van Loan who first introduced semi-fiction publicity stories, which he syndicated to all leading magazines. He has had stories in every film magazine every month, and has managed to grab off many columns of valuable space in the daily and trade papers through the versatility of his pen.

Van Loan's last appearance for Universal was on Easter Sunday night, when, with Violet Mersereau, the Universal star, he led the grand march at the ball of the Motion Picture Employes' Mutual Aid Society at Labor Lyceum, Brooklyn.

In addition to his fiction duties, Mr. Van Loan will handle the publicity for L-KO films and for Hiller & Wilk.

FRED RATH APOLLO SCENARIO EDITOR.

Fred Rath, well known as a motion picture writer and journalist, has just been appointed scenario editor of Apollo Pictures, Inc., releasing on Art Dramas program, according to announcement by Harry Raver, president of the company. Mr. Rath has just completed the adaptation of "The Mystic Hour," written by Agnes Fletcher Bain, which is to be released in May.

The new scenario editor has had a wide experience in motion pictures. He was formerly associate editor of the Motion Picture Mail, before which he ran a signed column of verse and humor in the Brooklyn Eagle. He was also the originator of the Kearney-Rath motion picture syndicate, which was promoted by Harold Ives, Inc.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Campaign Books.

CAMPAIGN books are supposed to be issued with the idea of incerasing the sale of the features of a certain company through enabling the exhibitor to make money with those he takes. Campaign books should be worked on this argument and upon this argument alone. Better a set of mimeographed sheets helpful to the exhibitor than stitched books which look well but which have no real value to the exhibitor. If press stuff is given, it should be the sort of press stuff that will make business for the house. If stunts are suggested they must be the sort of stunts that can be worked with benefit and not to the detriment of the house manager. Sales managers should give more attention to these campaigns and make certain that they are practical and helpful before they are sent out.

For "The Garden of Allah."

The Selig company has prepared a lobby display frame for The Garden of Allah which is to be sold to exhibitors at cost. Just what the cost is is not announced, but if the price is not excessive, it should pay to get the frame well in advance of the showing of the film—perhaps a month in advance—and show it with a "coming" card. This will be a better investment than renting the frame for a day or so. The outfit folds for packing and opens to eight feet wide and five and a half feet high. The pictures are colored and waterproofed. This sort of thing is a real help to the live exhibitor, and after the film has been shown, the frame can be used for other announcements and the pictures sold to some fan, for the story is a popular one and the pictures will be welcomed by some lover of the book for interleaving.

Date the Cover.

J. B. Stine, of the Lyric, Covington, Indiana, sends in a set of programs and this letter:

> Your "Advertising for Exhibitors" department has always been among the most interesting features of this valuable publication, and I wish to hereby acknowledge my indebtedness to your department and the many live wire contributors to same for many suggestions and ideas that I have found valuable.
> While I have taken a great deal out—and put but little back in—I trust this acknowledgment of my indebtedness may to some extent atone for my sin.
> I am enclosing herewith a few copies of my weekly programs which I have only recently began issuing, also a few advertisements clipped from our weekly papers. (Covington is a small city of 2,500 and too small for daily papers.) I will appreciate any suggestions or comments on my efforts that may tend toward the betterment of my advertising—for I can never quite get that idea that my efforts have yet reached perfection.

We are glad to take Mr. Stine's pleasant praise as an excuse, but how about the chaps to whom he is really indebted for the good material he has had? This department is just the middleman. The programs are 3¾ by 6½, two color front and colored borders on the other three pages. Evidently they are stock material, but no imprint is given. The program runs on the middle pages and the back is reserved for house talk, always a good arrangement. For one thing, we would suggest that the date appear on the program cover. The present text is "Entire week's program," but since this seems to be printed weekly, it would be well to make it a more definite proposition and say that it is the "Program for Feb. 19-24," or whatever it may be. The newspaper advertising carries the program for the week. The printer doubtless means well, but his composition is atrocious. Partly this is due to too much copy in the space—two fives—which is small for a full week's layout, but he can do better than a mess of mostly all caps, and he should be talked to about it. A second offering does better, with straight Roman and a little full face, but the space should be dropped a couple of inches and then the compositor should be required to give a better display.

Not Superstitious.

Evidently S. Barrett McCormick is not superstitious for in advertising The Poor Little Rich Girl at the Circle, Indianapolis, he used four thirteens for this striking advertisement. The center is a letter from

Miss Mary Pickford,
At Her Own Studios.
Dear "Little Mary":-
I have seen your every picture, from those days when we knew you only as "Little Mary", when your only claim to fame was the worship of millions of devotees who bowed before your uncrowned throne.
With each cycle of the sun play, I have watched your every triumph and with each new achievement have said, "Here surely is the pinnacle of her art".
Just now the last scene of "A POOR LITTLE RICH GIRL" has faded from the screen. Smiles, tears and laughter have mingled in a strange melody of life. Mellowed with understanding, you have peeped into the heart of the poor little rich girl and with the subtle alchemy of your art, have drawn the dross from life and let the golden stream of love flow out.
There is pride for the tear you drew for the little girl who lived in the golden house and longed for the unknown land of mud pies—each smile, each laugh are jewels embedded in a crown of work well done.
I hope every child and every mother and every father can see you in this play and be swayed by your supreme art.
"Little Mary", in "A POOR LITTLE RICH GIRL", you have bequeathed an idyll to the screen.

That Emanuel Stuff.

It seems funny, that though we passed the tip more than a year ago Jay Emanuel is the only Exhibitor working odds and ends of stock houses. As we explained recently Emanuel just got in another car load of stuff because he had moved on to take charge of the Park and Jefferson, in Philadelphia. Some of it he has started in to use. One folder is a peacock feather in green, purple and gold, tied with a red ribbon, and two others are embossed heads in white on a blue ground. If he bought this stuff for use from the regular houses he would go bankrupt in a month, but he watches his chance and buys up a carload of odds and ends, lots too small for a big concern to bother with and yet plenty enough to put out for a city picture theater. They beat the ready-print covers to a frazzle, and the only requirement is that a carload be purchased at one time, and that you know how to get the stuff. Emanuel's printer tipped him off, and he is habitually using the best stock for his programs and announcements of any theater in America, and is paying less for it. Most of the recent stuff is dance program covers, evidently styles discarded by the makers, and virtually thrown out on that account because there is not enough of a kind to catalogue. It has been so long since we last reproduced the Emanuel program that we are producing it again

Program Week of March 12th, 1917

MONDAY, Triangle presents the distinguished star Douglas Fairbanks, in "THE AMERICANO," his latest success. A play of stirring adventure. Of course Fairbanks is the centre of all activities. You will enjoy it. Other plays of merit.

TUESDAY, Mrs. Vernon Castle, in the 7th episode of "PATRIA." Also Bluebird presents Mary Mac Laren in the 6th act play "THE MYSTERIOUS MRS. M" a story of gripping interest. This play appeared for a whole week at the Rialto Theatre which is quite a criterion. Other plays of merit.

WEDNESDAY, Daniel Frohman presents Louise Huff and Jack Pickford, in the celebrated story "GREAT EXPECTATIONS" from the novel by Charles Dickens. Action and mystery in an unusual degree will be found in this production.

practically the same size as the original. It works well and reads well, but if you follow this style date your days, even if we can't coax Emanuel to. He is a hard headed, flinty hearted cuss in some ways, and we cannot make him date days, durn him. Otherwise he is all right and as a paper buyer he leads the league. To get ball program stock at about the cost of plain white is some stunt to brag about.

Complete.

The Opera House, Leighton, Pa., recently sent out fifteen hundred complimentary tickets with as many form letters to build new business and got the business because the scheme was worked very thoroughly. The greeting runs:

Dear Patron:

Enclosed please find a complimentary ticket which will be accepted as one admission at any performance excepting Thursday and Saturday, in payment for the time spent in reading this letter.

We wish you to know that we are showing a better class of productions; more REAL feature photoplays, than ever before.

This is followed by a seven line paragraph telling about the current bill and winding up with the four line hope that the recipient would see one or more of the unusual attractions. There were but eighteen lines in all, with a broad indent either side; not enough to crowd a two-third size sheet of paper. This is vastly better than a crowded letter too long to be read. Attached to this with a small paper clip was a pass for one and a small four page folder program. The front gave the house title and the times of showing by days, an important matter where the letters were supposed to go to persons not acquainted with the house. The other three pages were given to the program features; not an ornate print, but one that looked clean and neat. It was just black on white paper, but the paper was good stock and the type was well set, with faces proportioned to the size of the page. In all its aspects the job was one to impress favorably any person receiving the letter. Where a prospect is being approached, no pains should be spared to give the best possible effect. This does not mean gaudy colorings and elaborate printings. It does mean that everything should impress the recipient with a sense of the quality of the entertainment offered. Mr. Bayer worked this scheme well from all angles.

Sometimes it pays to make the pass read good for two, as a man is more apt to come with his wife or sweetheart if the pass is double. It largely depends upon the town and the class of persons to be approached, but as a rule the double pass works best, even though the single passes might be expected to bring along some paid business.

That sort of letter counts. The best show is always the cleanest for the clean show, lacking sensationalism must be good in order to entertain. Clean pictures pay best in the long run and the other sort never do pay in the long run.

From Down Below.

This page for Peg O' The Ring is taken from the Herald, Melbourne, Australia, and shows how the film is being advertised at the Antipodes. This is more the English than the American scheme, though lately serials have been advertised in the city papers for the entire territory covered by that paper. The scheme was in use in England long before it was adopted over here and is by no means the only advertising scheme we have adopted from our English cousins. For a flash the use of cuts is better than descriptive matter, for each house will supply readers for local use, following the general advertisement.

Philadelphia Programs.

Philadelphia Exhibitors are slow to send in their printed matter and Steve Talbot, who used to keep us supplied, has passed on, but Sydney F. Marcus sends in some, and others come from different sources. Mr. Marcus specializes in printing programs and supplies above twenty-five houses, including the Auditorium, Coatesville, which we have mentioned often. He does not get out a single ready-print sheet, but gives each house the sort of job it asks for, which is slightly more expensive, but vastly better. The Palace, one of the Stanley Company's houses, uses a card about 3¼ by 5½ inches, printed in two colors. They have a good catchline in "Where nothing but the best is good enough." As they use but one attraction a week, the card gives plenty of room for the announcement. A similar card, for the Alhambra, using two features, is a trifle crowded. Here red ink is trusted to bring up the titles, and it does the work to a reasonable degree, but a smaller type, printed in black and boxed in with the red, would probably be found better, since then the title would get the black and the red would give emphasis. The Alhambra, being a broken week, should carry dated days. A good point in this program is the telephone number, the line reading:

Phone Walnut 21-61 for any other information.

Try it and you will find you can memorize that number more quickly than 2161, for now the line reads "two thousand, one hundred and sixty-one."

The Victoria uses a good inside page layout for a broekn week, but none of the Stanley houses seem to date their days, which is a stupid omission. There is a date above, but it will not quickly hook up to the program sections, and it should be the aim of the copy writer to get the date connected to the film, each particular film, and not merely a "week of."

The Great Northern uses a very neat program on blue-gray paper, done in black. It runs three changes to the week, setting the inside pages as one and saving what otherwise would be the marginal space. The Lafayette has a small six page folder, the three page side running four by six inches. Here the date is on one side of the sheet and days on the other. Holding down to small type gives a good display for the titles and yet leaves room for discriptive matter. The back pages are used for underline. The Belmont uses the same paper as the Great Northern, but a different drawn design. Both of them are good, but we do not like the two tall pillars in the Great Northern design. It would be better to remove these and to add a floor line at the bottom of the curtains to suggest a perspective. Apparently the railing is some distance to the rear of the curtains, but the perspective is so badly handled that this does not appear. It might be noted that the mass of black, formed by the curtain, brings out the design better than the more conventional lines and scrolls of the Belmont. In the Belmont front there are too many all capital lines. This should be upper and lower case to be easily read.

The Strand starts off its inside pages with "All this week" and you have to turn the page over to find out what week it is. The house announces a garage next door to the theater at the disposal of its patrons. It also tries to get the —est organ without running against another house which has "the largest orchestral organ in the world." This is to be "the greatest Kimball instrument ever placed in a theater" and "the largest of its kind in the country." Next!

The West Allegheny actually dates its days. Even the near underlines are dated in full instead of being announced for "Next Monday" or whatever it may be. It is a little less ornate program than the others, being done on cheap white stock, but it is the most useful.

The Logan also dates days and also uses some house talk and film gossip. This is not a Stanley house, for of these the Stanley alone uses gossip and house talk. The Logan programs make a good showing.

The Lehigh Palace, which is not one of the Marcus string, shows two embossed designs in gold and color. One shows an oriental appearing woman and the other a tiger head. Both are appropriate to The Tiger Woman, which they serve to advertise. The inside page carries an acrostic, some gossip about the star, and the back carries the rest of the week's show and the underline. It is ahead of the usual program in appearance and must have caused a lot of talk. Carl Hess, manager of the house, must have pulled business with such an advertisement.

Jay Emanuel has his usual advertising for the Jefferson and Park, and announces reserved seats for Civilization. This is something too many overlook. Many persons would come to the notable attractions could they be assured of seats, but they are not good enough film fans to be willing to wait in the lobby an hour or so for the next house. Give them reserved seats for the special features and turn them into chance taking film fans, but first you must give them seats. It might be possible to adapt the English system of the "early door" if it is not desired to reserve seats. At the regular houses, if the pit is open at half past seven, an early door to the same seats is opened at seven at a slightly increased price.

Running in Circles.

Walter H. Brooks, of the Auditorium, Coatesville, Pa., to offset slovenly composition he could not correct, looked about for something that would beat poor typesetting and hit upon the circle, which stands up well on the page, particularly when indifferent compositors give no individuality to the other advertisements. In such a case there are the other ads and this one on the page, and you see this one first. We like the idea, but think that it rather cramps the type display. Ralph Ruffner has done rather well with his black frames We give two examples of the circle idea.

And anyone who wants to argue that clean shows do not pay, let them turn to this same Auditorium. This is an enterprise conducted by the Y. M. C. A. in the spirit of decent liberality characterizing that body. They have given no offensive plays, nor have they sought to give only the film sermons. They have given, week in and week out, programs of the sort of plays that clean minded, decent people want to see, and they have built up a large and profitable clientele. They have no enormous week records for the run of sex plays, but they have made more money in the past two years than any house trusting to the ultra sensational, and today they are better placed than ever in the estimation of their patrons. The Auditorium stands today one of the best arguments in favor of the clean program that can be found anywhere in the country, and it has all been done through good programs well advertised. Now the Auditorium is planning a series of musical treats for its patrons, grand opera stars and the big symphony orchestras; not because pictures have not paid, but because the pictures of the better sort have paid so well they feel encouraged to risk the larger investment occasionally to bing good music to the town, as well.

Something Doing, Anyhow.

George Editor Carpenter, of Real Reels and the Paramount, Salt Lake City, planned to fill part of one issue of Real Reels with a spread story about Roscoe Arbuckle's visit. Then there was a snow-in and "Fatty" was marooned a couple of hundred miles away. That did not worry Mr. Carpenter in the least. He filled the space with the story of what they didn't do, and it made a lot better reading. It takes more than a silly old snowstorm to best a hustler.

Bromides.

WRITE novelty if you want to sell. It is about all you can sell to advantage. Don't write what the other man is most apt to write. Work on what he is not apt to think of. The other day a friend wrote with some disgust that a New York paper had refused to take an article on the hyphenate. He used all of the stuff that perhaps a thousand other writers have used in the past few weeks. There was the man who was naturalized so that he would not have to fight for his mother country now finding himself liable to have to fight for the land he pretended to adopt, there were flings at the pacificists and all the rest of the current topics. He wanted to know what to do with the story. We wrote him that the best thing would be to drop it as too many others were using the same stuff. Then we advised him to work on a skit in which a drunken man offers as his excuse for falling off the water wagon his distaste for riding in the same vehicle with the Apostle of Peace and Grape Juice. There was something a little different—a new kink which probably sold if he worked out the idea. It is the same way in writing stuff. Do not take the universal point of view. Look for a new angle from which to regard the situation if you expect to engage the attention of the editors. We have had scores of stories in which Mazie, the pure but passionate village girl, runs away from the town with the handsome stranger, leaving Dave, the strong and stalwart blacksmith sighing so hard that he can dispense with the bellows and trust to his own lung supply to run the fire. Then Mazie comes home with a black dress and a small red baby and Dave takes her in his strong arms and tells her he knew she would come back. Of course he knew. He must have been going to the pictures himself, and he might have guessed. Just to fool Dave and the audience, get something new. Let him refuse to marry her and let her get mad and open a rival blacksmith shop where presently her recreant deceiver turns up because she is making more money than he is. She tells him to thrash Dave and she'll marry him and give him a good home, and he does it because he is a professional pugilist. That sounds like a comedy, but it can be made into a drama, and it has not been done yet. The usual thing has been done too often. Suppose that for a time you stop inventing plots and put in your time trying to put new twists in the tails of those you already have. It will pay.

Lindsayisms.

In a recent issue of The New Republic Vachel Lindsay throws some light upon his theory of Architecture in Motion that will interest those who have read his Art of the Moving Picture. This is not so much a matter of script writing as some other factors on which he dwells, but Architecture in Motion can be provided for in the script—if we ever get a chance to write full scripts. He is discussing Truthful Tulliver and comes to the scene in which Hart requires the train to back up to where his pony was left standing beside the track. He writes:

> When the pony is chasing the train, and the pony is nearest the camera, it is, in a primitive way, Sculpture in Motion. But when the end of the train fills the screen, we have architecture. It has a roof, walls, a floor, windows, door, chairs and inhabitants, and it is certainly in motion. Above all, it is the leading actor in this episode. We see the principle illustrated in a more epic way throughout "Intolerance." For instance, when the great gates of Bel open, or when the titanic siege towers go forward or fall, these elements are the leading actors. And they are certainly architecture in motion.

In other words, he points out that there are times when the inanimate, for the moment dominating the scene, is as capable of producing the pictorial effect as the movement of the players in other scenes. With this the director has more to do than the author, but clearly there is much the author can do, in a suggestive way, to make use of such effects to heighten the interest in his scene. When Mr. Lindsay writes his next book on Photoplay (and this will not be for several years, he says) we think he will write more nearly in the terms of the studio. If he does, we shall have a book invaluable, for he has the keen detached vision of the outsider and the interest of the enthusiast.

Anticipation.

"What's the use of holding on?" asks one of the discouraged. "The staff man is getting stronger all the time and there is less and less chance for the outsider." There doesn't seem to be much use, but there is. The staff man is constantly gaining in establishment, but he is like a man who builds a fortress upon a great rock constantly exposed to the erosion of the sea. Presently he is going to find his defensive structure top heavy. Letters from exhibitors in constantly increasing numbers will tell of the loss of patrons through the sameness of the stories. As one man puts it, his regular patrons know the familiar situations so well that they are able to keep about two reels ahead of the film. It is only a question of time when the falling off of business will bring about a reduced market that will alarm the makers and they will have to come to real authors. At present poor sales are blamed upon overproduction. There are too many films made for any brand to be sold in sufficient quantity to show a real profit. This is comforting reflection, but it will be found to be the wrong one, and then we shall have an awakening that will help the real writers. Perhaps before that some level headed business man will come along to make real film and his success will lead others to follow his example. At present the newcomers follow too closely the lead of those already in, and make the same sort of stuff. They do not seem to see. We know one editor who has reduced the value of a certain trade mark more than twenty-five per cent., and still he has not been found out. It's a waiting game, right now, but the waiting will be worth while.

Cut Backs.

Bushnell Dimond prints this in his column in the Philadelphia Ledger:

> Epes Winthrop Sargent is such an intelligent man that it is a bit surprising to find him descanting thus in the Moving Picture World: "Undoubtedly the ability to see many places and periods in rapid rotation is one of the most valuable assets of the photoplay, but it is by no means the fundamental. It is possible to produce a play without any cutbacks whatever, and still have a good play." Now if "Chicot" means by "play" a stage, and not celluloid play, he is quite right. But if he means a photodrama—well, "Chicot" will you please name a few good photoplays with no cutbacks?

Go easy on an old friend, Bushie. We did not say that it is necessary to produce plays without cutbacks. We spoke of the excessive use of the device and said it was possible to dispense with cutbacks and still have a good play. It's possible, but we cannot call offhand a single play produced within a twelvemonth—good or otherwise—that is not overloaded with cutbacks. Cutting back is admittedly a device to heighten suspense and to bring clarity. It is useful, but it is so sadly overworked that the abuse calls for protest—that's all.

Can't Be Done.

A correspondent has hit upon a plan to do away with plot stealing. He suggests that authors take their scripts to the local postmasters and have them read. Then the local postmaster ships the script to the postmaster in Los Angeles, or wherever the studio is, and asks that official to read the story before sealing the envelope and delivering it to the film company. Then, in case of theft, the two postmasters know just what a naughty person the dishonest manufacturer is. Postmasters are entrusted with the handling of the mails and are not supposed to be public conveniences generally. We are working on a scheme that may be put into use presently, but there is little that can be done to stop the dishonest. As one writer suggests, it will be well to wait until editors can announce that honesty is the best policy after having tried both policies.

Charity.

It is a most amazing thing that persons who would be horrified at the idea of asking a stranger for a dime will pester some perfectly unknown script writer for free information, the supplying of which will take time represented by more than one ten cent piece. Practically every person mentioned in any publication as a script writer is besieged by people who want to be told all about it. Only lately one woman received a request from a person eight hundred miles away, and who did not even know the author's address. Don't bother strangers.

He Has Trouble.

D. Walrath, Augusta, Montana, writes:

Would like a little information, as follows: Am using a 2½ K. W., D. C. 60-volt generator, driven by a 4-cylinder gas engine. The generator was originally compound wound, but it pulled so heavy I changed it to a shunt, leaving out the series coils. I have my arc connected direct to the generator; also twelve incandescent lights. My trouble is that the Power's Six lamp won't last but five reels without letting top carbon downward, using ⅝ inch carbons. If I open the machine and let light show on the screen I can see the impulse of the engine in the light. I also have some trouble with getting the dark shadow out of the center of the light; when I get the center clear the corners are brown. Am using a meniscus bi-convex condenser, with a 5½-inch objective on a 79-foot throw. My machine is 5 feet above center of screen, and it is impossible to get the top and bottom of the picture in focus at the same time; also I do not find it much better when I tilt the screen.

You are rather indefinite on some points Brother Walrath. As I understand it, you can't run but five reels without letting down the top carbon. Now, your 2½ K. W., 60-volt generator ought to supply you with about 40 amperes, and, counting the incandescents, you ought to be able to pull at least 30 amperes at the arc. Well, it seems to me you could hardly expect one carbon trim to last more than five reels without adjustment, pulling 30 amperes. However, you can equalize matters by using a smaller carbon below. Also I do not quite see how you "let the light show on the curtain when you open up the lamphouse." You surely have an operating room. Do you mean that the engine runs so irregularly that you can see the impulse in the light when the gas fires in the cylinder? If so, there is something radically wrong with your engine governor, or else the engine is not suited to the work it is performing. Your dark center is what we call a "ghost." It is due to the fact that you haven't got the right condenser combination, or haven't your lamphouse the correct distance from the aperture. Send me the following information and I will try to help you, namely: Number of amperes you are using; maximum distance you can get from the front condenser to the machine aperture; exact diameter of your objective lens, and the exact distance from the tracks on the aperture plate to the back surface of the objective lens when the picture is in sharp focus on the screen. A drop of five feet in 79 is not very serious, unless you are projecting a very large picture. Must be something wrong. I would suggest that you line up the optical system of your machine—see page 112 of the third edition of the Handbook, if you have one. It is quite within the range of possibility that the fault lies in the objective lens itself, but the details you give are too meager to enable me to offer an intelligent opinion. What size picture are you projecting? The fact that tilting the screen does not help matters much makes me think there is something wrong with your objective lens.

Mason Objects.

A. J. Mason, St. John, N. B., says:

With regard to article "Halifax Objects" from Brother Ward, issue Jan. 6, permit me to say that I am sorry the operators in Halifax took what I said in November 25 issue as a knock at them, for I did not mean it that way. In fact I said: "This is by no manner of means the fault of the Halifax operators." With regard to equipment, will say that I made some repairs on a machine from Halifax some months ago, and when in that city the manager of the theater owning this projector advised me it was working fine. This machine was NOT of the latest model as set forth by Brother Ward. Also I will say that the picture I viewed in the King Edward theater certainly appeared to be more than 16 feet. This was the theater to which I had reference.

And now, Brother Ward, as to the argument. Did you not say that neither volts or amperes passed along the negative wire? To which I replied: Why use a wire at all if it is not needed. Did you not say it had to be there as an affinity, in order that the arc could burn? The reason why I suggested that you dope it out is best known to yourself.

And now I will try to explain this matter, although it is hard to do on paper. First of all, let me say that such men as Thomson, Joule and others say that electricity cannot be created or destroyed, but its distribution may be altered. Lippman says that every charge of electricity has an equal, opposite charge somewhere in the universe, more or less distributed. In altering the distribution of electricity we may cause more to appear at one place and less at another, or may change it from the condition of rest to that of motion. According to this doctrine all our electric machines, batteries, etc., are merely instruments for altering the distribution of electricity by moving it from one place to another, or causing it when accumulated in one place to do work in returning to its former distribution, all of which tends to show that power is passing along the negative wire. An electric current is said to flow when two points at a difference of potential are connected by a wire, or when the circuit is otherwise complete, the same as water will flow from a higher to a lower level when a path is provided. In either case the flow can only take place when the path exists, so that in order to produce an electric current it is absolutely necessary to have a closed circuit and an electris pressure. The current will continue to flow only so long as the electric pressure and closed circuit exists.

And now coming back to the argument, I will say that the conditions and happenings with our outfit, where I have been able to make tests—current D. C., voltage 110, two rheostats, each of 60 ampere capacity—one rheostat is cut in on the positive wire of the first arc, and the other on the negative of the second arc. With the first arc burning I took a voltmeter reading across the rheostat, with the terminals of the voltmeter on the terminals entering and leaving the rheostat. I found the voltmeter registered a drop in potential of 55 volts. Then with terminals of voltmeter across the positive and negative terminals of the arc a drop of 48 volts was recorded, the total drop through the rheostat and the arc being 103 volts, the remaining pressure being that which was necessary to overcome the resistance of the wires in circuit from generator to arc, and back to generator. Now consider the second arc. While ammeter and voltmeter readings of drop through rheostat and arc were the same as with the first arc, the current and voltage encounters the resistance of the arc before encountering the resistance of the rheostat, but as the drop across the arc is only 48 volts, the surplus volts pass through the arc to overcome rheostatic resistance and resistance of wires back to generator, etc. Of course the voltmeter and ammeter do not register that amount and stay there. The figures were varying all the while, according to the arc resistance, but when the arc was at its best the above readings prevailed. Now this whole question brings us right back to ohms law. Take the drop across the rheostat: 55 volts by ohms law is $55 \div 60 = .92$ ohms. The arc voltage $48 \div 60 = .80$ ohms. Now the average operator would take away the arc voltage from the line, or $110 - 48 = 62$ volts, which figures thus: $62 \div 60 = 1^{1}/_{80}$ ohms, the resistance of the rheostat. But this, according to the instruments, is wrong. And here is where the wrong idea, I feel sure, is taken by the operator that the voltage is all consumed at the rheostat and at the arc. Although the resistance of the wires, etc., is slight compared to that of the rheostat and arc, it is, nevertheless, resistance, and therefore causes a drop in voltage. Consider my own arc, say one one mile from the generator. The readings both in amperes and volts at the arc will be less than the above, although the resistance of the rheostat has not changed, and you would have to carry a shorter arc. The reason then is that a portion of the 110 volts are necessary in order to force the current through the extra resistance of the wire, which by ohms law means a corresponding drop in amperage.

From the above you will readily see that to be accurate the resistance of the whole circuit must be considered when figuring ohms law. The exact resistance can readily be obtained by taking a voltmeter reading of the drop across the terminals of the rheostat, and by ohms law. By disregarding the resistance of the wires in circuit, and only considering the resistance of the rheostat and arc, one is apt to assume that the voltage is all consumed at the arc and rheostat, where some of it is consumed, it is true, but not all. There has to be sufficient pressure to overcome the resistance of the return, etc. It does not matter where you connect the resistance—positive, negative, or split up in both. You can even place the resistance at the negative terminal of the generator, if you wish. There will be a gradual fall of potential throughout the circuit, and if the voltage between any two points of the circuit be measured the electro motive force obtained will depend upon the resistance included between these two points. In considering A. C., through rheostat, the same practically prevails, but where transformers are used other conditions exist, due to the reactance of the core and windings, although the action in overcoming the resistance of the whole circuit is the same, that is at each alternation. I trust, Brother Ward, I have made this matter clear to you.

I had considerable doubt as to the advisability of publishing this letter, since it to some extent run the thing into a personal discussion between Brothers Ward and Mason. However, I thought it was only fair to let Mason justify himself.

It is, however, quite true that we all make the common error of neglecting the resistance of the circuit, when we come to figure the rheostat and arc. This is for two reasons. In the first place the projection arc is to a certain extent a rather rough and tumble affair, and there is no particular use in figuring resistance down so extremely fine. In the second place we ordinarily have no method of ascertaining the actual resistance of the line from the power house to the theater, not knowing the wire sizes or exact length. However, I would correct Mason on one or two points. Voltage does not "pass alone the line." Voltage is best defined as being a condition, or a state of pressure; also I think when you get right down to brass tacks we cannot consider the rheostat and the arc and the line as separate propositions, so far as resistance be concerned. We can figure the acual resisance a rheosat offers, the actual resistance an arc offers, but, as a matter of fact, the resistance of a circuit is the sum of the total resistance from the positive of the generator to the negative of the generator, and the thing acts absolutely as a unit. I don't know as I make that very plain, but I guess you get the idea I am trying to convey.

And now while I welcome discussions of this kind, which tend to add to our knowledge of electrical action, I do not wish, and cannot permit, the matter to run into a personal discussion between Brothers Mason and Ward. Mason, I am sure, had no intention of affronting the Halifax boys, and I think each of you has misunderstood the other.

Classed and Labeled.

Frank McManus, Corvallis, Ore., says:

I always study the projection department of the Moving Picture World, and your article under heading "Question of Policy," January 13 issue, provided me with quite a little amusement. I am a "small town operator," and if I understand rightly the average operator in small towns is considered as being almost anything else but a shining mark of progress in the projection world, so I will keep in mind the fact that I am already classed and labeled, and won't say much, except that I do not think the articles you have been running in the department were entirely over the heads of the average operator. I will, however, admit there have been times when some of the department discussions have seemed rather deep for the average man, but notwithstanding that fact, we could always cull out some degree of information, even from the deeper articles, therefore do not think that your efforts in the department during the past year have not been appreciated by the average operator. In closing, I would like to make the following suggestion: What would you think of a "Hint" Column in the department? Something on the order of "Shop Notes," in which old, experienced operators would give to those of lesser experience short but valuable hints on how to do things, which time and experience has taught them. I have found such hints as those have saved me lots of guess work and worry.

Brother McManus if I had you here at this present moment I'd bite you on the wrist. I did not mean to insult the dignity of the "small town operator," and I think you know that quite well. In the first place, by "small town operator" I did not really mean the small-city man; I meant the village operator—the operator in a place of from one to two thousand population. I think, in the very nature of things, a man in a very small theater in a very small town is not likely to be proficient in the art of projection, though, of course, there are exceptions. However, the village man who really perfects himself in the art of projection will certainly be as busy as a cross-eyed boy at a three ring circus; this by reason of the fact that he will have no one to help him except the projection department and the Handbook. He has no one to consult; he cannot compare his apparatus; his operating room; his methods, or screen and screen results with those of other theaters in his village, because there aren't any other theaters. I still believe, however, that whereas the "high brow" discussion is of distinct value we devoted a disproportionate amount of space to it, everything considered.

As to the "hint" column, why that would probably work out fine in about five years from now. It is, however, a fact that a very great proportion of the experienced operators are just a little bit jealous of the knowledge they possess, and not at all inclined to give it to their less fortunate brothers. It was the same way in the early day of electrics, though now you find the average high class electrician is not only willing, but glad to contribute to "Shop Notes" any little kink he may know of which will be of value to fellow electricians. I predict the same thing will be true with moving picture machine operators in due course of time. It is much more nearly true now than it was five years ago. When I first started this department it was an all day job to attempt to pry a piece of information loose from the great majority of operators. They seemed to have an idea that the imparting of knowledge to others would in some mysterious way injure them. But they are slowly finding out that this is not at all the case. Such a department would be of distinct value if it were practical, but I don't think, for the reasons just stated, that it is—just yet.

Of Great Benefit.

W. W. Brumberg, Tuscon, Ariz., writes:

> No matter how long we may be engaged at a vocation, there is always a chance to learn, and I, for one, freely admit I don't know it all, and am glad to have the privilege of asking questions. I have your latest Handbook; also read our department each week, and have found it to be of great benefit. And now here is a matter for which I have tried a number of remedies, but without success. My equipment consists of two Power's Six B projectors, two G. E., 30 ampere mercury arc rectifiers, a Kleigl spot light, a motor rewind, and a Freddy speed controller. My trouble is in one machine. I get a brown spot right square in the center of my picture. This only happens with one rectifier, as I have tried both machines with the same rectifier, always with the same result on both. The line-up is as follows: Machine No. 1. Objective 4¼ inch E. F., back focus 3.1875 inches optical center of meniscus-bi-convex condenser, to aperture plate 17½ inches, center of crater to apex of back condenser (meniscus) 4½ inches, diameter of crater ½ inch, using 30 amperes, meniscus-bi-convex condensers 6½ and 7½ inches. Machine No. 2. Objective 4½ inch E. F., back focus 3.4375 inches, optical center of condenser to aperture 18½ inches (that being the extreme distance I am able to obtain), crater to apex of back condenser 4½ inches, diameter of crater ½ inch, using 30 amperes. Same condenser combination as No. 1. Distance of projection 67 feet, with a 0 degree drop. Minusa Aluminum screen. Picture 14 feet 3 inches by 10 feet 10 inches. Supply voltage 220, and, of course, A. C. Shutter placed at convergence point. Carbons set as per data in Handbook, which I have always found to be best. I have given you figures concerning light always with a 1½ inch spot at aperture. Am using ⅝ by 12 cored Nationals top and bottom, these being best as to results obtained. I have tried the Silver Tip and ½ inch hard; also the Speer Hold Ark, and copper coated carbons, but the ⅝ inch have always proven best here. Now, Mr. Richardson, with the above data, can you give me any line on the brown spot? I am really up a tree with regard to this particular matter. By-the-way, this spot is not permanent but steals in gradually, and all the stunts I know of to get rid of it have proved futile.

Well, Brother Brumberg, I must compliment you on the completeness of your data. It is about the best I have received up to date. You omitted but one thing—objective lens diameter. Still, I think we will have to wigwag our conference, because I am also seated in the exact center of a tall stump, so far as this particular thing be concerned. You say the spot is brown. Under all the conditions would promptly decide that the fault lay in one of the lens combinations, but you tell me it travels with the rectifier, and, that being true, the trouble is automatically located in the crater, or, more correctly speaking, in the current. I have tackled some pretty stiff problems in the past seven years, and have gotten away with them, but this, I think, is one too many. I cannot imagine any possible thing about a rectifier which would set up a brown spot in the center of the screen. If the spot were blue it would be quite another matter, and I would say test your amperage and see if there is not a material difference.

Another point, Friend Brumberg. You say your crater is ½ inch in diameter, using 30 amperes. You must be in error there. It may appear to be that size, but the effective crater is decidedly less than that, if you are only using 30 amperes of current. Anyhow I think you must have measured it up and down instead of sidewise, which does not give you the correct result. As an interesting experiment you can measure your effective crater as follows: Cover the lamphouse of one machine with a photographer's dark cloth, first having clamped a piece of ground glass about ¾ inch square between the carbon tips in such way that it will occupy precisely the position the crater occupies when you are projecting a picture. Now set the revolving shutter so that the objective lens will be open. Next, block the fire shutter up. Then light the lamp of the other machine and project the white light to the screen. With your head under the dark cloth, looking in the lamphouse door, you will be able to see the light projected backward to the crater of the idle machine, and the size of the image on the ground glass will be the effective crater area you are using, or can possibly use. This is of particular interest, because if your crater is smaller than the image thus shown, you can increase your amperage and get correspondingly added brilliancy on the screen. If, on the other hand, the carbon crater is larger than the image, then you are consuming current needlessly. You have passed the economic limit of amperage under the conditions you are working, and either you should cut down your amperage or change your lens sytem in such way that the image will equal the crater, because the best you can do in the way of illumination is 132 foot candles per square millemeter of crater area. According to scientists you cannot get any more than that per unit of area, therefore as soon as you pass the crater area which can be made available through the lens system you waste current.

But we have gotten a little off the subject, I think. I am submitting this matter to the department correspondents as an interesting problem. If any one can, after carefully studying the date given, offer an intelligent solution, let him stand forth and be heard. Meanwhile, however, you carefully test the amperage delivery of both those rectifiers. That seems to be about the only answer to the matter, but a variation of amperage should not, I think, set up a brown spot. A deep crater might give, to some extent, an out-of-focus effect, but not a brown spot, or even a blue one.

A Carbon Adapter.

R. E. Johnston and F. L. Shannon, Detroit, Mich., send in a sample of a carbon adapter they are placing on the market, and concerning which they make the following remarks:

> Will you kindly look over the article we are sending in, and express an opinion with regard thereto, as we find what you say seems to "go" with the boys. The article is known as the Silver Tip Adapter. The one we are sending may be used with the Power's regular carbon jaw, but the outside diameter is different, according to what size ring bolt you are going to use. We have two sizes, one of which takes 5/16 inch or 11/32 inch Silver Tip, while the other takes ⅜ inch or 7/16 inch, or the latest copper coated Speer carbon. We also have the same style adapter for use on the Motiograph lamp. They have been thoroughly tested out and have given good results. And now as to the electrical contact and resistance. Would the cold rolled steel adapter make much difference in efficiency, or candle power, or would it cause the carbon to pencil? Some of the boys think it would, but we have never had that trouble. Also some of the men think that the steel contact is out of the question. The steel does not corrode so quickly and will outlast the alloy adapter. We have applied for patent.
> Conditions are better here now than when you visited Detroit last February. We are both members of Local Union No. 199.

No, my brothers, the cross section of the metal is so very great compared with its thickness that the additonal resistance offered by the adapter would amount to practically nothing. Also I agree with you that, if kept clean, the steel will make an excellent contact. The adapter is, so far as I can see, very well calculated to perform the work it is supposed to perform, and do it in an efficient, workmanlike manner.

Laugh and Make Fun.

Charles Bramer, Los Angeles, Cal., orders the two question booklets and says:

> I also have your latest Handbook and think a lot of it. Some operators here laugh and make fun of me for reading it, but I have found them to be in error, for there are too many things about the projection game for the head of any one man to hold them all, no matter how wise he may be. I have been operating since 1911, and believe I have a fair knowledge of projection, but like all the rest of the boys I, of course, have my troubles. I do not as yet belong to the union, but intend to join very soon. I am sorry to say it, but in my opinion, if a genuine bona fide official examination of operators were announced in this town, there are a good many operators who would come pretty close to dying from the shock.

I don't think, Brother Bramer, you need to do any worrying about the solid-ivory-top who, in this day and age, presumes to laugh at a man for studying to perfect himself in the technical end of his profession. Of my own knowledge, Los Angeles has some good operators; also it has some operators who stand in urgent need of a considerable fixing, and that statement goes as it lies. However, taking the city as a whole, I think quite likely it will average up with many others of similar size. The men who now sneer at Handbooks and projection departments will within a few years be scratching gravel to keep up with the procession, or else they will be forced entirely out of the business. I will be in Los Angeles on or about Wednesday, May 2, and will remain in the city two days, leaving at 9.45 Friday. The above, however, is subject to being changed one or two days either way, though I think it will not be altered. I am going to put in one whole day enjoying that perfectly scrumptuous bathing out at—um, is it Long Beach? Or maybe it will be Catalina Island.

The Davsco Professional Kino.

THE Davsco Professional Kino, sold by the David Stern Company of Chicago, is one of the lowest priced professional cameras on the market. While it is lacking in some of the refinements found in many of the higher priced cameras, it is quite capable of turning out straight photography and topical negatives that will compare with that of instruments costing several times as much.

The Davsco is very compact and easily portable. Fig. 1 shows the camera mounted on the tripod ready for operation.

The case is substantially made of seasoned mahogany, covered with genuine seal grain leather. The doors are hung on heavy hinges finished with black lacquer and are fastened with catches operated by knurled knobs; no other instrument than the fingers is needed to open them. Arrow points on the knobs indicate whether the catches are loose or locked. A heavy leather strap handle is provided for carrying the Davsco. The camera measures 5½x10½x6½ inches and weighs 10½ pounds.

The Magazines: The retorts are circular in shape, made of heavy aluminum, with lids which screw on perfectly light tight. Magazines are interchangeable and are fastened securely in place in the camera by means of knurled thumbscrews at the back of the camera.

The light traps are covered with heavy pile velvet, but an idler roller prevents all but a minimum of friction between the film and the velvet. The spool spindle has a bearing at both ends, ensuring its perfect alignment so that the film rolls up evenly without any tendency to bind against the sides of the retort. Sharp fins on the spool spindle engage the wooden spool which comes in the Eastman film, so that a roll may be inserted in the magazine without rewinding on another spool for loading. Figure 2 shows the construction of the retorts.

The take up: The take up device is of the simplest description, and, therefore, free from complication. Each magazine has its own take up pulley made integral with the spool spindle and when the camera is loaded the spring belt of the take up is slipped over this pully on the take up magazine.

Gears and bearing: On account of the simplicity of construction there are few gears but these are of good quality, accurately cut, running on tool steel arbors anchored direct in the mechanism plate. the movement mechanism and most of the gears. A footage dial above the crank registers 100 feet and repeats.

The feed and take up sprockets are side by side on the same shaft, the film being kept in engagement by means of idler rollers. In the model examined for this article these rollers are not relieved in the center so that they come in contact with the emulsion surface across the picture space. This is a very simple matter to remedy and will doubtless be done in later models.

The aperture plate is of smooth polished metal, but is not milled out between the side rails. This is apt to cause longitudinal scratches on the negative. If this portion of the aperture plate were relieved along with the rollers there would be no friction upon the emulsion surface of the film anywhere in the camera except at the edge of the frame opening. The gate is of metal and opens wide enough for convenience in cleaning and threading. The pressure plate is open to permit of focussing through the film and holds the film in the focal plane by means of pressure springs. The finger rails or runners also have spring tension which prevents the pins from mutilating the film between perforations as sometimes occurs where the finger rails are rigid or the spring tension is too great to allow the film to recede until the pins can slip down and engage in the perforation holes. In a camera with rigid runners it is necessary to thread the film onto the pins so that the perforations will come into the correct position for the next throw of the pins, otherwise they may strike the film between perforations and punch new holes between perforations instead of engaging the sprocket holes as they should do.

The gate locks shut with a latch and cannot jar loose during the operation of the camera. Figure 4 shows the aperture plate and gate, as well as the sprockets and spring take up belt.

The movement mechanism is an ingenious one, somewhat different to anything the writer has hitherto encountered. Figure 3 shows some of the details of this design, which is a variation of the rod and crank movement, with the in-and-out motion produced by a segment from a drunken screw. It is not necessary to give a detailed description of this movement beyond saying that it is the best type of rod-and-crank movement with positive in-and-out throw of the pins. It is not adjustable for frame line, but could be modified for easy adjustment of frame line by putting an eccentric bushing upon the crank pin. Turning the bushing slightly would modify the throw of the pin shuttle enough to shift the frame line.

Shutter: The shutter in the Davsco serves the double purpose of balance wheel and shutter. Its maximum opening is about 35 per cent. An adjustable blade is provided for making the opening smaller if desired.

Frame line: The frame line, as mentioned under the movement heading, is not adjustable, but is intended to conform to the Pathe standard frame line midway between the perforations.

Focussing device: A lens and a lens and a mirror set at an angle of 45 degrees permits of focussing direct on the film without opening the camera, thereby avoiding the waste of exposed film occasioned where it is necessary to open the camera for focussing. A spring flap closes the focussing device automatically when not in use, so that there is no danger of accidentally fogging a scene by leaving the focussing device open. In case the light conditions are bad a piece of ground or matte film may be temporarily placed in the gate for accurate focussing.

They are easily accessible for oiling by opening the front board panel. Figure 3 shows

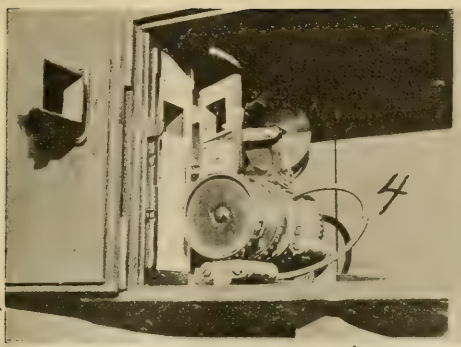
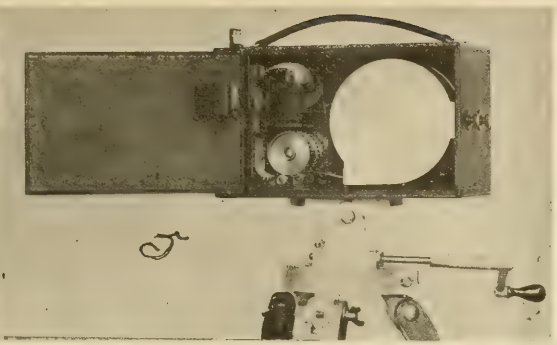
*Copyright, 1917, by the Chalmers Pub. Co.





View finder: The view finder is of the negative lens type with cross lines and sight and is rather small for extremely accurate work, but this defect does not amount to much, as only an instant is required to view the actual image on the film through the focussing device. A level is also provided for quickly aligning the camera when setting up.

Lens and front board: The lens is the Bausch & Lomb, f3.5 Tessar, 50 mm. focus in the regular B. & L. focussing mount. Two extension pointers or indicators make the diaphragm and distance adjustments very easy, especially to those unfamiliar with the operation of cinematographic lenses. In addition to the diaphragm numbers the weather conditions under which the diaphragm numbers would ordinarily be used are indicated so that the diaphragm may be adjusted correctly by anyone without a knowledge of the stop numbers required for varying light conditions. Neither the lens nor the front board is supported from the mechanism plate, but the front board is of rigid construction and not liable to warp except under abnormal conditions.

Camera mechanism: The mechanism is not of integral construction, different parts being supported by the camera which is, however, of unusual rigidity and seems amply strong to support such parts as are not fastened directly to the main frame.

Threading: The threading is simple for a camera with magazines side by side. The film passes from the feed sprocket in a return loop into the gate. A smooth rod supports the return loop and makes it as free from buckling as a simple slack loop in straight line threading. From the gate the film describes a simple slack loop to the take up sprocket, where it is held by two idler rollers and thence into the take up retort. Figure 5 shows the camera threaded and ready to turn as soon as the door is closed.

For amateurs, beginners, occasional topical work, industrial pictures and in fact for every purpose except where a camera is subject to a steady daily grind or used for trick work requiring stop motion, reverse cranking and double exposure mattes, the Davsco should prove an ideal outfit.

Answers to Correspondents.

Persian Rug writes:

I am a lad of nineteen years of age and am awfully interested in motion photography and have been doing considerable amateur work in cinematography. I have an "American" moving picture camera No. 2, with two hundred foot capacity magazines, spring belt take-up, Carl Zeiss Tessar 7.3-5 lens and "Precision" tripod with both movements, and am very much satisfied with it; but most of my cameramen friends tell me that they would not own one because the film creeps up, and I truly will say that I have never seen the camera creep since I purchased it, and as I said before I am very much satisfied with it.

I cannot use any vignettes or aperture masks in it as there is no slot provided for such work. What is the cheapest and best way to have such a slot put in, and do you think I could tackle it? I shot the enclosed piece of negative at the Municipal Pier at fifteen below zero and in biting wind and never had a spark of static; in fact, I never in my life have had any of these annoying sparks—used a brass crank and put a damp sponge in the top of my camera right in front of the upper feed retort in order to keep the film pliable as film on such days is always brittle.

Just purchased a Watkins Exposure meter and am very much satisfied with it, and I think that every picture photographer ought to own one of these meters.

I am taking an educational picture for the Universal Film Company and do not know how to work in my sub-titles. In other words, how can I let them know that a certain sub-title goes after a certain scene? The subject is: "How Oriental Rugs are Woven," and when the weaver is tightening the knot I want them to know what she is doing.

I have put two of my own ideas on my camera, and I am sure that if other photographers see them they will also make them on their cameras. The first one is a blow tube extending from the rear of my camera clear to my aperture plate. My idea in putting this tube in was because most every time I used to take a picture my aperture plate would get dirty somehow and register on the film, so occasionally I blow in the tube and clean the aperture. Eberhard Schneider put one of these tubes in one of his cameras and they claimed it prevented static, so you see now it serves two purposes.

My second idea was an attachment on my lower take-up roller showing instantly whether the take-up is working or not. I have two sprockets in my box—one the upper feed sprocket and the other the lower take-up sprocket, and there also are two idler rollers, the upper and lower. I took my lower idler roller off of the stationary axle, got a third sprocket and had an expert mechanic put a small bevel gear on same, perfectly straight, purchased a second bevel gear and put this on a rod and extended this rod to the top of my camera and put a neat arrow on it with a supporter. When your take-up is working, naturally the film has a pull; this pull turns my third sprocket, which is loose on the stationary axle, and my arrow turns and that is how I can tell if my take-up is working. If the arrow stops—stop and investigate. This arrow will also let you know when your film supply is ended. Some idea, eh?

In making an educational picture it is customary to number the scenes by using a slate and chalk and photograph a few inches of the number at the beginning and close of the scene. You then make note of what each scene represents, and after you have taken all of the scenes that you wish you make out a list of the numbers on a sheet of paper in the order in which you wish them to appear in the completed picture, writing the sub-title that you require before each number. Whatever company buys your negative will prefer to make their own titles so that you would be wasting film to do it yourself. If you think best, however, you may write the title on a large slate and photograph it before each scene.

In regard to the Mattes: You had best take the camera to a fine mechanic and find out from him what he would charge to make the alteration that you wish.

Your blow tube for cleaning the aperture plate and the take-up indicator are very ingenious.

A simple arrangement for a take-up indicator can be installed in most makes of cameras by putting an extension on the shaft of the take-up pulley so that it protrudes a short distance outside the camera case. If a knurled knob is placed at the outer end of this shaft a scene may often be completed when the take-up is faulty by assisting its action with the thumb and fingers of the left hand turning the indicator knob.

If a camera collects enough dirt in the aperture plate to require a blow tube to clean away the dust, the camera is faulty and should have the rough places on the aperture plate smoothed away rather than have a blow tube installed, for it would be likely to cause dust to settle on the lens and on the sliding surfaces of the movement, which should be free from grit and dirt. Using the breath in the blow tube also introduces an unnecessary amount of moisture in the camera, where it would be likely to condense on the metal surfaces and cause corrosion and rust to say nothing of the veil of moisture which would collect upon the lens if the weather were cold.

E. G. G. writes:

Here is a prospective cameraman (wants to be) and wants to know how to break into the work.

I was speaking to Miss Ormi Hawley concerning camera work and she suggested going to the business manager of the cameramen's union of Chicago. She did not know, nor do I know, his address. If you can help me find out or give me any other tip I will appreciate it very much.

I am a moving picture machine operator of five years' experience, belonging to Local 141 I. & T. S. E., La Crosse, Wis. I have been and I am at present studying lenses and light. Have read quite a bit about photography and have always done my own developing and printing.

There is no union of cameramen of which I am aware. There is a cameramen's club in New York called "Cinema Camera Club," one in Los Angeles called the "Static Club," and the Cinema Camera Club of Jacksonville.

It is a hard matter to break into the ranks of professional cameramen, and generally takes a year or more of work in the laboratory of some studio before one can become even an assistant. However, if you intend to do only local and topical work all you have to do is purchase a camera and learn to use it, which is not difficult for that class of work.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN and NORMAN STUCKEY

THE design of this department is to diffuse among musicians and exhibitors correct information on all important subjects pertaining to music for the film, to improve the quality of playing and to raise the standard of music in motion picture theaters.

Any question concerning music; suitable instrumentation; questions relating to the organ and mechanical players; in fact, any queries, criticisms or suggestions dealing with the musical interpretation for moving pictures will be answered through this department.

By Clarence E. Sinn.

Improvising (Part II).

THESE articles are addressed particularly to those whose experience or whose location, or perhaps both, has prevented their hearing much improvising upon given themes, particularly in its relation to accompanying moving pictures. There is no question as to the advisability of choosing standard works for the accompanying of pictures, and there is likewise no question that as a rule these works will be played as written by the composer. Of course, one does not invariably play all the movements in a composition just as they are printed. Often one part will clash with the sentiment of the picture, and the conscientious performer will leave out that part. Sometimes he will want to use but a single part or strain. If he is playing to his pictures he will have no hesitation in choosing any part of a composer's work which seems to fit, or of leaving out any part which does not seem to fit. A great deal has been said in the past about playing a piece in its entirety "because the composer wrote it that way, and he knew how he wanted it played." Any one who is fortunate enough to hear some of the orchestral accompaniments selected for the more pretentious pictures will hear excerpts from the works of the best composers—whole movements, parts of movements, strains and parases, anything which describes the sentiment of the picture, and played only so long as it does describe that sentiment. One doesn't always like chopping a phrase off abruptly to switch to another. Generally this jars on the hearer's sensibilities and draws his attention from the picture to the music—something you do not want to do. In changing from one movement to another which is in strong contrast to it—either a contrasting key or contrasting movement—or both—one will usually stop on a note which can be used as a "pivot" to swing easily into the next movement.

Ex. 13

As an illustration, let us look at an old friend—the "Bridal Chorus" from Lohengrin. While we are playing it the scene changes, and we want to change with it—say to another old friend—the waltz (ballet) from "Faust."

(I am using illustrations which I am sure everybody is familiar with.) In the first example shown (Ex. 12) we will suppose the change occurs about the twenty-fifth measure after the chorus proper begins. I have chosen that particular spot and used the note "A" as a pivot to swing into the next movement. In each of the examples here given

Ex. 14.

I changed directly to the new movement (a waltz) using the pivot note ("A") to mark the new tempo as well as to act as a pivot for the modulating chords which lead us into the new key. This modulation can be used just as it stands in any one of the measures from the 25th to the 32d. Suppose we wish to change a little earlier in the number. Ex. 13 shows the 17th and 18th measures after the chorus proper begins. Here we find ourselves stopping upon the chord of C minor. We will use the "G" as a pivot. You will notice in each example that although we are modulating to the key of D, we are not trying to bring into prominence the chord of D. We are introducing instead the dominant 7th of the key of D. (This chord—the dominant 7th—consists of the notes: A, C sharp, E and G.) Now, the first illustration in Ex. 13 starts with the note "G" as a pivot. This is the 7th of "A" (the dominant of D), and although an "A" is added in the 3d measure of the modulating phrase, "G" is still the pivot.

In the second illustration of Ex. 13 we make our change still further along in the number. We now change from the chord of B flat. I have chosen to use both B flat and D as pivotal notes, progressing through the chord of the augmented sixth to the dominant chord of the key of D natural. (A, C sharp and E natural.)

It is always safe to aim for the dominant chord of the new key rather than the chord of the key. In this case, we aimed for the chord of "A" (the dominant of the key of "D") instead of the chord of "D," although "D" is the key to which we are modulating. I do not mean to say that you must invariably aim for the dominant chord, nor that that is the only way to modulate. I only mean to say that it is a sure way—always bound to be satisfactory and not apt to grow tiresome nor monotonous. Leading to the dominant, or more preferably the dominant 7th and resolving from that to the new key is always satisfactory to the ear.

The modulations given in Ex. 12 and in the two illustrations in Ex. 13 are four measures in length. One doesn't like to make it much, if any shorter, as an abrupt change of key is sometimes startling rather than pleasing. However, it is sometimes necessary to change abruptly from one key to another—often to greatly contrasting keys. Changes to relative keys are easy and agreeable to the ear, but a quick change to a key a half tone or a whole tone higher, or a half tone or whole tone lower is not always to manage. Of course nobody wants to make these startling modulations if he can help it, but it comes in pretty handy sometimes to know the shortest way of getting to such keys.

Examples 14 and 15 illustrate a means of changing from any key to a key a half tone higher. This is done through one modulating chord only. Other tables will be introduced later illustrating methods of abrupt modulations by means of one or two modulating chords.

COMPILED BY THE STATISTICAL DEPARTMENT

MUSGRAVE, William. Born in Toledo, Ohio. English-German parentage. Five feet eight and one-half inches tall and weighs 140 pounds. Light complexion, brown hair and eyes. Mr. Musgrave began early, for he was but twelve years old when he made his debut on the dramatic stage, and there followed a long succession of stock and touring engagements. About 1912 he turned his attention to the pictures, but he does not remember the exact date and the name of his first picture is also forgotten, for the part was too small to make much appeal to him. Parts did not count so much five years ago in those one-reel days. His first connection was with the Powers company. Later he went to the Rolin and played with the Oz company, producing the Wizard of Oz pictures. He is now playing juveniles and some character parts at Universal City. His diversions are riding and the new society dances.

William Musgrave

STONEHOUSE, Ruth. Born in Denver, Colorado. American parentage. Is flat five feet tall and weighs one hundred pounds. Olive complexion, brown hair and eyes. Her initial experience was in vaudeville, but her protographic qualities attracted the attention of the Essanay company and she made her debut in that studio in 1910 in Sunshine, playing with the Chicago company. She has been seen in many one reel parts. Later she changed to the Universal and is now a resident of Universal City. Among her feature parts are the leads in George Ade's The Slim Princess, Freckles, Love Never Dies, Fighting for Love and The Saintly Sinner. Under the head of fads she writes: "I like everybody and like to do and enjoy all sorts of sports—and I like to stay home sometimes and do nothing." There is a lot of rest in merely doing nothing, she finds, when work proves too exhausting.

Ruth Stonehouse

CLARY, Charles. Born in Charleston, Ill. American parentage, his maternal great-great-grandfather having been the first Secretary of the Navy of the United States. Is half an inch over six feet and weighs 195 pounds. Dark complexion, iron-gray hair and hazel eyes. Mr. Clary made his stage debut in 1897 and played four seasons in stock and several seasons en tour in New York productions. In May, 1910, he became a member of the Selig stock, the first picture played being The Vampire. He remained in this connection for four years and soon became one of the early stars. He has also been seen in Lasky and Fine Arts productions and now is a member of the Fox western company at Hollywood. It is difficult to nominate parts of especial distinction with so many to select from, but his Father Kelly in The Rosary and Harcourt in The Black List are good examples. Makes a fad of mining.

Charles Clary

CAREY, Harry. Born in New York City. American parentage. Is only a quarter of an inch this side of six feet and weighs 170 pounds. Fair complexion, where he is not sunburned, light brown hair and dark gray eyes. "Hank" Carey is perhaps best known through his work in the old Biograph company, though he made his stage debut in 1902 and toured for eight years in his own plays and stock productions, appearing in Montana, The Heart of Alaska, Two Women, etc. His first Biograph was The Unseen Enemy. After several years with Biograph he appeared with the Progressive and then settled down at Universal City, his present connection. Among his best parts have been the leads in A Chance, Deception, The Stolen Treaty, Brothers, Love's Lariat, The Master Cracksman, Just Jim, Judge Not and A Knight of the Range. He likes outdoor sports, has a large kennel of dogs and reads Herbert Spencer for relaxation.

Harry Carey

SCOTT, Mabel Juliene. Born in Minneapolis, Minn. Her father is Norwegian and her mother French. Is five feet six inches tall and weighs 130 pounds. Fair complexion, brown hair and eyes. Miss Scott is a graduate of the most valuable school of all, the stock stage, and put in three solid years in Omaha, Kansas City and Detroit. For a season she was leading woman for Fiske O'Hara, and was headlined in vaudeville in The Intruder. With this solid groundwork she jumped into pictures to play the lead in a ten-reel feature, making her debut on the screen February 24, 1917, at the Broadway theater, in the Rex Beach production, The Barrier, playing the part of Necia, the heroine. It was her first photoplay, and she likes the work so well she has determined to continue in the silent drama. She is fond of outdoor sports and spends her week ends in the country horseback riding, at which she is particularly adept.

Mabel Juliene Scott

LONG, Walter. Born in Milford, N. H. American parentage. Is five feet eleven inches and weighs 175 pounds. Brown hair and eyes. In 1905 Mr. Long made his debut on the stage, and for nine years he had a varied experience in stock, vaudeville and combinations, including engagements with Holbrook Blinn, H. B. Warner and other well-known production managers. In 1914 he turned his attention to the motion picture field, and became a member of the Fine Arts company, working under D. W. Griffith, playing Gus in The Birth of a Nation and the Musketeer of the Slums in Intolerance. He is now a member of the Lasky forces at Hollywood. He is an expert automobilist, and is fond of swimming, basket ball and wrestling, but his chief delight is in military work, and his skill in this direction brought him a commission as Lieutenant in the Coast Artillery Corps of the National Guard of California.

Chicago News Letter

H. B. Warner a Selig Star

He Has Been Working for Several Weeks Amid Northern Snows in "The Danger Trail," Adapted from James Oliver Curwood's Thrilling Story.

WILLIAM N. SELIG, president of the Selig Polyscope Co., sometimes delights in conducting enterprises of moment in a silent way that reminds one of the scriptural adage, "Let not thy right hand know what thy left hand doeth."

For several weeks past he has had a carefully selected company of players engaged in filming snow exteriors in northern New York and Canada for "The Danger Trail," adapted from the book of that title by James Oliver Curwood. This is considered one of the most exciting stories by that well known author, the scenes being laid in the Canadian Northwest.

H. B. Warner.

But this is not all of the secret. It was only the other day that Mr. Selig announced the engagement of H. B. Warner, who has been playing in the scenes referred to, supported by Miss Violet Heming as leading woman, and by W. Lawson Butt. These players and the other members of the company arrived in Chicago a few days ago, accompanied by Frederick Thomson, the director in charge, and they are now engaged on the interiors of this special feature at the Chicago studio.

Mr. Warner's success on the stage and before the camera needs no recapitulation here; but the fact that he has been working for weeks under the Selig banner amid winter snows, without any news of his first venture in a snow picture getting into print, will be received with all the greater zest in moving picture circles. After the completion of "The Danger Trail," Mr. Warner will appear in a number of Selig feature plays which have been specially selected for the display of his exceptional talents.

Miss Violet Heming, who will be seen in "The Danger Trail," has been a leading woman since she was sixteen, and can boast of a lineage that can be traced back to the time of red-haired Queen Bess. She came to this country from her father's theater in the Isle of Man, and soon won popularity in the younger set of leading women.

Miss Heming was the original Rebecca in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm"; played for two years with George Arliss as leading woman in several plays; was prominent in the cast of the New York production of "The Lie"; appeared in "Under Cover," in an important role, and supported William Courtenay in "Under Fire."

Miss Heming's appearance in "The Danger Trail" will be among her first ventures before the camera, and it is believed by critics that she will repeat her successes on the stage in moving pictures.

W. Lawson Butt is an English actor, who will be remembered as the creator of the role of Boris, in the stage production of "The Garden of Allah." He has also played with Robert Mantell for a number of seasons in repertoire.

One of the thrilling scenes in "The Danger Trail" shows a sensational encounter, in which Mr. Warner and Mr. Butt, in their respective characters, appear in a most realistic struggle for physical mastery. It is said by those who have viewed this scene that it equals in intensity the great fistic fight in "The Spoilers," which is saying a great deal.

Censorship Gone Mad.

In the midst of stirring war news in the Chicago Tribune's issue of Thursday, April 5, the following paragraph, under the heading "Women Seek to Censor Dailies and Magazines," caught my eye:

"Censorship of the daily papers, theaters, dance halls, billboards, books and magazines will be undertaken by the Woman's Church Federation. Such a censorship was recommended in the report of the morals committee yesterday. Mrs. James G. Boor, chairman, said there was no doubt it would be adopted."

The members of the morals committee evidently overlooked music, painting, sculpture, sermons—particularly those delivered by Billy Sunday, and all public addresses and speeches. Under the two last named might be included Presidential addresses and speeches, and all decisions of the courts of the United States and of inferior courts. In fact, every form of expression known to civilization must be subjected to the members of the morals committee of the Woman's Church Federation, so that mankind may be protected.

Everything being conceded, the question will arise in every thinking mind, "Who will censor the decisions of the members of the morals committee of the Woman's Church Federation?"

Since they are human and the case must be tried by their peers, it is evident that the Almighty cannot be invoked.

The unfairness to which the moving picture has been subjected through censorship is bound to affect every other form of human expression. Followed to its ultimate, the question of censorship threatens the liberty of mankind.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Omer F. Doud, general manager of the Frieder Film Corporation, Chicago, left for the Pacific Coast, Saturday, April 7. He will visit the company's studio at Lankershim, Cal., and during his stay will devote himself to the work now in progress there. This organization recently completed "The Birds' Christmas Carol" (adapted from the book of that name), its first production, which has already been announced for sale on the states rights plan. The company is now producing another feature, which will be completed in about four weeks. Mr. Doud will remain in California until May 1, when he will return to this city.

Adrienne Kroell, who for several years was one of Selig's leading women at the Chicago studio, and who previous to her engagement by the Selig Polyscope Co. starred in musical comedies, is recovering from a severe attack of arthritis. Miss Kroell was with the Famous Players forces when she was seized with this painful ailment. She has been under the special care of Dr. Rosenow, on the staff of the Mayo Bros. hospital at Rochester, Minn., for nearly three months. Her many friends will be glad to learn that she has recovered sufficiently to return to her home in St. Louis, and that she is improving so rapidly that she expects to be able to engage in her chosen work in the near future. My kindest wishes are extended to Miss Kroell, who was a great favorite during her stay in Chicago, and also a popular favorite on the screen.

Joe Hopp, president of the Chicago Local, who, recently, before the sub-committee of the council on the matter of the increase of moving picture theater licenses in this city, gave as one of the reasons for the closing of several moving picture theaters the present high cost of living, has been answered by a reader of the Chicago News, in the following paragraph:

"Joseph Hopp, of the Motion Picture League of Chicago, says the high cost of living is one reason why many 'movie' theaters are closing, that the poor man has to buy soup bones for his nickel. The reason I do not go to 'movies' nowadays is that it costs me sixty cents to take four of us to listen to an office boy practicing on a pipe organ that is out of order."

The paragraph is published for the special benefit of exhibitors everywhere. It is not enough to have a large expensive pipe organ in a theater; it must be played by a capable organist.

Julius Singer, special representative of L-Ko Motion Picture Company, came into the city from Detroit, Thursday, April 5, to meet Abe Stern, treasurer of that organization, who stopped over here on his way to New York from Los Angeles. Mr. Singer informed me that he had visited, on his recent trip, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Detroit, in the interests of his company, and that he had found conditions in Pennsylvania, Maryland, Michigan and Ohio in excellent shape—much better, in fact, than they are at present in the West. He referred especially to the fine new houses being built at the present time all through the East.

Speakers, who are known as "four-minute men," who devote that time strictly to the urging of universal service before moving picture gatherings, have already been offered twenty-three theaters by patriotic Chicago exhibitors for that purpose, and the number is increasing daily. Ascher Bros. and Alfred Hamburger have offered their big circuits to the speakers, and, in addition, the owners of the Victoria, Aristo, Castle and Alcazar have also fallen in line. The representative of the "four-minute men" in each case is introduced by a slide which serves as an introduction, and which is signed by a committee of seven, which includes the names of some of Chicago's prominent men and women.

I learned with deep regret the other day that George L. Cox, well known in film circles in Chicago and throughout the country, has been at the point of death for some time past at a hospital in Chicago, suffering from an abscess on one of his lungs. On March 27 an operation for pneumonotomy was performed and on April 6 the abscess was drained, the result being that the surgeons declare his chances for recovery very favorable at the present writing.

When I last saw Mr. Cox he was about to leave on a voyage to India and Egypt, by way of Japan, for the purpose of taking certain moving pictures specially for Dr. Reynolds, of the Rockefeller Foundation, New York. That was in August, if I remember rightly. I have learned from one of his friends that he was unable to get a passport in Japan, as the British Government had prohibited all travelers passing through the countries mentioned with a camera. Mr. Cox returned from Japan last December and has been ailing ever since. He was connected with the Selig forces in Chicago for a number of years. I purposely omit the name of the Chicago hospital where Mr. Cox is being treated, as he is not permitted to see callers nor to receive letters of any kind. His many warm friends wish Mr. Cox a speedy and complete recovery, and will be glad to greet him when he is able to get around.

At a meeting of the Chicago City Council, held Wednesday, April 4, Alderman George Pretzel introduced a resolution petitioning the Legislature at Springfield not to pass the state censorship bill for moving pictures, which is now pending. Alderman Pretzel championed the Chicago censorship board. The resolution was passed by the council.

The voters of Oak Park, a suburban village of Chicago, in the state election held Tuesday, April 3, snowed under by a majority of 1,050 votes the proposition for the exhibition of moving pictures on Sundays. The enterprising efforts of 300 women workers, members of the Oak Park Suburban Civics and Equal Suffrage Club, are said to be responsible for the defeat of Sunday pictures in the village. A house-to-house canvass was made, with the result that the women's vote was much heavier in several districts than at the presidential election.

The Fox Film Corporation has filed a writ of mandamus in the Superior Court against the city of Chicago, Chief of Police Schuettler and City Collector Forsberg, in the matter of censorship of "The Tiger Woman," which was refused a "white" permit. The censor board issued a permit for adults only.

Jesse L. Lasky spent a few hours in the city Wednesday, April 4, on his way from New York to the Hollywood studio. While here he gave out that Billie Burke had been engaged by Famous Players, the stipulation being that she shall devote her summers to moving pictures. The winter months will be spent in dramatic work under the management of her husband, F. Ziegfeld. Miss Burke's first appearance under Famous Players will be in a series of pictures entitled "The Mystery of Miss Terry," under the direction of J. Searles Dawley.

Mr. Lasky also announced that Geraldine Farrar will appear in another big feature in the near future, under the direction of Cecil De Mille, and that Elsie Ferguson had been secured, exclusively, for a period of three years.

Napoleon Ficard, one of the stockholders of the International Amusement Co., which controls five moving picture theaters here, filed a bill for receivership in the Superior Court one day last week. Thomas A. Garibaldi, the chief defendant, is president of the company, and is charged with mismanagement. The bill states that the company was organized in 1914 with a capital of $200,000, and that the late John G. Garibaldi, father of the president of the company, and Walter P. Shaver were supposed to subscribe $105,000 in cash for stock. The bill states that they turned over property appraised at that amount, but that the appraisement was fraudulent and that the property was worth only $10,000.

Official British war pictures, taken near the front in France, will be shown at the Auditorium theater, Wednesday evening, April 11, under the management of Captain Baine, of the British army, who was severely wounded on the battle line. The proceeds will be devoted to the American Ambulance Field Service and will go directly to the Chicago unit of that service, which includes many Chicago boys. Men and women prominent in Chicago's society circles will engage in the sale of seats.

PATRIOTIC LOBBY DISPLAY.

The lobby of the Palace theater, 1214 Market street, Philadelphia, always one of the show places along this busy thoroughfare presents an even more handsome appearance now than ever before by reason of the new electric sign and artistic decorations which have been placed in position. These consist of the American flag and the city flag, and emblems of the Army and Navy—not one but many which have been arranged in striking vividness and made more prominent by numbers of various colored electric lights with red, white and blue colors. These colors are also the scheme of the new mentioned sign, which has been placed over the entire central lobby and the word "Palace" is spelled out in letters that are an artistic reminder of the praise for which the flags stand. The unusual lobby display can be seen by all of the many thousands of people who hourly pass the theater and at night the colors stand out as a beacon light of patriotism as far as the eye can reach. It is a display that is worth while, and many who have observed it are enthusiastic in their expressions of admiration at the riot the colors incite. This is another illustration of the progressiveness of the Stanley Company.

ALMA RUEBEN TO APPEAR WITH HART AGAIN.

Alma Rueben, whose Fine Arts contract has been taken over by Thomas H. Ince, is at present appearing in support of William S. Hart in his latest Triangle-Kay Bee play by J. G. Hawks. It will be remembered that Miss Rueben won high praise for her impersonation of the heroine of "Truthful Tulliver." At that time she was "loaned" by the Fine Arts company as a personal favor to Hart, who was so pleased with her appealing characterization that he immediately put in a requisition for Miss Rueben's services, following the reorganization of the Fine Arts company. The production in which they are now working is a picturesque tale of life in California during the "roaring forties," done in the vivid, incisive manner of Bret Harte.

"PEOPLE VS. JOHN DOE" NOW "GOD'S LAW."

Officials of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company have changed the title of the Universal State rights feature, "The People vs. John Doe," to "God's Law," and exhibitors and State rights buyers are now offered this remarkable film drama under its new name.

Buck Connor's Stories for Ince

Ince May Release Two Five-Reel Subjects a Week—William S. Hart Renews His Contract.

BUCK CONNORS, who is supposed to know all about Texas Rangers, will supply considerable material for forthcoming William S. Hart pictures on the Triangle Kay-Bee program. Thomas H. Ince has bought outright ten of his best stories, and has secured an option on the future output of this author.

Buck Connor's stories, which relate incidents of adventure in which he has participated during his long service with the Texas Rangers, are intended for immediate production. They are especially suited to the popular delineator of western roles, William S. Hart, who has signed a two-year contract which insures his appearance under the Ince-Triangle banner.

Wm. S. Hart.

There will be an innovation in the Triangle program for the week of May 20, when Thomas H. Ince will release two five-reel subjects simutaneously. Dorothy Dalton will be presented as star in a social study by the new Ince author, Lambert Hillyer, entitled "Unfaithful." The other, and no less important, half of the program for this week will present William Desmond in an adaptation from "One Week," a comedy by W. Carey Wonderly, entitled "The Marriage Bubble."

This is entirely in the nature of an experiment, and is projected by Producer Ince to test the attitude of the public in this matter.

"If there is any demand," says Mr. Ince, "for this new departure, the Triangle will act accordingly. This is purely a test case. Our plans only contemplate the double release on this particular week."

Great Electric Sign on the Ince Studios.

Charles Ray began work this week at the Ince studios on his third picture since the signing of his new contract, under the direction of Victor Schertzinger, the former composer and musical director. The cast in support of Ray includes Margery Wilson, Howard Hickman and Frank Fanning.

Dorothy Dalton is rehearsing, under the direction of Charles Miller, a Triangle Kay-Bee play by Monte M. Katterjohn. This is a story of Alaska in the early days, and presents Miss Dalton in a most forceful characterization. In support of Miss Dalton will appear Melbourne MacDowell, a new member of the Ince players, and Josephine Headley.

Several members of the Thomas H. Ince forces in Culver City were among the first to be summoned to the colors this week. Charles E. Wilson and Matthew Carney, sergeants in Company E, 7th California Infantry, have left for camp duty, and C. E. Collins, quartermaster on the unassigned list, is prepared to leave the studios at a moment's notice.

The fifth glass-inclosed stage to be built at the Culver City studios has been completed. This stage measures two hundred by fifty feet.

Exhibitors Protest

Hold Meeting to Discuss Method of Modifying Children's Ordinance.

MOTION Picture Exhibitors of Los Angeles are up in arms concerning a city ordinance which prohibits children under fourteen years of age from entering motion pictures theaters without their parents or guardian. This ordinance was adopted by the city council four years ago, but has never been enforced. Women's organizations, headed by the Friday Morning Club, have now started a crusade on the picture theaters in the city and petitioned the council to enforce this ordinance.

On April 1 N. A. Levy, Mutual branch manager, called a meeting and nearly one hundred exhibitors of this city assembled in the projection room of the Mutual Exchange at 825 South Olive street to discuss ways and means of defeating this ordinance..

During the session many exhibitors stated that parents throughout the city were protesting against the ordinance, which bars their children from attending all picture shows, whether educational or not, the parents also contending that attending picture shows often helped keep their children out of mischief and off the streets.

The exhibitors will meet again next Monday morning at ten o'clock to complete plans to present to the council, with which they will confer at eleven o'clock.

The committee will endeavor to convince the council that no dangers to children are to be found in reputable houses; on the contrary, they will argue that a good moving picture show is as safe and as educational as the class-room, and they will try to modify the ordinance so as to combine fullest protection to children and justice to moving picture theaters of reputation.

Charles H. Gates of the Symphony theater is chairman of the committee, which has as its other members, M. Gore of the Gore chain of houses, and M. R. Rolfe, manager of the Main Street picture theater.

At the Fox Studios.

Three Fox comedy companies started work last week on new productions at the Hollywood studios. They are under direction of Hank Mann, Charlie Parrott and Tom Mix.

In the Mann company, of which the leading comedian is Hank Mann himself, are Billy Mason, Max Asher, a new recruit, and three others not yet selected. This group is making a story which tells the mild adventures of a day in a laundry. We are told it is going to be one of the "cleanest" comedies ever produced.

Charles Parrott's company has Charlie Conklin once more in the leading role. Ann Ivers, who has played in several Parrott pictures, and Alf Goulding, a new laugh-maker, aid

Conklin in getting all the fun possible out of the vagaries of an insurance agent.

Tom Mix's group, which is once more working at Tom's Silver Lake "location," a western city specially erected for him, includes practically the same cast that worked in "Hearts and Saddles." Victor Potel, Pat Christman, Sid Jordan, Chet Ryan and Boss Glen contribute their aid, headed by Tom himself, and a leading lady not yet selected. The story concerns itself with happenings on the Mexican border.

Stage No. 3 on the Fox Hollywood "lot" has been set aside exclusively for the use of these comedy organizations. Twenty-five hundred square feet of additional floor space have been added to it, so that there will be plenty of room for these companies to erect all the "sets" necessary.

Three dramatic productions have been finished at the Hollywood studios under direction of R. A. Walsh, whose star is Miriam Cooper; Richard Stanton, with Dustin Farnum at the head of his cast and Otis Turner directing George Walsh. Frank Lloyd completed his picture last week. These four companies are now throwing new stories into shape and will start rehearsing within another week.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

It is announced this week that definite arrangements have been made whereby the Fine Arts-Triangle productions will come under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince, and will be produced at the Culver City studios.

The more important players, including Bessie Love, Alma Reubens, Mildred Harris and Kenneth Harlan, the leading man, together with George Stone and the Fine Art kiddies, will be retained. Paul Powell has also joined the directorial staff at Culver City.

With the withdrawal of D. W. Griffith from the Triangle organization, W. E. Keefe, who has been his personal representative and business manager for the past three years, has also severed his connection with that corporation. During the period that D. W. Griffith was general manager of the Reliance and Majestic Company, Mr. Keefe handled all publicity at the Fine Arts Studio in addition to his duties as Mr. Griffith's personal representative. He will soon leave to go East in the interest of "Intolerance." An investigation into the censorship situation in Kansas will be one of his duties. He has been handling the fight against censorship in a number of states and is largely responsible for organizing the exhibitors and winning the fight against censorship in San Francisco, Utah, Arizona and other states. He will handle matters pertaining to "Intolerance" until Mr. Griffith's return from Europe, which will be some time in June.

Margaret Gibson, who has appeared in Vitagraph, Ince, Horsley and Fox productions, has joined the Christie Film Company and will appear in one and two-reel comedies under direction of Al Christie. Successfully running the submarine blockade about England, David Wark Griffith, the former Triangle producer, arrived in England on the liner Baltic, according to advices received in Los Angeles this week.

Griffith sailed on the Baltic from New York on March 18 and the Baltic experienced no trouble in the submarine zone, although the huge White Star liner has frequently been reported as marked for destruction by the German submarine commanders.

Mr. Griffith will be present in person at the premier presentation of "Intolerance" at the Drury Lane theater in London. He will from there go to France, and with a cameraman take pictures on the battle line. Director McRae caught the reins of the horse and then pulled the animal to one side. Miss Hart was unconscious, her side and right leg having come in contact with the horse's hoofs. Manager Bershon acted as Mr. Magoon's guide and showed him everything that was worth seeing at the big plant.

The largest consignment of Cooper-Hewitt lights ever made to the Pacific Coast has been received at Universal City to augment the large supply already on hand for use in making pictures at night or in inclement weather. This latest consignment involved a cost of approximately $50,000.

These lights are termed "elevator wings" and by their use rays can be thrown on a set from almost any height or any angle, as the contrivance is in three sections, with the side wings adjustable to any position or height. The middle tier of the lights also can be elevated with a tip either forward or backward.

With these new lights Universal City is equipped to make a number of pictures at any time without being dependent for interiors upon climatic conditions. The film capital already has three immense waterproof studios with a huge floor space, in addition to thousands of square feet of open stages merely covered with diffusers.

Lois Weber Honor Guest.

A testimonial of appreciation and affection was tendered to Lois Weber, Universal actress-author-director, at the Alexandria Hotel recently, where the members of the Weber company, and especially those who played in her feature production, "The People vs. John Doe," gave a dinner in her honor. Charles Nagel, maitre d'hotel, who has known Miss Weber for a number of years personally, took charge of the arrangements for the dinner, which was given in the Indian Grill. The room was lavishly decorated and place cards bearing the photograph of the honored guest were provided.

Miss Weber spoke feelingly of the work in the making of big pictures and of the loyalty displayed toward her by the members of the company, and she declared that each one individually has a place in her heart.

Those present were Evelyn Selbie, Maude George, Mattie Witting, Claire McDowell, Olive Snaman, Mr. and Mrs. Burton King, Arthur Forde, Charles H. Mailes, Harry C. DeMore, Hal Brooks, George Berrell, Fred Jackson, Al Siegler, Willie Marks and Harry DeRoy.

Josephine Stevens

JOSEPHINE STEVENS, a charming girl with great big "boo'ful" eyes, and whose middle name should by right be "Personality," will make her premier screen appearance in a Paramount production, when she will play opposite Roscoe ("Fatty") Arbuckle, in his forthcoming Paramount - Arbuckle comedy, "The Butcher Boy," a two-reeler which will be released to all exhibitors irrespective of the exclusive franchise idea of the Paramount program.

Josephine Stevens.

By all the rights that any person could ever enlist to aid them to come well indorsed to the stage or screen, Miss Stevens gets them most rightfully. The daughter of Benjamin D. Stevens, the late general manager of the Klaw and Erlanger interests, and Helen Beresford, also well known in the world of the theater, Miss Stevens by birth came by theatric rights.

Miss Stevens is 19 years old. She received her early education at the Blessed Sacrament Convent in New York city, later taking a finishing course at the Convent of Mercy, near Philadelphia. She was a brilliant child in her school days and was the pride of her family because she "always stood at the head of her classes." Her first stage work was with Robert Hilliard in "The Argyle Case."

Her second venture was with Henry Miller in "Daddy Long Legs," in which she played "Sally." After a season in this production she played the part of "Mary MacTavish" in "Captain Kidd, Jr.", on the road, and also in a sketch called "What's Her Name." She has appeared in but one screen production, and her real debut will be with Mr. Arbuckle in "The Butcher Boy," which Paramount will release shortly.

Miss Stevens has a beautiful head of coal black hair, a wonderful pair of big black eyes, and most expressive lips, the kind that any screen artist would enviously wish for. She is medium in stature and beautifully formed, a clever dancer and the most spirited mortal that "Fatty" has ever had opposite him.

GRIFFITH TO START PRODUCTION IN MAY.

A cable from D. W. Griffith received at his New York offices announces his safe arrival in London. It is understood that his activities on the other side will keep him there about a month and that he is expected back in this country by May 1, when he will immediately commence work on his first subject to be released by Artcraft Pictures. It is also learned that Mr. Griffith will undoubtedly stage his initial Artcraft release in California, where his most famous spectacles were produced.

Urban Takes Horsley's Bayonne Studio

Big Plant Now Being Extensively Altered—Urban Pictures to Be Produced There.

CHARLES URBAN, of Kinemacolor fame, announces that he has acquired the extensive studios and laboratories formerly operated by David Horsley at Bayonne, N. J., and that the plant is now undergoing extensive alterations and equipment of the most approved machinery, covering every phase of film work. Mr. Urban has devoted many months in tours of inspection of various plants in the vicinity of New York, but for accessibility and convenience for carrying on the manufacture of films and producing of pictures, and has decided in favor of this plant as the base of operations. All "Urban information" and "Urban Colorfilms" will be made there. A large proportion of the plant will contain an extensive installation for the manufacture of the "Urban Spiragraph" discs—the "Movies for the Home."

"During my recent stay in the East," said Mr. Urban, "I have observed the methods of working in various plants. The slipshod systems and carlessness displayed in most of these works, resulting in defective output, the waste of time, materials and disappointing results to producers and directors, has decided me, for the benefit of the general film business, to give to those who will seek it the benefit of our organization and efficiency of our staff and machinery and general technical knowledge of the art.

"Fortunately I have secured the services of many of my former employees, who received their training in London, and who will direct the staff of each department. The present capacity of our film plant is 800,000 feet weekly, the buildings, however, allowing of extending this output to double the above stated capacity."

Nothing but the superior "Urban Quality" will emanate from this factory. The plant will be operated by the Urban Spiragraph Corporation, under the personal supervision of Mr. Urban, who will undertake to produce printing and developing of the highest order for the trade, at reasonable prices. The laboratories will commence operations on April 9 next.

The spacious studios (capacity for five companies) will be ready May 1 next.

Olive Thomas with Triangle

THE announcement that Thomas H. Ince has engaged Olive Thomas, the popular young star of the Ziegfeld Midnight Frolic and featured beauty of a late edition of the Follies, to create important roles in the forthcoming Kay Bee productions, has aroused decided interest.

Miss Thomas is now in California, and has already been assigned the lead in one of the first plays that Ince will do under his new arrangement with Triangle.

Olive Thomas.

Born in Pittsburgh about twenty years ago, Olive Thomas became a reigning favorite on Broadway from the night—or morning—that the Zeigfeld Frolic opened, about two years ago, and with the exception of one season, when she played the January girl in the 1916 premiere of the Follies, she has been the bright star of the revels that have attracted thousands to the top of the New Amsterdam theater.

A brunette of the vivacious type, Miss Thomas has gray eyes and golden brown hair that screens unusually well. Despite all of the attention of which she has been the center, she is said to be as simple and charming in manner as though she had never known success.

Miss Thomas made her screen debut a few months ago with Irene Fenwick in the Paramount production of "A Girl Like That," in which she created an excellent impression. Advance notices from the coast intimate that Ince will cast her in roles that will give full play to her sunny and whimsical personality.

New Fire Rules

Draft of Proposed Regulations Discussed at Meeting of N. A. M. P. I. Committee.

AT A meeting of the Executive Committee of the Fire Prevention Regulations and the Insurance Committee of the National Association, held on Wednesday, April 4, a tentative draft of the new regulations was discussed and it was decided, in view of the importance of many of the changes, to send a copy of the same to all committee members as well as to the members of each branch of the industry represented in the National Association.

The regulations apply to the handling, use or storage of all motion picture film of an improved, slow burning character, whether in the form of negatives, raw stock, finished product, discarded scrap, or used film. The only exceptions are buildings or structures other than studios in which less than the equivalent fire standard reels are kept stored or handled.

One of the provisions pertains to exchanges, and provides for additional sprinkler protection in the fire vaults, which must be subdivided with a sprinkler head in each. Every studio, laboratory or exchange will be required to appoint a safety inspector, who must be familiar with the rules and requirements and with the importance of fire prevention and with any local laws or ordinances. The inspector must, as a part of his duty, see that the rules are observed and that all employes are instructed as to fire hazards and the proper handling of motion picture film.

TOM BRET JOINS METRO-ROLFE SCENARIO STAFF.

Tom Bret is a newcomer in the scenario department at the Metro-Rolfe studios. Mr. Bret until recently was with Vitagraph. Tom Bret is the author of "Acting for the Movies." He is the man who woke up one morning about two years ago to find himself famous as the first scenario writer to receive a curtain call on Broadway.

Mr. Bret first became affiliated with Metro through writing the subtitles for the Drew comedies, the first of these being "The Pest," the first Drew comedy to be shown at the Rialto theater. For five years he was publicity man for the American Correspondent Film Company, and official lecturer for the International Correspondence schools at Scranton, traveling 120,000 miles, and lecturing in nearly every city east of the Mississippi. A native of Scranton, he did his first newspaper work there, then becoming city editor of the Wilkesbarre News, in the sister city. Later he became copy editor of the Philadelphia North American, and as he was for a short time an actor, he has brought to the screen both the actor's and the writer's point of view. Mr. Bret is at present at work on "Betty Takes a Hand," a forthcoming feature in which Emmy Wehlen will star.

AGNES VERNON DROPS SOMETHING.

Agnes Vernon, Universal star, has dropped her praenomen and will be known in the future as "Brownie" Vernon. She is one of the most popular players at the studios at Universal City, and because of her dark brown eyes, luxurious brown hair, and her partiality for brown raiment, she has received the nickname "Brownie" from her friends. This led her to adopt the sobriquet and drop her first name entirely.

"Nobody ever called me Agnes," she said, "so I thought it was best to discard the name I was christened for the more melodious name that had been wished on me. From now on Agnes Vernon is a person of the past, but 'Brownie' Vernon is very much alive and working hard before the camera every day."

CLIVE IS MAXINE ELLIOTT'S LEADING MAN.

Henry Clive, who will be seen for the first time on the screen as leading man for Maxine Elliott in her initial production, is a recruit from vaudeville. He returned directly from South Africa for this engagement. Prior to going to England two years ago Clive was well known on the big American vaudeville circuits, and he will be recognized by a host of screen patrons who will remember him from his days in variety.

CONSTANCE TALMADGE IN NEW YORK.

Miss Constance Talmarge, little sister of Norma Talmadge, and pleasantly remembered for her splendid work in "Intolerance," arrived in town yesterday accompanied by her mother. She had been under contract to David W. Griffith and appeared in many of the Griffith films until the dissoluton of his company. Miss Talmadge has made no definite plans for the future.

Edward Earle, Actor

ALTHOUGH he is still a very young man, Edward Earle, who plays the lead in "The Great Bradley Mystery," an Apollo-Art drama, has had more experience on the stage than probably any of the leading men of today. His stage career covers a period of sixteen years. Naturally he began very early. He started in a Toronto stock company when a boy, playing juveniles at a salary of five a week. His first New York appearance was in "Sweet Kitty Bellairs." Later he joined Mary Mannering in "Glorious Betsy," and since then his career has been with one star after another in Broadway successes.

Edward Earle.

His screen career began two years ago with Famous Players. Later he joined Pathe, and went from there to Edison, where he starred in features for some time. His recent acquisition to the Apollo force of players is considered a great triumph of that comparatively new company.

Writers on motion pictures have commented often on the naturalness of Mr. Earle's acting. In his characterizations there is no suspicion of "acting."

In "The Great Bradley Mystery," the Art Drama in which Mr. Earle will next be seen by photoplay audiences, he has a splendid role. Alma Hanlon plays the lead in this picture, which was written by Edward Ellis, the renowned actor-author, who also plays an important role. This picture will be released April 5.

EXAMPLES OF C. O. D. ABUSES.

Much has been said by exchange managers about the abuse of the C. O. D. privileges by exhibitors ordering film who refuse to take up their order when presented by the express company. Louis M. Swaab, of Philadelphia, Pa., calls attention to a recent experience with the Carolina Amusement Company which refused a C. O. D. order, shipped at considerable inconvenience to Mr. Swaab and upon which he had to pay $15 to recover the goods. The full particulars of the case are not known to us, but the neglect of the purchaser to answer correspondence on the subject is particularly aggravating to Mr. Swaab.

STATE RIGHTS BUYERS VISIT ARROW.

The Arrow Film Corporation, suite 1205, Times Building, New York City, has opened a "Visitors' Register," in which are recorded the name and address of every person who calls to inquire about the rights to Hall Caine's famous State rights feature, "The Deemster."

Prominent among the callers of the past week were H. P. Wolfberg, the Mid-West film magnate, with headquarters in Pittsburgh; Louis B. Maver of Boston, who bought the New England rights to "The Deemster"; W. S. Butterfield, Michigan buyer, with headquarters in Battle Creek and Detroit, and Joseph F. Lee, New York.

LORETTA BLAKE IN "ADVENTURES OF SHORTY."

Loretta Blake, who has been appearing in support of Shorty Hamilton and Yerza Dayne, in the Mutual series, "Adventures of Shorty Hamilton," is the featured woman player in the thirteenth story, "Shorty Reduces the High Cost of Living." Miss Blake plays Ellen Drake, a member of the secret service. Anita Keller, the character portrayed by Miss Davne, does not appear in this story of the series. Miss Blake first appeared under the Mutual banner some time ago, when she played opposite Henry Walthall, in "Ghosts." She then acted in Ince and Famous Players productions before her contract with the Monogram.

New Moss Theater

Will Be Located on Northwest Corner of Broadway and 181st Street, New York—To Cost One Million and Seat 3,012 Persons.

PLANS have been filed for B. S. Moss' new million-dollar theater at 181st street and Broadway, New York City. Excavating and leveling are now in progress and construction of the building proper will be under way in six or eight weeks. The theater, which will be devoted to high class entertainment, the same as the other theaters under Mr. Moss' control, will be opened about Thanksgiving Day, 1917, and will be named after a United States President, as in the case of Moss' Jefferson and Hamilton theaters. The name has not yet been determined upon, but conjecture favors the Wilson theater. The theater will be two stories high, taking in 150 feet on Broadway, 200 feet on 181st street, 170 feet on Bennett avenue and 201 feet on the north, an area of 13 city lots. Two large and spacious entrances, with Italian marble, will open on Broadway and another on 181st street. The capacity will be 3,012.

The interior of the theater will be in French Renaissance, with the coloring in old rose, French gray, ivory and gold. Furnishings of suppressed and tasteful splendor will be in evidence throughout, and every comfort of modern ingenuity will make itself felt. The exterior will be white tile beautifully ornamental. The seats will be large and comfortable, and arrangements for the rest rooms and other comforts have been amply provided for and will be furnished and decorated in keeping with the interior of the house. Particular attention has been paid to the heating and ventilation of the theater and a scheme has been devised whereby the atmosphere will be changed every two minutes, a volume of fresh air being pumped into the auditorium equal to the number of cubic feet of air contained in the theater.

Exits are particularly provided to dismiss a capacity audience in two minutes. Owing to the large space covered by the building the last row of seats will not be further away from the stage than the center row of the ordinary size theater. A cooling plant of the latest and most improved type will be installed, making it possible to maintain an agreeable atmosphere under all weather conditions.

Not alone have the patrons' comfort been provided for, but the artists "back stage" will have dressing rooms and conveniences, along with a library and a gymnasium, bringing to the player the ease and comfort of his favorite club. When three shows a day are given, as will be the policy of the new house, the actor is in the theater the greater part of his working time, and Mr. Moss feels that all these comforts will be reflected in the performer's work before the audience.

Arrangements have been made for a larg symphony orchestra with one of the best known musical directors in the country. A pipe organ, said to be the largest built, will be installed.

William H. McElfatrick, the architect, has paid particular attention to the arrangements of the stage, the acoustics and sight lines, and after his many years' experience in designing theaters all over the United States, he is convinced that Moss' 181st Street theater will be the most perfect theater of its kind erected in this country.

WILLETTS WITH ARROW.

Clarence Willetts, the well-known theatrical and film man, has joined the Arrow Film Corporation as special representative and is at present making a whirlwind tour of the South. Mr. Willetts will return to New York within a few days.

New War Film Syndicate

Organized to Gather Authentic American War News Film—To Have Main Offices in New York and Will State Right Its Pictures.

WAR talk and military and naval activities have been productive of an independent American war news weekly, which is to be issued in serials of one reel each week, carrying American war news exclusively. This weekly is to be assembled and released by a new concern called the Cinema War News Syndicate.

The syndicate has made application for charter with the Secretary of State, and has filed registration papers for the transaction of its general business in New York City.

Among the officers and department managers of the organization are Frederick W. Brooker, president; Robert R. Reynolds, field and editing director; C. Edgar Burton, general sales manager, and J. F. Natteford, in charge of publicity.

Mr. Brooker, the president, is a New York manufacturer, and he enters this new field to inject business policies and economical principles into the cinema world.

Capt. Robert R. Reynolds.

In Captain Robert R. Reynolds the Cinema Syndicate brings forward an amalgamation of soldier, author, journalist and outdoor sportsman, who is familiar with the producing end of the motion picture industry. As a former captain of cavalry he is widely acquainted in army circles, and his varied and extensive accomplishments should peculiarly fit him to the requirements embodied in the field directorship of his battery of "camerаspondents."

Mr. Burton has qualified as a motion picture sales director, while Mr. Natteford comes to the organization with a reputation as a breezy Western newspaper writer. Mr. Natteford will also act as personal press representative to Captain Reynolds.

The general offices of the syndicate are located in the Longacre Building, New York City. Offices will also be maintained in Washington, D. C., and Chicago. It is reported that cameramen have been arranged for covering all the important military bases.

The news syndicate will dispose of its releases on a State right or territorial distribution basis, and will co-operate with its independent distributors by extensive publicity through the trade journals. Illustrated and tinted titles, pleasing photographic effects and tinted scenes, where occasion requires, will somewhat feature this weekly war news release, according to the plans of the organization.

JULIUS TIMER DIRECTING "MOTOY" PICTURES.

Julius E. Timer has left New York for Chicago to take up his duties as supervising director of the "Motoy" pictures, which are made by Toyland Films, Inc. Mr. Timer will produce these animated toy pictures on the five stages that comprise the Toyland company's studio in Chicago.

Before becoming affiliated with the Toyland company Mr. Timer was general manager of the Ideal Film studio and laboratories. Previous experience was with the Combitone Pictures Corporation, Fox, Universal and Biograph.

The "Motoy" pictures are distributed by the Peter Pan Films, Inc., whose offices are at 727 Seventh avenue, New York. They are being distributed on a territorial rights basis.

Photoplay League Plans

Proposes to Act as a "Board of Review" and Will Assist Exploitation of Pictures Approved.

FOR several months past the Photoplay League has been organizing and laying its plans, and it is now ready to launch its project and engage in a nation-wide campagn to promote the exhbition and increase the patronage of the best pictures. Among its members and patrons are to be found the names of Mrs. Charles Dana Gibson, E. H. Sothern, Julia Marlowe, Mrs. Schuyler N. Warren, J. G. Phelps Stokes, Cornelius Vanderbilt, Mrs. Potter Palmer, Mrs. Willard D. Straight, Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, Mrs. Ogden Armour, Norman Hapgood, all men and women nationally and socially prominent.

The league has formed an independent committee numbering among its members a list of the above named people, to whom the manufacturers and producers send such films as they desire for the committee's "recommendation." This "recommendation" the producer seeks, as the liberal, broad-minded judgment of impartial, independent persons. The list of picture plays already reviewed and recommended by the committee include both long and short, expensive and inexpensive films. The recommendation of a film depends solely upon its merits, with reference to good plot, execution and clean story.

In this instance it is well to state that the Photoplay League has no affiliation nor connection whatever with any of the producing or manufacturing interests.

In an interview we have had with Frank Sascelles, director of the Photoplay League, with regard to the views of the exhibitors whose co-operation has been sought, he states: "In nearly every instance, however, when the matter is first broached, they are extremely skeptical. This is the logical reception we must expect at first, for the exhibitor knows from experience and to his sorrow and annoyance that in every case local or national committees of various leagues, clubs, churches and other organizations, who approach him apparently as we do, have but one idea—to criticize his methods of conducting his affairs, and insert by such criticism destructive element to any business, without offering any substitute or help to remedy even a possible, or from their point of view, imaginary fault.

"The co-operation offered by the league to the exhibitor is purely constructive. From the exhibitor's standpoint, we offer ourselves as a shield between destructive criticism and himself. Instead of endeavoring to educate the exhibitor, our effort is to educate the moving picture goers to patronize the theater which offers the best obtainable in moving pictures, other things, of course, being equal.

"We realize the exhibitor in many instances is unable to review pictures before he secures them and in most cases makes his selection or choice on the representation of the salesmen, or advertisements. We are sure we will be able to greatly assist the exhibitor, as our list of recommended films includes a sufficient number for him to select an entire program from any exchange he likes.

"Our lines along which we ask the exhibitor to co-operate are as follows: Select one day a week, or fortnight if more convenient, show a picture or full program in his theater which has been recommended by the league, the day he may designate as 'League Day.'

"We naturally do not expect an exhibitor to make even this slight concession in the management of his business without endeavoring to equalize his efforts along these lines. Our connections, through the patrons and organizers of the league, with schools, societies and so forth, enable us to stimulate, with his co-operation, an interest in his theater, which in all cases results in increased patronage.

"The assistance which the exhibitor is able to give us is by exhibiting on his screen a publicity film furnished by the league without cost, which, in a short but comprehensive manner describes the effort of the league to his patrons and show short examples in the proper classification of the various style of films we are recommending."

JOHN SAINPOLIS JOINS APOLLO PICTURES CO.

John Sainpolis, for years one of the most prominent leading men on the American stage, has been signed up by Apollo Pictures Corporation to appear in features on the Art Dramas program. The actor's first appearance with his new company will be in "The Mystic Hour," a psychic photodrama written by Agnes Fletcher Bain. In this he will play the part of Clavering, a millionaire roue of eccentric disposition. Mr. Sainpolis' latest screen appearance was in the Paramount production of "Sapho," in which he played the leading male role, opposite Pauline Frederick.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of April 8 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"The Cost of Hatred" at the Strand.

THE Strand Theater celebrated its third anniversary the week of April 8. Kathlyn Williams and Theodore Roberts were seen in a Lasky production entitled "The Cost of Hatred," in which play the co-stars have created unusual characterizations. The scenes were photographed in old Mexico and California. The last part of the "Pendleton Round-Up" pictures, and the initial presentation of "The Third Ingredient," the first picture of the famous O. Henry stories series, were also shown. The characters in the O. Henry adaptation are portrayed by Mildred Manning, Alice Mann and Frank Glendon. Andre Enrico, Nadine Legot and Wyerd A. Moore were the soloists.

"The Easiest Way" at the Rialto.

Clara Kimball Young, in "The Easiest Way," headed a program at the Rialto, which included the sixth instalment of the Salisbury pictures, a solicited comedy, and the Literary Digest of the screen.

When produced by David Belasco, "The Easiest Way" was one of the most pronounced successes the American stage has ever seen. The Selznick Pictures production, directed by Albert Capellani, adds many new and interesting features to the original version. Chief among those additions is a new ending, contributed by M. Walter himself. The cast includes Joseph Kilgour, Rockcliffe Fellowes, Louise Bates Cleo Desmond and others.

Mary Ball and Helen Jeffery were the soloists.

"Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," at the Broadway.

The Vitagraph feature, "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," is in its second week at the Broadway Theater.

Eighty-first Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street theater, George M. Cohan in "Broadway Jones" was shown for the entire week.

Frank Beresford, Technical Director

AFTER touring the country with Irving after staging Fritzi Scheff musical comedies for Charles B. Dillingham for four years, and after sundry other stage and picture experiences, including the technical direction of three large studio plants in the East, Frank S. Beresford has assumed the position of technical director of the Empire-Mutual studios. His force of artists and workmen is now at work at the Glendale plant of the Empire All-Star Company getting ready for the forthcoming picture in which Ann Murdock will appear, her first production, the Charles Frohman stage success, "The Outcast," having already been partly completed.

Frank Beresford.

Frank Beresford began his stage career as an actor in the Belasco and Frohman companies several years ago. He took up the technical side from choice and soon became known as a coming young man in the art of staging theatrical productions. He put on operas for the Aborns and vaudevile acts for Jesse Lasky and Mort Singer. For the latter he produced many musical comedy successes in Chicago and wrote variety sketches in the meantime. When Ned Weyburn wanted an assistant in the production of musical comedy pieces on Broadway he picked Mr. Beresford. "The Midnight Sons" was under the stage management of Mr. Beresford.

Film Export Notes

By F. G. Ortega.

CHILE is a good market at the present time for moving pictures and projecting machines. Up to a year ago practically the whole business was controlled from Argentine, and all the Buenos Aires exchanges of any importance had branches in the principal Chilean towns. Although this condition prevails today to a large extent, there seems to be a movement on foot to break away from the southern metropolis, and a few local houses have begun to buy film and supplies direct from this country. We give below the import duty on film in Chile:

Six pesos gold per legal kilo, which is equal to $0.993 United States currency per pound. Duty is also assessed on the weight of the wrapping and container. Duty on posters: one peso gold per kilo, gross weight, equal to $0.165 United States currency per pound.

Our correspondent in Buenos Aires, Severo Norsa, is on the warpath again. This time he is after the scalp of some export managers who seem to be paying very slight attention the important mater of titles. The Spanish of some of the titles, he claims, were a revelation to the Argentinians, who did not know whether to laugh or to cry at the "massacre of the language of Cervantes."

To avoid costly mistakes, our producers and exporters should not deviate from the following rule:

Always entrust to natives the translation of titles into Spanish, or any other foreign tongue. If an American, a Frenchman or a German should tell you that he has lived for twenty years in Latin-America, or that he knows Spain by heart, listen to him with due respect—but let the titles be translated by a native. Another thing: Be sure that the man you choose is a competent translator, or, better still, a trained journalist.

It should be remembered that "Cabiria" failed in several Latin-American Republics on account of the titles. Composed and revised with the utmost care by d'Annuncio himself, one of the greatest authors and an undisputed living master of the written word, they were laughed at by cultured audiences, who found themselves simply unable to restrain their mirth. If this could happen when translating from one Latin language into another, it is needless to analyze the degree of rottenness that a Spanish version of an English title can attain.

There is a great demand for serials in Portugal, Mexico and Uruguay. Only the early productions of this character have been shown there. Most of the business in Portugal is done through the Barcelona exchanges, despite the fact that there are five or six progressive local houses—one of them with a capital of 2,000,000 pesetas ($400,000). Uruguay, "the country of the supreme dollar" (their dollar is worth more than ours), is a commercial extension of Argentine, and the Buenos Aires dealers control the market. Mexico buys direct. Full and reliable information regarding these fields can be obtained from CINE-MUNDIAL, our Spanish international organ.

Argentine is rapidly forging ahead as a producing country. During the past two years a few isolated attempts were made, and, although the films were a success from a financial standpoint, they were poor in technique, direction and, it must be admitted, also in plot and artistic treatment. Moreover, the themes selected were extremely local in character, and lacked broad appeal.

Judging by the work done since the beginning of the present year by the two or three companies that have adopted a consistent policy of regular production, there seems to be little doubt that they will have to be reckoned with in the near future.

Martinez & Gunche, the pioneers whose first successful production, "Nobleza Gaucha," made a clear profit of over $200,000 in less than a year of exploitation—and the film is still being shown—will offer ten feature subjects during 1917.

However, the enormous profits derived from "Nobleza Gaucha" cannot be taken as a basis for calculation; the novelty of seeing native artists on the screen has worn out, and the company will have to compete from now on in the real merits of its production, with the American and European brands.

Two prints of the Randolph Film Corporation's serial, "Gloria's Romance," have been sold for Mexico. The demand in Latin-America for serial or series film is very strong at this time. American manufacturers have a great opportunity for extra revenue by catering to this market.

Selling film in Latin-America these days seems to be only a matter of advertising, and then receiving cash in advance against shipping documents in New York.

British Notes

"TOM BROWN'S SCHOOLDAYS" made a big impression upon the trade when it was first screened at the Alhambra in the early days of last year. The International Exclusives, Ltd., have received signal honor of a command performance of the film at Buckingham Palace, and this took place on Saturday, February 24, in the State Ball Room, on the occasion of an entertainment by their majesties to a large number of wounded officers connected with the overseas forces.

Among those present at the performance were their majesties the King and Queen, Queen Alexandra, Princess Mary and the Duke of Connaught, and the ladies and gentlemen of the household. A temporary iron operating box was erected under the grand organ loft, and the screen artistically draped and banked with ferns, showed a fine, clear picture.

The distinguished audience thoroughly enjoyed the film, and were quick to appreciate the many humorous incidents.

At the close of the entertainment the King and Queen entertained their visitors to tea in the household dining room.

Saturday's performance at Buckingham Palace of "Tom Brown's Schooldays" should be of particular interest to the trade, in view of the fact that it is the first occasion upon which the King has commanded the screening of a film play, although on many previous occasions subjects such as the official war films, the Scott Antartic pictures and others have been shown before him.

The manufacture of film stock in Great Britain has received a temporary check by a fire which demolished the greater part of the British Film Stock Company's works last week. The works are just over the Surrey border from London, and have been working at double pressure in the manufacture of positive and negative base ever since the first shipping difficulties between Great Britain and America arose. The damage is assessed at close upon a quarter of a million dollars, and is, unfortunately, of a nature that cannot be speedily rectified.

Arising out of the Government's declared intention of prohibiting unnecessary imports into the country, several newspapers have printed speculative lists of articles to come under the shipping ban, and foreign films are freely mentioned. As yet, however, there is no reliable information available, but it is significant to note that, while prohibition is unlikely, many American houses in London are prepared for restricted supplies in the near future.

Corroborative evidence of our dependency upon foreign supplies is, by the way, furnished once again in the Board of Trade import returns for January. The total value is £88,658, made up as to £80,322 from the U. S. A., £4,568 from france, and £3,768 from other countries. The American figures are an increase of 30 per cent over those for January, 1915.

The films, "The Answer" and "Little Meena's Romance," were the subject of an unsuccessful police court prosecution at Liverpool last week. Two policemen walked into a moving picture theater, saw the subjects, shook their heads gravely, and prosecuted the manager for exhibiting indecent pictures. After the magistrate had seen the films the charge was dismissed. The right of chief constables to visit halls and object to suggestive or objectionable incidents in moving pictures is one that is rarely used, and, except in Liverpool, never abused.

A London renter, just returned from Paris, informs me that from February 22 all theaters, both stage and screen, and numerous cafes, will be compelled to close down four days in each week in the French capital. Upon the remaining three days not more than five performances may be given. The closure is consequent upon an order from the Department of the Interior.

The sixth sitting of the Cinema Commission at Westminster under the presidency of the Bishop of Birmingham dealt on Monday with the evidence of two schoolmasters. The first, who came from Liverpool, damned with faint praise the suggestion that the moving picture should be employed in schools for instruction in geography, natural history and kindred subjects. A London headmaster told the Commission that he had never seen a film that could be called obscene, while the most vulgar and stupid items he had ever witnessed were not nearly so objectionable as some "turns" he had seen on the music hall stage. He suggested that the education authorities might take out the children from the schools to the theaters for a cinematograph lesson of suitable subjects, say, once a week. Payment upon a basis of one penny per head would probably be acceptable by the managers if the visits were made out of the ordinary matinee hours.

The libel action against the Trans-Atlantic Film Co., Ltd., by Lucia Princess Toussoun, arising out of the serial film "The Purple Iris" (in America "Under the Crescent") was heard in the King's Bench Division last Friday. The Princess claimed damages for libel contained in the film and advertising matter, the latter stating that her "amazing experiences in the Royal Harem had been re-enacted for the Trans-Atlantic Film Co. She had suffered injury to her reputation and annoyance through these statements. After the plaintiff's evidence had been heard her counsel announced that certain matters had transpired which made it difficult for him to proceed with the case. The judge gave a verdict, with costs, in favor of the Trans-Atlantic Co.

No libelles is so vehement as the bigoted puritan. In this country at the present moment his favorite and fashionable weakness is the moving picture. I have a deskful of pamphlets, circulars and letters distributed by different bodies, religious and otherwise, each pointing the accusing finger at the film as the root cause of all juvenile wrong doing. It is the sincere hope of the industry that the Cinema Commission will either end or mend this annual campaign of calumny, but when it is accompanied by such statements as the following, sandwiched between prayerbooks: "Many unmentionable evils are rampant in the cinemas which we cannot describe in public print. Our readers will understand if we quote certain passages of Scripture"—it is the sympathy, not the censure of the trade that is demanded.

If one-half of the rumors credited with coming along the wires from the States are to be believed, the San Francisco earthquake must have been a tame affair compared with the state of the industry in America. It creates endless chopping and changing on this side amongst the agents of the manufacturers involved. It has happened not once or twice, but several times, when an agent has organized his distributing services here that his company has amalgamated or decided to release under another program already represented in England. In one recent instance an agent knew nothing of the changes until his goods were being advertised by his neighbor across the street.

Australian Notes

IT IS understood in film circles here that in the forthcoming revision of the tariff the Federal Government may give consideration to the duty on imported film. There is a possibility of this duty being reduced, though whether the Federal Treasurer would consent to such a move, in view of the financial requirements of the Government, remains to be seen.

Any alteration of the duty on film will undoubtedly arouse considerable controversy in the picture world. Some film concerns with strong financial backing may oppose any reduction of the duty, on the ground that the present barrier prevents the importation of cheap, undesirable films, leaving the field open for the big combinations, with their high standards of pictures. On the other hand, firms here which have to buy imported films, and are not the representatives of producing concerns, find the duty a heavy burden, and will probably welcome any reduction.

Fox pictures were released in Sydney first through the Waddington Circuit, then through Hoyt's, and now it is said that they will be released by Union Theaters, Ltd. (Australasian Films, Ltd.). The first subject to be screened under the new arrangements will be "Under Two Flags," which is to be presented at the Crystal Palace this month.

"Australia's Peril" is the name under which W. Franklyn Barrett will produce an Australian war film, to aid in the Recruiting Campaign. The production of this film has been sanctioned by the State Recruiting Committee. Mr. Barrett is well known in New York and the Eastern States, having been representative there for Fraser Films, Ltd., a few years ago. He recently produced a six-part production, "The Pioneers."

Picture theaters in Queensland have to give the Federal authorities a security of £200 that they will pay the Amusement Tax. Failing this, penny stamps must be affixed to each shilling ticket sold.

"A Daughter of the Gods," at Brisbane, showed to capacity houses for eight nights, and the receipts were only a few pounds short of record business.

The Film Censor at Wellington, New Zealand, passed the Fox subject, "The Kreutzer Sonata," for exhibition, providing that no person under the (apparent) age of twenty-one should be admitted to the theater while it was being shown. Naturally, under these circumstances, the film did record business.

In an interview with the Moving Picture World representative, Mr. Lipman, who arranged the Australian rights for Mutual productions, said he was highly satisfied with the way in which the Mutual films had been received by the Australian exhibitors. He said that he thought the open market booking principle would eventually come into vogue in this country, and that the Progressive Service (who handle the Mutual productions) were finding that this method worked very well. The Service supplies any showman with films on the open booking principle, with the exception of the Mutual Star Productions, which must be booked in the series. The exhibitor in the suburbs of Sydney will not have anything to do with pictures that have not been released at first-class houses in the city. The Mutual features are released at two of the continuous theaters on the Waddington circuit, and are proving good drawing cards. Mr. Lipman went on to say that the Progressive Exchange had the most complete distributing organization in Australasia, having agents at various points in the East Indies.

Having practically finished the business which brought him to Australia, Mr. Lipman is leaving for America next month, and will resume activities in New York with the Overseas Buying Agency.

A new theater in course of construction in Balmain, a suburb of Sydney, will seat over two thousand, and the proprietors are striving hard to eclipse other suburban theaters in the matter of equipment. The theater has been dedicated to the district: "To amuse you and entertain you under the most modern and hygienic conditions." The operating plant for the "Amusu" will be the most up-to-date possible. The district power supply, alternating current, will be converted to direct by a seven K. W. Martin rotary, whilst two Simplex type "S" motor-driven equipments will dissolve the subjects from one machine to the other, so that an uninterrupted screen effect can be obtained. Ingranic dimmers are to go in the auditorium light circuits to dim the house lights over a period of eight seconds from full brilliance to black-out, which period is to cover the opening of the proscenium curtains. A Radium Gold Fibre screen, specially imported, has been installed. A special ventilation system is also a feature. Undoubtedly, when finished, the "Amusu" will be one of the most artistic picture theaters in New South Wales.

Douglas Fairbanks' next picture, "The Matrimaniac," is scheduled for early release at the Crystal Palace, Sydney. Fairbanks, as in America, now shares honors with Chaplin and Pickford as a drawing card. In fact, one big suburban exhibitor says that "Doug" has secured him more regular patrons than any other star.

The Chief Secretary, Mr. Fuller, on the recommendation of the Board of Censors, has prohibited the screening in New South Wales of the film entitled "Smashing the Vice Trust." This is the first feature banner by the new board. "The Unborn," which was censored by the police in this state, is doing tremendous business in the smaller towns in Queensland.

OLIVE TELL IN WARWICK PICTURE.

Olive Tell, one of the most beautiful young women in theatrical America, was Harry Rapf's selection for the leading woman in support of Robert Warwick in his Selznick-Pictures production, "The Silent Master." Miss Tell's career has been brief, but remarkably successful from the outset. After graduating from a dramatic school three years ago she played a short engagement with a stock company, and won immediate recognition. She was engaged to play opposite Julian Eltinge in "Cousin Lucy," and later was seen with Robert Edeson in "Husband and Wife," with Lou-Tellegen in "The King of Nowhere," and with H. Cooper Cliffe in "The Intruder." Previous to her engagement by Mr. Rapf she had had but one experience in pictures. In her work with Mr. Warwick she displayed such adaptability for the screen that it is predicted she will soon achieve the same eminence in the silent drama as she has upon the stage.

Picture Conditions in Japan

How They Should Be Met by American Manufacturers Desirous of Educating Their Territory.

Editor "Moving Picture World":

I read with interest the article, "Japan Likes American Pictures," by U. S. Vice-Consul William R. Langdon, Yokohama, on page 375 your issue January 20, 1917, and wish to supplement a few facts of vital importance to film manufacturers or those planning to enter this field.

There are two companies that attempt to control the majority of theaters in Japan and Korea, or Chosen, which is the new name given Korea by Japan since it has assumed the dictatorship of that country, viz.: The Nippon Katsudo Shashin Co., Ltd. (The Japan Cinematograph Co., Ltd.), and The Tennen-Shoku Katsudo Shashin Co. (The Natural Color Cinematograph Co., Ltd.), both with main offices in Tokyo.

Baron Gato is the leading light in the first mentioned company and wields a great influence in Government circles. Up to February, last year, films could be imported under bond, for a period of one year, by placing bonds or money in the hands of the custom officials to the amount of the regular import duty, as numerous small companies and importers were importing films under that system to the great detriment of this company. This system was abolished and the exorbitant cash payment system of eight yen and twenty-five sen per kin was established for all developed film whether old or new, also this rate covers all inner packing, no matter whether it is cuts, advertising or film cans. It is therefore necessary when shipping Japan to wrap the films in nothing but thin brown paper.

One kin equals 22 ounces in our weights; a 1,000-foot reel would weigh approximately 3¾ kin and cost about 30 yen ($15) for import duty alone.

Concerning the two cents per foot rental, why such a cheap price? In one of the greatest and most fertile fields in the world, the two above mentioned companies own one large theater in most of the prominent towns or have same under contract, and by buying their films on the open market in London at a very cheap price, using them first run in their own theaters, and then sub-leasing to the suburban and country theaters at the low rental price of two cents per foot, they stifle competition as much as possible.

Theater owners have struggled under this exasperating yoke since the era of the motion picture and must take what these companies give them or close their doors. The way to remedy this condition and open up a new field, also an unlimited source of revenue, is for manufacturers when dealing with Great Britain not to dispose of their oriental rights, as the British have made no effort to develop or invade this territory.

If American companies want to enter this field in a profitable way, they must assist in putting their goods before the Japanese public in the good old American way, not by sitting in their offices in New York and replying in this way to communications, "If you wish our goods we will be glad to furnish same to you at nine and ten cents per foot, f. o. b. New York." If a Japanese theater owner cancels the old rotten and rainy film service of either of these two companies, it is just the same as beheading himself, as he must close his doors, and when you approach him about a new service the first question he will put to you is this, "Will you guarantee by a cash deposit that you will be able to supply him for the period of two years? If so, he will deposit 1,000 yen to bind the agreement immediately, as they are so anxious to escape from the present film service conditions.

Manufacturers must be able to grasp the fact that branches can be established just as profitably in this country as in any other, and in five years China will prove the greatest field in the Far East.

When will America film manufacturers wake up to the great possibilities in the Far East?

Yours very truly,

P. S. CAWLEY.

DONALD GALLEHER A GOLDWYN PLAYER.

Donald Galleher, one of the best known juveniles on the American stage, has been engaged to play in Goldwyn's second Maxine Elliott picture. He is known to theatergoers principally through his work, over a period of years, in "The Silent Witness," "The Battle Cry," "Judith Zaraine" and "Our Mrs. McChesney," the latter play being Ethel Barrymore's starring vehicle. Galleher has just completed an engagement in "Magic." This is not his first appearance in motion pictures.

Jack Devereaux Featured by Triangle

JACK DEVEREAUX, who played the juvenile lead in "Her Father's Keeper," the first Triangle feature made at the new Yonkers studio, prior to the advent of Allan Dwan as supervising director of the plant, appears to have established himself firmly in the good graces of the famous creator of "Manhattan Madness" and "Fifty-Fifty," for he is being featured in the current production, and will also have prominent parts in forthcoming releases under Dwan's personal supervision.

Jack Devereaux.

Born in County Claire, Ireland, about twenty-eight years ago, Devereaux came to this country with his parents as a lad, and received his education at Phillips Exeter Academy and Georgetown University. He is five feel eleven inches tall, and by systematic athletics keeps himself trained down to 142 pounds, fighting trim.

After a brief and far from epoch-making career in business, Devereaux took the advice of William Courtenay, and joined the latter's stock company in Albany. After playing a variety of juvenile leads with William Courtenay and Thomas A. Wise, Devereaux entered the films and is said to show every promise of developing into a strong favorite.

Besides being an outdoor enthusiast, capable of playing a good game of golf or doing the trudgeon crawl at a professional clip, Devereaux writes fiction and verse with a perseverance that should land him among the creators of best-sellers some day. He is now hard at work on a scenario that Dwan has put the stamp of approval upon.

MYRON SELZNICK HEADS ADV. SERVICE.

Lewis J. Selznick has organized a subsidiary company to be known as the Film Advertising Service, Inc., which he has placed in charge of his son, Myron Selznick, who holds the position of purchasing agent in the Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises. This new company is formed for the purpose of distributing through the exchanges and exhibitors advertising novelties of all sorts for the exploitation of Selznick Pictures.

Mr. Selznick, Jr., will leave New York this week on a complete tour of the Selznick exchanges to arrange the operations of the Service Company. He will be accompanied by E. J. Doolittle, of the National Printing & Engraving Co., which concern holds the contract for producing all posters used for Selznick Pictures. The trip will consume about six weeks and will include twenty-one branches.

DALLAS STATE RIGHTS MEN IN NEW YORK.

S. M. Thompson and his son, True T., who conduct a State rights exchange at 1911½ Commerce street, Dallas, Tex., are in New York looking over the State rights market with a view to purchasing several attractions for their State. The Thompsons are at present handling "The Melting Pot" and several other features.

During a visit to the offices of the Moving Picture World they reported that conditions in their city and State were quite favorable at the present time. Business is booming all through the South, they said, and prospects are indeed bright.

HOUSE PETERS LEAVES MOROSCO.

House Peters has just completed his contract term at the Morosco Photoplay Company's Los Angeles studio, and while resting is considering offers from several large Western producers. It is rumored, however, that Mr. Peters may finally decide to build his own studio, produce his own plays, and release them under the state rights plan.

Ruth McTammany as Alma

RUTH McTAMMANY, now known to the trade as "The Girl from Rector's," is on the film-path with a vengeance, and now promises some sensational releases. Miss McTammany, unlike most professional folk, is a business girl of more than ordinary ability. At the head of her own producing company, she is now preparing as her next novelty offering a film version of the operetta, "Alma, Where Do You Live?" This play had a sensational run both here and in Europe, having made a record on the road in the United States.

Ruth McTammany.

The chic, piquant art of the star never had a more opportune vehicle than the role of Alma. The play is one of the shining examples of European musical comedy, in which the plots are given as prominent treatment as the music. It will be remembered that one of the strongest features of George M. Cohan's first film appearance was the fact that many of the bright passages from the play, "Broadway Jones," are introduced in the titles. In this respect the possibilities of the lines from "Alma" are particularly alluring and will be advantageously employed.

Hall Clarendon, who is Miss McTammany's stage director, is now at work adapting the manuscript for the screen in six reels. "Alma" will be made in one of the Eastern studios, with a supporting cast that will furnish for Miss McTammany a setting of ability and beauty.

R. Henry King in "Fortune Photoplay"

R. HENRY KING, the distinguished actor-director, is featured together with Lillian West in "Vengeance of the Dead," a forthcoming "Fortune Photoplay," the new series of four-reel dramas being distributed by the General Film Company. Mr. King is a good deal of a philanthropist and delights in boosting others to success. For this reason he picked out Lillian West to play opposite him in "Vengeance of the Dead" and Miss West is said to have achieved a personal triumph in the role of Lilas Velso, a Russian ballet dancer. Mr. King directs and plays the leads also in all of the picture plays in which he appears. He has been with the Balboa Company for many years and is now working exclusively on "Fortune Photoplays."

R. Henry King.

He was born in Christiansburg, Va., and first came into prominence at the age of seventeen after graduating from Roanoke College. He decided to take up a stage career and appeared in various stock companies, there securing the training which has stood him in good stead in his film career. Later he appeared in several New York productions and first played in pictures at the Lubin Studio in Philadelphia. When he joined Balboa he was at once featured in "Who Pays." He also directed the "Mary Sunshine" series for this company. He will direct and play in a number of "Fortune Photoplays."

Calcutta Notes

A CASE of considerable interest to American film manufacturers has just cropped up in the Rangoon chief court. It appears from the evidence that Mr. T. Cochrane, who is carrying on business in this country as representative of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., Ltd., applied for a temporary injunction to restrain the Neikban Cinema Syndicate, cinematograph proprietors and exhibitors, Rangoon, from exhibiting a film, known as "The Broken Coin" (episodes 15 to 22) on the ground that it was the copyright of the Trans-Atlantic Film Co., London, who had assigned their rights for the use and exhibition of the film to him within British India. The plaintiff also claimed to be agent of the Transatlantic Co., who were stated to have derived their rights to the film from the Universal Film Co., New York.

The defendants contended that they had purchased the film from the Triumph Film Co., London, and that the film was being sold in the open market by several firms for exhibition. They denied the plaintiff's right to copyright in "The Broken Coin" film, the first fourteen episodes of which they had already exhibited, and further asserted that the Transatlantic Film Co. had no power to prevent any of their serial films being shown in India.

Mr. Justice Rigg, before whom the case is being fought, has just delivered a lengthy judgment. He holds that on the evidence before him, the plaintiff's title to the exclusive right to use the film or to permit its use has not been clearly proved. He admitted, however, that there was a substantial controversy between the parties. If the plaintiff was able to furnish security for any damages that might be given against him if he failed in his suit, he being out of jurisdiction at present, it seemed to His Honor that the balance of convenience was in his favor.

A temporary injunction has been issued against the defendants, prohibiting the exhibition of episodes 15 to 22 of "The Broken Coin," until the hearing of a regular suit for damages, amounting to $1,400. The regular hearing will be expedited, as, in the opinion of the court, the film is a perishable article, and, therefore, the question as to the defendants' right to exhibit should be settled as early as possible.

Regarding the question of security, the court has ordered that the Trans-Atlantic Film Co. must furnish a security of $2,500 for any damages it may appear likely to the court that the Neikban cinema syndicate may suffer through loss occasioned by failure to exhibit the film. Should the said security not be furnished within fourteen days, the injunction would be dismissed. The cost of the application would follow the final decision of the suit.

Needless to add that the case has aroused much interest in the Indian cinema world, and the final decision is being awaited with suspense.

Two bioscope proprietors, who possess a certain amount of influence, have joined hands for exhibiting British manufactured films only. To my mind, their so-called "combine" will prove a failure. Bioscopegoers will have their serials, for instance, in which American manufacturers specialize. It is because J. F. Madan has understood the requirements of his patrons that he has acquired his present position in the Indian cinema world. The attempt to oust American films from the Indian markets will prove a disastrous failure; and people, who are making the attempt, will make themselves laughing stocks. Nobody will object if objectionable films, be they of American or European manufacture, be shut out; but the attempt to boycott a film, simply because it happens to be of American origin, is foolish.

At a recent meeting of the Calcutta Trades Association, the chairman referred, at some length, to the attempt, which his association has been making, to secure a better class of films. He referred incidentally to a particularly bad film, which he had been able "to get off the screen." I shall not mention the film by its title; but this much I shall say—that it was manufactured by a well known American company.

In this connection, I should say that the question of the local censorship of films is receiving attention in Calcutta as in other parts of the world. A conference was held recently at the office of the Commissioner of Police, which the proprietors and managers of all the local picture houses attended. The commissioner talked to them for some time and took note of the ideas expressed by them as to the best method of censoring films. He said that he would report to the Government on the conference and make recommendations accordingly. The general idea of those present appeared to be that a semi-official committee should be appointed to act as official censors.

The Bombay and Madras authorities will, I make no doubt, establish local censorship of films at no distant date.

The Rangoon authorities have already established a committee, consisting of six Government officials and twelve municipal commissioners, to act as film censors. The said committee, I understand, have already justified their existence. The hearty cooperation of bioscope proprietors has undoubtedly improved matters.

AL. GREEN, DIRECTOR.

AL. GREEN is probably the youngest director in point of years that there is in filmland, but he is not the youngest in point of experience, by any manner of means. For the past ten years Al. Green has been engaged in motion picture work. First he was employed as an "extra" at the Selig studios, Los Angeles, Cal. Later, he became a regular player and from that time on his advancement in his chosen profession was rapid.

Al. Green.

Colin Campbell, dean of the Selig corps of directors, saw Al. Green's capabilities and engaged him as his assistant. For several years Mr. Green was assistant to Mr. Campbell and gained knowledge of great value under this wonderful director. Green went to the Panama Canal zone with the Selig players, who filmed "The Ne'er-Do-Well." Later, he worked under Colin Campbell in the filming of "The Crisis."

William N. Selig then promoted Mr. Green to the position of a full-fledged director. His first picture was a three-reel drama. It was highly praised. Then he was entrusted with greater things. He was commissioned to take a special company to the Southland, where "The Princess of Patches," with Vivian Reed, was filmed. His next picture-play was "Little Lost Sister," now enjoying an immense vogue in K-E-S-E. He is at present at work on a feature drama, "The Lad and the Lion," written by Edgar Rice Burrows and featuring an all-star cast.

Al. Green is known for his originality. He and his cameraman, Harry Neuman, are continually devising new effects, many of them so strikingly successful that they have been copied by other producers. Mr. Green is unmarried and resides in Los Angeles.

FILM MEN TAKE A VACATION.

Carl Laemmle, Universal president; Maurice Fleckles of Chicago; Herman Fichtenberg of New Orleans, and Julius Stern of New York and Los Angeles were among the Easter visitors in Atlantic City.

Mr. Exchange Manager: You will get more help by carefully reading one trade paper each week than by skimming over five or six. The paper you need and the one that gives you weekly more news of the trade than all others combined is the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. It has done so for over ten years.

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard.

ONE of the most patriotic affairs ever held here was the demonstration on Boston Common on the evening of April 5, when thousands gathered, many in uniform, to hear addresses, sing stirring airs and see some remarkable motion pictures on "America Preparing" and other films like "Following the Flag" and the "U. S. Navy in Review." Here was, presumably, the largest audience ever gathered to see these pictures, and it furnished a wonderful inspiration toward recruiting. There were notable speakers, as well as a guard comprising the famous First Corps of Cadets, who are doing fine work in their armory and on the streets adding to the ranks of the National Guard every hour. A new hymn written by a citizen of German birth who is loyal to America was sung, and the Navy Yard band played it.

"Her Own People" went well because different from the usual Indian play with war paint and feathers, and was a lesson in blood mixing plus education. There were some good twists at the close, and we have never seen Lenore Ulrich in so good a play. In contrast was "The Black Wolf," featuring Lou-Tellegen, who did not seem properly directed, somehow, for he was selfconscious to a degree, and the support seemed mechanical. The feminine fans plainly showed that they thought dear "Gerry's" husband ought not to look into the camera so often. Nell Shipman struggled with a "pretty part" and made eyes at Lou, as told to do. James Neill, as usual, acted with discretion and dignity.

I went to Somerville the other day to see the Pathe colored picture, "Life of Our Savior," and wonder why more managers did not use this as Easter drew near. Why are they not enterprising enough to get at their public through such a wonderful picture teaching so much for all creeds? The Union Square theater is well located, right in the heart of a busy community, is well managed, and puts on clean pictures that appeal. The picture referred to is delicately done and brings to the vision a great realization of the strength and simplicity of the Savior, and especially timely now.

"Those Without Sin" was a dandy Southern play with splendid photography, but I fail to see where the title fits, for there was nothing in it to carry out the rest of the familiar phrase, "Let him cast the first stone." Indeed, no, for the dainty heroine, Blanche Sweet, threw red pepper in the villain's eyes, and he was some villain as played by Guy Oliver. The play was an indictment for the Northerners and will not be popular north of the Mason and Dixon line.

The best hit here in a month was "Skinner's Dress Suit," a jolly play with a good moral and never overdone, good for a repeat anywhere. It has been so widely and favorably reviewed that further comments are needless. Bryant Washburn will put anything over, and he seems at home in this intensely human offering. The hotel scenes and darkey bell hops caught the house. We are glad that there is to be a sequel to this to be released this month.

Three of our big high priced theaters—one the effete Boston opera house—are given over to the photoplay. At the latter we have the war pictures under the auspices of "smart" society, and for the benefit of the Allies through our Greater Boston Ambulance Committee well organized. Dr. William H. Van Allen, who dearly loves (?) the Kaiser, made the opening address and had the house with him. This has been repeated there and elsewhere, getting fine patronage, which means that at last society is awake to the value of moving pictures, for I have seen hundreds since at the Colonial, where "Joan the Woman" is a big drawing card, and around the corner at the Majestic, where Herbert Brenon's masterpiece as director, "A Daughter of the Gods," is still drawing crowds, and at high prices, too.

Then, too, we have quite a few screen players here in the speaking play. One of them, Grace Valentine, has an important part skillfully enacted in the Shubert-Craig production, "He Said—And She Believed Him," a daring play, and rather new in the presentation of such a theme as free love. It drew good houses and ere this will be seen in New York at the Garrick. Mabel Taliaferro, Edmund Breese and Derwent Hall Caine are here in the Hall Caine play, "The Woman Thou Gavest Me." Then we have Leon Gordon at the Copley theater playing Forbes Robertson's part in "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," and to capacity houses.

There are over 90,000 women enrolled in the National Society D. A. R., who have been urged to see "The Eagle's Wings." They reside in forty-eight states and have received a message from the society's head to get together and have the films shown under their auspices. The picture was first shown in Washington in the "Daughters'" half a million dollar marble building near the White House.

Ince-Triangle gave us "The Female of the Species" in the person of Dorothy Dalton, who had been here recently in "The Weaker Sex," a vastly different and more compelling play, and with Charley Ray. Howard Hickman is getting to be a favorite with the fans, who recall his work in "Civilization." Enid Markey, too, the heroine in that masterpiece, made an excellent foil for Miss Dalton in the newer offering. One big redeeming feature was the utter collapse of the vampire side of the woman, and her patient resignation to fate. "The Barricade" served to show what a fine actor Clifford Bruce is in a part which won the sympathy of the house at once. Mabel Taliaferro rose to the occasion and dear old Frank Currier made good, though a bad lot at the start. A lot of old Wall street stuff was shown, but, on the whole, the picture pleased.

"Little Eve Edgarton," a last year picture, was put on by request, and, not having seen it, I went over to the Exeter, only to be entertained through seeing some new features in plot. Ella Hall, as usual, got the house at the start despite her prunes and prisms make-up and expression. The development of the story took on new angles and Herbert Rawlinson is a dependable lover. Here we had Thomas Jefferson so like his father in feature. There was a ripple of laughter when we had a view of the messy beard of his friend, the Professor, as Jefferson was so clean shaven in contrast. The comedy touches were above the average. For a topnotcher I'd place "Intrigue" pretty well up if only for the work of Peggy Hyland and Bobby Connelly, though there were some inconsistencies and "bulls" here and there. We all like Marc MacDermott in any play.

Although there was nothing new in the plot, "The Promise" proved an excellent vehicle for Harold Lockwood, whose personality is compelling always. It opens strong with a football game in progress and a gallery of feminine fans, including Miss Allison and her young brother (in the play) in the person of Paul Willis, a newcomer to the screen for us. He was good and registered well at all times. Here we again had George Fisher in his first Metro picture and playing a cad at that. Lester Cuneo and Lockwood had their usual fist fight and we have the college athlete getting in bad with Dad and following Horace Greeley's advice. A Maine man sat at my side and volunteered the statement that the log jam was the best thing in the picture, and he bet it was taken down East.

Clara Kimball Young made a hit here in "The Price She Paid," quite the best picture she has given us, and so well done in all ways by star, supporter and director--Charles Giblyn. David Powell, whose face is familiar to all fans who followed "Gloria's Romance," for weeks looked good to us in a decidedly compelling part, rather out of the hero-lover atmosphere. There were some good twists in this, also some daring scenes, with naughty hubby prancing around in wifey's apartment in his pajamas and bare tootsies. My neighbor said audibly, "Look at his bunions, hope he steps on a pin—the wretch." Anyhow, Snitz Edwards deserves credit for keeping within bounds in a somewhat difficult impersonation. It was good to see Louise Beaudet, so long with the Vitagraph, and Alan Hale, the dependable lead. The play follows the novel well and the star actually seems to sing her heart out. There is a driving home of contrasts pleasing to note between sensible simple life and brainless luxury. This ought to bring ducats to the Selznicks.

"Ajaccio, Corsica" (Mutual-Gaumont).

A SPECIAL interest is attached to the town of Ajaccio, Corsica, on account of its association with the early life of the great Napoleon. The views which will be found in "Mutual Tours Around the World No. 21" show us the home of Napoleon and the grotto where he dreamed many of his youthful dreams. The majority of the streets of Ajaccio are narrow and the buildings dilapidated. A monument erected to Napoleon and his four brothers is shown and also elaborate tombs along a roadway outside the town, which was begun in 312 B. C. The harbor of Ajaccio, we are told in subtitle, is accessible to the largest ships; and we are also given a view of a number of French battleships lying at anchor in the harbor.

"Funchal, Madeira Islands" (Mutual-Gaumont).

In the twenty-first number of "Mutual Tours Around the World" will be found a number of interesting and instructive views in and about the town of Funchal, capital of the Madeira Islands. We learn through this picture that the inhabitants of Funchal are of Portuguese and Moorish extraction, that the streets are too narrow to allow of wheeled traffic, and that its gardens are filled with gorgeous tropical flowers. The town as it nestles with its whitewashed houses at the foot of a range of mountains some 4,000 feet high presents an attractive appearance. A panoramic view of the town and the harbor gives a good idea of the extent of the place. The wine and sugar industries are large commercial assets in Funchal, and fishing also provides work for many. Coasting on some of the steep streets of the town provides novel recreation for tourists.

"Rostov-On-Don" (Mutual-Gaumont).

Some interesting points about Rostov-On-Don, a seaport town of southeastern Russia, are illustrated in "Mutual Tours Around the World No. 21." We learn that from this port are shipped large quantities of grain, and that fishing is one of the chief industries. The winter frost ties up the harbor for several months of the year, and in the picture we are shown some of the preparations being made by the fishermen for the season's work. A fine sample of Russian architecture is afforded in an old cathedral structure, and in one of the most beautiful squares of the town is a monument erected to the memory of Alexander II.

"Weaving Indian Blankets" (Mutual-Gaumont).

In "Reel Life No. 48" will be found an interesting treatise on the manufacture of the Navajo blanket. We learn through this picture that the Navajo braves rear and shear the sheep and that the squaws card and spin the wool which they later weave into blankets. Thousands of these blankets are sold by the Navajos every year; and it is indeed a lesson in patience to watch the Indian women plying their work after the primitive methods of generations ago. Several valuable old blankets are shown in the course of this subject, one of them, the "Bayette," valued at $1,000.

"Molding Rookwood Pottery" (Universal).

This interesting subject is found in the "Universal Screen Magazine No. 15." In this picture we learn that the method of shaping the pottery by hand is still favored by some workers, and that by this method common bulk clay is placed on a revolving disk on which the molder works with only his deft fingers and a tiny stick. The new method requires less skill and the results are more quickly and more easily accomplished. By this method the clay is poured into molds before placing in the baking oven. The baking oven is also shown, and the final glazing of the finished product.

"The Home Aquarium" (Educational Films Corporation of America).

The instructive illustrations of rare fish suitable for the home aquarium contained in this picture have been arranged and photographed by W. L. Brind, a well known fish expert. The picture opens with a view of the aquarium, showing the washed fine gravel being placed in it, after which a piece of newspaper is laid over it so that the water which is then poured in does not disturb the gravel. The next step is the placing of the water plants in the gravel with roots well covered, and finally the transplanting of fish to the home aquarium. The fish exhibited are the Danio, blue and gold striped; two species of the "barble," red-breasted and green banded; the Mexican and Guatemalan sword tail, which gives birth to its young alive; Flag-Fins, Chinese Paradise fish, which in spite of their beauty, are found in dirty water; Cantor's Gurami from Sumatra, and the Brown Acaras from the Amazon region, which possesses wonderful paternal instincts, caring for its young as a hen cares for its chickens. Then there are flying fish, which catch moths and other insects, and there are the air breathers and the Climbing Perch, which will sometimes take a walk on shore; there are baby fish with two heads and one body and which rarely live over ten days, and fish from the River of Doubt. Black goldfish are also shown worth $200 each. Amber, calico and blue goldfish, and a collection of rare specimens valued at $1,000. This is an unusually attractive film of its kind and contains 700 feet of material.

"Swedish Gymnastics" (Mutual-Gaumont).

In "Reel Life No. 48" will be found an unusually interesting and instructive illustration of the gymnastic efficiency of the Swedes. In the picture we witness a demonstration of gymnastic exercises by Swedish government employes. These exercises, which range from the simplest to the very difficult, are executed with marvelous uniformity and accuracy by a class of possibly twenty men moving in unison.

"The Pulmotor" (Mutual-Gaumont).

A lesson in the use of the pulmotor will be found in "Reel Life No. 48." We learn that in giving first aid to victims of asphyxiation the head should be thrown well back over a pillow or rest of some sort, and that the tongue must be drawn aside to allow free passage of the air to the lungs before applying the pulmotor. We learn also that it requires forty strokes to start the pressure, and that persons who have been dead to all appearances for several hours have been revived by this method.

"Winter Sports in Florida" (Mutual-Gaumont).

In "Reel Life No. 48" will be found some scenes of interest to those who love sports. The views in the picture were taken during a regatta at Miami, Fla., and include looping the loop in an aeroplane at an altitude of 4,000 feet, a flight over Biscayne Bay in a flying boat with the cameraman while the boat races are taking place, and also some expert aquaplaning.

Curiosities of New York" (Paramount-Bray).

One of the subjects contained in the Paramount-Bray Pictograph No. 62 contains a number of curious sights to be seen around New York city. One of these is a stockyard on the top of a twelve-story building. The modern "Paul Revere," riding along Death avenue ahead of each train that passes, waving a red flag to avoid accidents, is a singular sight. The man who sells hot potatoes at a penny apiece on Grand street is also unique in his profession.

"A Diamond-Back Terrapin Hatchery" (Universal).

The "Universal Screen Magazine No. 15" contains some entertaining and instructive views photographed at a diamond-back terrapin hatchery. We learn herein that the Federal government encourages conservation of this reptile, for which it is necessary to use special protective measures on account of the demand for its meat. In the picture we see a thousand "prospective plates of soup" taking their daily bath. We are also shown a nest in the sand where the turtle eggs are laid, and the grandpa, father and baby turtles, ranging in age from one to five years, playing about in the sand. Other points of interest are the preparation of dinner for the hatchery's inmates, the winter quarters with its big tanks which are filled with fresh water each day, and an individual picture of Big Ben, daddy of the flock.

"African and Indian Elephants" (Educational Films Corporation of America).

In this interesting study of the elephant we are shown by way of introduction an eleven pound tooth of one of their predecessors, the mammoth. The African elephant then enters, and our attention is drawn to his big flappy ears and wrinkled trunk, following which the Indian elephant with small ears and smooth trunk makes his appearance. We learn through this picture that the extent to which ivory hunting had been carried on had made it necessary to use protective measures to prevent the elephant becoming extinct. Diagram maps of India, Africa, Borneo and Sumatra showing the parts now inhabited by the elephant are used by way of explanation. Amusing scenes show the elephants drinking from a hose, and also facing the bombardment of a fire hose.

"Developing the Ballet" (Paramount-Bray).

No. 62 of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph gives a comprehensive illustration of the various exercises used in attempting to master the art of the ballet. Ottokar Bartik, ballet master at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York City, is seen directing a class of young ladies, who after doing the usual exercises at the bar give some clever exhibitions in pirouetting and other ballet steps. A couple of clever little children four and seven years of age also do exhibition work.

"Prehistoric Tar Pits" (Paramount-Bray).

An interesting series of pictures photographed at the tar pits of California, where in prehistoric ages huge animals that traveled the earth 100,000 years ago met their death. These tar pits are now fenced in to prevent the pilfering of the prehistoric remains with which they abound. The skeleton of a giant sloth is shown and also the remains of the head of an Imperial elephant. This subject will be found in Pictograph No. 63.

Now National Committee for Better Films

Developments in Picture Conditions Cause National Committee on Films for Young People to Change Name.

A CONDITION which arose out of a desire to better the moving picture situation as it concerned the child has in the natural course of events developed to such a large extent that it now concerns not alone the child side of the question, but the question of a better program for the family group. For this reason the National Committee on Films for Young People, realizing that its name represented only a part of the significance of its efforts, decided at a meeting held on March 22 to change the name of the committee to that of the National Committee for Better Films.

The work of this committee, which is affiliated with the National Board of Review, has grown rapidly during the past few months, especially in connection with the Affiliated Committees for Better Films, the organization of which was announced in January. Since that time more than seventy committees scattered through different parts of the country, and representing many organizations, have applied for affiliation with the National Committee. Among the cities represented are: San Diego, Cal.; Lowell, Mass.; Atlanta, Ga.; Seattle, Wash.; Cleveland and Cincinnati, Ohio; Louisville, Ky.; Denver, Colo.; Dallas, Texas, and cities in smaller communities in every State except Florida, New Mexico, Idaho, Montana and Wisconsin. There are upward of 250 other communities in correspondence with the National Committee preparatory to affiliating.

Affiliated Committees Bulletin

Third Bulletin of the Affiliated Committees for Better Films Represents Progress on All Sides.

ONE of the most interesting things in Bulletin No. 3 of the Affiliated Committees for Better Films is a map showing the different points in the United States to which the influence of this organization has penetrated. It will be noticed in the cut printed below that the map is dotted with diamonds and stars. The significance of this is that the places marked by stars indicate that committees are already affiliated, and the diamonds represent committees and correspondents who are co-operating and receiving aid from the National Committee, but who are not yet affiliated. It should be added that the stars on this map represent only committees that have become affiliated since the beginning of 1917.

These bulletins containing information of value and interest are printed and mailed each month to a possible 600 different points where committees have been formed. We note that it states among other things that more affiliated committees are required in the Central West to properly carry forward the work in that district.

Salisbury-Beach Pictures

Attractive Pictures Photographed in the Highlands of Costa Rica Exhibited at the Rialto.

THE SALISBURY-BEACH collection of moving pictures taken in Central and South America still continue to interest Rialto audiences. The compelling feature of the third installment consisted of several remarkable views of an eclipse of the sun, while the fourth installment presents as its spiciest morsel a hunt in the highlands of Costa Rica. In the course of this hunt a closeup of a mountain lion at bay is shown, and also some cubs which meander innocently about, startled somewhat at the presence of strangers in the vicinity.

Other scenes of interest contained in this installment of the series are of San Jose, capital of Costa Rica, the planting and cultivating of the sugar cane, and the hauling of it to the shipping depot. The Costa Rica penitentiary and the National Opera House, a handsome and costly edifice, are also points of interest in the film. These pictures of the tropics are well photographed, entertaining and instructive.

Forum Films Find Favor

Town of Princeton Places Its Seal of Approval on the Lock-Reel Program of Forum Films, Inc.

TROUBLE had been brewing in Princeton theater circles when Mrs. Bessie Richie Dessez, now engaged in community work for the Forum Films, Inc., reached there with one of the excellently appointed programs gotten together by this new concern. A showing of the program for the benefit of a prominent welfare society of Princeton took place in one of the local theaters and was attended by club women, students and professors of Princeton University and others of note in the town. The result of the exhibition of this program, which has been constructed especially for the family group and children's matinee, was a decision to give one morning and one evening each week to the exhibition of the Forum Films, Inc., lock-reel program. All of which goes to show that any respectable community will fall in line and support the exhibitor wherever the right spirit with regard to the refined moving picture program is displayed.

WAR FILMS AT WOMAN'S WAR MEETING.

The newly organized society, The War Relief of the Women of the American Theater, will hold a great mass meeting on the afternoon of Friday, April 13th. Mrs. Henry B. Harris has lent the Hudson Theater for the occasion, and there will be war films, speeches by women who have been actively engaged in war relief in England, Serbia, France and Russia, and patriotic choruses by young women from the various musical comedies now playing on Broadway.

Admission will be by card, and cards may be obtained at the different theatrical agencies. Miss Rachel Crothers, National Chairman of the Relief, announces that the boxes on that afternoon will be occupied by the elderly women of the profession, who will be special guests.

It is proposed to make the War Relief a permanent guild for the aiding of old, or sick, or needy women of the stage—when the reasons for its present formation no longer obtain.

COWBOY AUTHOR TO WRITE FOR HART.

Pursuant to the announcement that Thomas H. Ince has secured the signature of William S. Hart to a new contract binding the popular western screen star to appear in new Kay Bee productions under Ince's supervision for two more years, it will be interesting to learn that Buck Connors, the literary Texas Ranger, who has contributed many successful stories to McClure's Magazine, The Saturday Evening Post and The Popular Magazine, has also been placed under contract to submit all of his future output to the Triangle-Ince organization with the object of allowing Ince and Hart first choice of any material they may think suitable for screen presentation.

Buck Connors is a real Texas Ranger, now in active service, and writes his stories from actual experience and the first-hand adventures he hears from the lips of his fellow knights of the saddle. Two recent stories from Connors' pen that attracted the attention of Ince and Hart and led to the present optional arrangement are "The Red Ride" and "The Go-Between," both published by McClure's.

Prohibited Imports

Foreign Films Are Not on the British List.

(From Our Own Representative.)

London, March 1.

SINCE the publication just over a week ago of the new list of prohibited imports, the uneasy apprehension of impending danger felt throughout the moving picture industry has considerably subsided. It would, nevertheless, be wrong to describe the general situation as settled; there is still a strange uncertainty, created in the first place upon possible interpretations of two articles figuring conspicuously in the embargo, namely, "pictures" and "photographs." For many days before its issue the parliamentary correspondents of our leading newspapers were unpleasantly assertive in their confidence that foreign kinematograph films would appear at the head of the list and even the home trade journals were peculiarly in agreement as to the gravity of the position. It will be readily nuderstood then that the lot of the man whose business depends upon foreign stocks was not at the time one of quiet composure.

When the list appeared with its exclusion of "films," described as such, it was received both with surprise and disappointment. I have the assurance of those of the largest film importers in London and of other people in a still better position to know that the case of the film has not been finally disposed of.

Meanwhile foreign films are not either prohibited or restricted from entering British ports. The articles associated with moving pictures and allied industries which are affected are: Pictures, prints, engravings, photographs, maps photographic apparatus, stereoscopes, colors, pigments, plated and gilt wares, works of art, books and printed matter. The latter includes posters, daily, weekly and periodical newspapers and publications but these can still be mailed in single copies through the post office. Single copies of posters may also be sent by post.

Numerous other commodities follow, but there is no specific mention of films, transparencies, film base, or celluloid. Regarding the last named, it will be recalled that celluloid in any form was prohibited last autumn except by special license from the Board of Trade. Licenses were, however, readily granted to importers. Any embargo upon films would therefore simply necessitate a withdrawal of these importing licenses, and while no such course may be imminent, no one will deny the possibility.

Summarized the situation for the American exporter of films is this. Posters, "stills," and the other articles above mentioned can only be shipped to England through mail. Films can still be shipped as before—but with no guarantee of time.

HAZEL DAWN IN "THE LONE WOLF."

Herbert Brenon returned from New Orleans this week, after completing the exterior scenes for his production of Louis Joseph Vance's "The Lone Wolf." This will be his third Selznick-Picture offering. In contrast to his last previous production, "The Eternal Sin," "The Lone Wolf" is a modern story of adventure with a romance that is absolutely unique. The principal roles in this picture will be taken by Hazel Dawn and Bert Lytell. This will be Miss Dawn's first appearance in photoplays for more than a year.

LIST OF EDUCATIONAL AND SELECTED FILMS.

A Pair of Kalems

"The Tyrant of Chiracahua," Episode of "The American Girl," and "The Munitions Plot," a Number of the "A Daughter of Daring" Series.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

OF ITS type there are few better short subjects produced than "The Tyrant of Chiracahua," a two-reel episode of Kalem's "The American Girl" series. The locale of this number is the Mexico that lies immediately south of the California line, and the action of the story is in keeping with many of the news dispatches from that "politico" infested section. The story tells of a cowboy who searches adventure over the border and who gets it. Not only does the cowboy get it, but Roger King and his lieutenant are made captives by the Mexican tyrant. This gives Madge King a chance to masquerade as a greaser and so, through a series of exciting circumstances, finally liberate the prisoners.

The locations and local-color touches chosen by Director James W. Horne could not be improved. The story is by Frederick R. Bechdolt. Marin Sais is seen in the leading role, and is supported by Frank Jonasson, Edward Hearn, Edward Clisbee and Hart Hoxie.

"The Munitions Plot."

Helen Gibson is again seen in daring feats in this one-reel number of "A Daughter of Daring" series. There are several good thrills registered. Helen's main feats consist of several leaps from cables and bridges over railway cuts on to moving trains. She takes these chances in order to bring to book German plotters and to prevent the always-threatened collision with "The Limited." The plot is complicated and is built purely around the thrills, which are worth while. With Miss Gibson on the screen are George A. Williams, George Routh, L. Whitbeck and G. Pulliam.

"High Play"

Five-Reel Mutual-American Offering Featuring William Russell—Is Moderately Good Melodrama.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

A QUITE strong melodramatic appeal is made by "High Play," a five-reel production made by the American Film Corporation for release by Mutual. There is sustained interest throughout the piece and enough story material to keep things moving on the screen at a pace that holds the attention centered there. The picture is hardly one that would get over with any great amount of success in a house catering to highly intelligent audiences, but in houses whose patronage is composed of persons who liked the old "ten-twenty-thirty" melodramas it will be accorded a good welcome.

William Russell, the featured player, is an actor of no little ability and again proves it in "High Play." He has been surrounded with a cast that meets the requirements of the many melodramatic situations. Chief in support is Francelia Billington. Other important members of the cast are Robert Klein, Florence Burton, Lucile Young and Ashton Dearholt.

Several good sets are seen in the picture, as are also some good night photography and tinting. Production details throughout are adequate.

The story has many complicated situations. It tells of the young vice-president of a bank who endeavors to come to the bank president's rescue when securities are found to be useless. The youth is in love with the daughter of a gambler, and promises to marry her to get her out of the life she is leading. When he offers his private funds to the bank she jilts him. Later, after he has met another and different sort of a girl, she tries to win him back. It is her and her father's intrigues, which indirectly lead to a murder and a suicide, that are the axes on which much of the melodrama of the piece revolve.

"Forget-Me-Not"

Kitty Gordon in Five-Reel Peerless Screen Version of Stage Play Made Famous by Genevieve Ward and Rose Coghlan—Released by World Film Corporation.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE task of preparing a screen version of "Forget-Me-Not," a celebrated stage play twenty-five years ago, required excellent judgment on the part of the scenario writer. In its original form, the drama is almost entirely devoid of action until it comes to the powerful dramatic situation at the end of the last act. Up to this time it is an intellectual feast—a war of wits between two brilliant and evenly matched antagonists, but not screen drama. This fact was recognized by the scenarioist and, as a result, the scenes from the stage play did not furnish material for more than one reel. However, the other four reels are pertinent to the story. The action of the stage play is covered in about twenty-four hours, but contains references to events leading up to the denouement that lend themselves to legitimate use in the picture play.

"Forget-Me-Not," as produced by Peerless for the World

Scene from "Forget Me Not" (World).

Film Corporation, is a consistent and swift-moving melodrama. The romantic events in the life of Stefanie Paoli, the Corsican fisher girl, who marries a Marquis, becomes the queen of a famous gambling palace in Paris and, after the death of her husband, tries to gain a place in society through the marriage of her son to a titled English girl, is always full of interest. The manner of her defeat touches one of the high spots of intense dramatic climax. The role was a favorite one with both Genevieve Ward and Rose Coghlan for many years, and is known throughout the civilized world.

The screen production, under the direction of Emile Chautard, has been given every means for achieving success. Added to the skilfully devised scenario, it has an excellent cast headed by Kitty Gordon, and a series of backgrounds that never fail to reflect the locale of the many scenes in Corsica, France and England. Kitty Gordon's performance of Stefanie suits the screen version. She indicated distinctly the three periods in the Italian girl's life, and does not attempt to reach the full tragic height of the finish—a feat requiring exceptional powers. Montagu Love in a dual role plays a brace of Corsicans with much cleverness. Alec B. Francis, George MacQuarrie, James Furey, Norma Phillips, Lillian Herbert and Henrietta Simpson earn a word of sincere praise for their share in the picture's success.

Pathe Releases

"The Hunting of the Hawk," Five-Reel Crook Play Featuring William Courtenay; Thirteenth Installment of "Patria," and Number Six of "Mystery of the Double Cross."

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"The Hunting of the Hawk."

CROOK dramas, long supposed to be on the wane, keep bobbing to the surface both on the screen and the spoken stage and manage to hold their own with the public—when sufficiently above the ordinary. "The Hunting of the Hawk," a five-reeler produced by Astra, is of this order of merit. George B. Seitz, the author, has modeled his work after one or two Broadway successes, and the spectator will be kept guessing until the final scene. The opening takes place on an ocean liner and finally shifts to a country estate, where a clever thief and a Secret Service man come to conclusions over a valuable necklace. The interest never drops, and a neatly managed love motive is provided.

The production by the Astra Film Corporation is along the lines of their best endeavors. The scenes on the country estate are especially well done. William Courtenay as Desselway, the Secret Service man, has a part almost identical to the one he played in "Under Cover," a guarantee that he acquits himself with much credit. Marguerite Snow makes an appealing and artistically excellent Diana Curran, and Robert Clugston is admirable as Wrenshaw, the chief of the crooks.

"The Wings of Death."

The thirteenth episode of "Patria" is called "The Wings of Death" because the heroine rather than let an enemy to her country escape, tumbles him out of her flying machine when a thousand or so feet in the air. Bess Morgan, who was captured by the Mexicans in an earlier number of the serial, is rescued after Huroki is taken by the Americans and then exchanged for the captive girl. As usual, there is something doing all through the two reels. The exhibitions of wild riding by the cowboys and other rough riders, are a succession of thrills. Mrs. Vernon Castle, Milton Sills, Warner Oland, William Nye and Marie Walcamp are still the important and deserving members of the cast.

"The Dead Come Back."

Guessing on the identity of the characters in "Mystery of the Double Cross" is the principal attraction of the serial. In "The Dead Come Back," the sixth number of the story, a slight hint is given that may assist a small portion of spectators in making the right solution. Another attempt is made to steal the papers containing the secret of Philippa's birth, the Masked Stranger being mixed up in the affair. The second reel closes with a new surprise. Mollie King, Leon Bary, Ralph Stuart and Gladden James are as well suited to their respective tasks as ever.

"Her Greatest Love"

Theda Bara in Five-Reel Version of Ouida's "Moths" Once More Portrays Virtue Instead of Vice in Fox Production.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

OF ALL Ouida's exotic stories, with the exception of "Under Two Flags," "Moths" has had the most successful stage career. A five-reel screen version, under the title of "Her Greatest Love," has been produced by Fox with Theda Bara as Vera Herbert, the young English girl who marries Prince Zouroff to shield her mother from the tongue of scandal. The part does not suit Miss Bara any too well. She is not the right type, to begin with, and her assumption of girlish innocence, in the earlier scenes, is set at naught by the eyes and mouth that have done so much to assure her standing as one of the leading vampires of the screen. She is too good an actress not to have command over the mechanics of the part, but she never suggests the character drawn by Ouida.

Adrian Johnson made the scenario. He has seen fit to alter the reason for Vere's marriage to the Russian prince and has Lady Dolly put forth a plea to her daughter that would not have changed the girl's refusal to become the Princess Zouroff. Ouida, whose works are a mixture of high strung romance and frank realism, depended more upon her biting satire than her plots. Her abundant vitality and her calm disregard of facts, however, permitted her to build up a story that was often dramatic and seldom lacking in interest. The screen version seems rather bald without Lady Dolly's chatter and with the absence of the breezy American girl Fuchsia Leach. Lord Jura is also incompletely sketched.

The production, directed by J. Gordon Edwards, is thoroughly well done. The settings are in keeping with the different countries where the action is supposed to take place, and the picture has the benefit of a competent cast. Marie Curtis, Alice Gale, Walter Law, Glen White and Harry Hilliard have the leading characters in support of the star.

The strength of Ouida's story consisted in the manner in which the splendid womanhood of Vere stood out among the throng of titled and well born moral degenerates of both sexes. In "Her Greatest Love" the full power of the contrast has not been shown.

"War on Three Fronts"

Selznick Exchanges to Release Kleinschmidt Pictures Taken with the Austrian Army and Navy.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE Selznick exchanges are to release as a feature six reels of the pictures taken on the Austrian fronts by Captain F. E. Kleinschmidt. The film has been shown in New York several times in preceding months and already has been reviewed at considerable length in the Moving Picture World. There is no question of the entertainment value of the scenes contained in the six thousand feet if—and it is a very large if—the person looking upon these pictured activities can do so not necessarily with an open mind but perhaps more accurately speaking with an un-American mind. The claim may be made that Austria is not at war with the United States, but the thread holding the nations is so slight that not much of a strain will be required to part it. This, of course, is due to the developments of the last few days, an international situation which did not exist when the picture was reviewed in the issue of February 24, on page 1198.

It is the conviction of the writer that had "War on Three Fronts" been shown in this country prior to the entrance of the United States into the European conflict there would have been opportunity for little adverse criticism. It is his conviction that if it is shown now many exhibitors who display the subject probably will be buying a riot. It is his conviction, too, that it contains just the material and in some instances just the sub-titles to give aid and encouragement to the professional pacifist, to the anti-recruiting propagandist whose ebullitions these days are received with such scant patience by the militant American.

"War on Three Fronts" is controversial in character, to say the least. Also is its showing bound to be in the minds of many in exceeding bad taste, again to say the least. The whole question is a matter of grave consideration on the part of any exhibitor.

Two Good Paramounts

Fannie Ward, in "A School for Husbands," Shows a Thing or Two to Wives.—"The Cost of Hatred" Is a Story of An Unforgiving Man.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE Lasky company released on April 5 "A School for Husbands," the script for which was written by Harvey Thew from the play by Stanislaus Stange. It is an excellent picture, a bright comedy. Fannie Ward is the featured player. What lends piquancy to the production from the viewpoint of the picturegoer is the fact that the man portraying on the screen the role of the husband is the same person who bears in private life the same relation to the petite and ever-youthful heroine. The subject affords an opportunity for speculation as to what particular division of the characterization on the part of each is to be ascribed to art and which to life. In any event it is all interesting.

Miss Ward has the role of the economical and overplainly garbed wife who sees her husband slipping away from her. When an inheritance comes her way she begins to fuss up in real togs—and of course she does know how to wear them. It is no mere guess that this particular phase of the picture will have marked interest for the feminine portion of any house. Certainly there is a wide array of gowns.

Jack Dean is the husband who is transformed from a dominating head of a household to a more or less properly restrained and considerate lieutenant and aid. Mabel Van Buren is the dashing charmer who causes the husband to dance attendance upon her. Frank Elliott is a convincing Englishman, Sir Harry Lovell, who is the friend in need of the wife, who coaches her in the art of training a husband. It is a good cast.

Owing to the rather long list of players to whom we are introduced at the opening of the story—a circumstance not infrequently noted in the adaptation of plays—there is at the start likely to be a bit of confusion as to the relation of the characters one to the other, but they are rapidly identified as the action proceeds.

"The Cost of Hatred."

Theodore Roberts has the dominating role in "The Cost of Hatred," a Lasky subject released on April 9. It is a serious story, revelatory of the workings of the mind of a strong man deeply wronged, of his violent hatred, his continual nursing of a grudge which passing years leave unmitigated. It is hardly an exaggeration to say that in the portrayal of a role of this kind Mr. Roberts stands second to no player on the screen. The story is from the pen of Beulah Marie Dix.

Kathlyn Williams interprets with her usual charm the roles of Elsie Graves and Sarita Graves—the former an unfaithful wife, the latter as a daughter grown to womanhood. Jack W. Johnston as Amory, the widower-paramour of Elsie, has a short role, but he contributes materially to the strength of the picture. Tom Forman is young Amory, who twenty years after the tragedy in the life of Graves falls under the lash of that vindictive, unforgiving man. It is a hard role, that of the spirited youngster whose morale is broken down by castigation and ill-treatment generally.

There is a tragic note running through the story. The denouement is impressive. The daughter of the man exiled in Mexico has eloped with the son of the man who had injured her father. The father has caught up with the pair just after they have been married. He begs his daughter to return to him, informing her of the tragedy that had entered his life, of the fact that her father-in-law had seduced her mother. The daughter's retort that probably her mother had discovered in the father the same brutal qualities she had likewise observed was a defense of the mother and a condemnation of the father that could not help sinking into the mind of the now pleading parent—a man who had been finding in his Bible what he deemed justification for visiting upon the child the sins of the father.

of Lady Maryska, daughter of Count Ivan, and chances to come upon the young lady in a romantic castle in time to save her from capture by an enemy force, and marries her with this end in view. He carries no trunk, but he can change clothes as often as he likes and always finds a suit to fit his splendid figure wherever he goes, and one of his suits admirably fits the young lady when she needs a disguise, though she is several sizes smaller—it is wonderful what the Irish can do under such circumstances. The marriage is not consummated—it is intended to be a mere temporary form—but the lady loves Pat in the end, as we knew she "shure" would, from the first.

Desmond does well in this characterization, also Mary McIver as Maryska, but the chief merit of the presentation is scenic. The settings are little short of marvels, even when they are artificial exteriors, a superlative amount of beauty and taste being shown at all stages of the story. But all this visual enchantment fails to compensate for lack of sympathetic interest in the story. It is like bedecking an anemic with the richest and most beautiful fabrics—it is all treatment. One cannot help feeling that a young, vigorous, and emotional creature would be more charming because of inherent beauty, more satisfying to the soul, than this gorgeously arrayed creature of scant human attributes. The picture is for the eye, not for the heart.

"An Old-Fashioned Young Man" is a story of interesting plot and one clear characterization by Frank E. Woods. The plot is so good that it seems a pity that Mr. Woods could not have been given plenty of time to work out its full possibilities. A young man raised in retirement to believe that his name is Frank Trent is sent out into the world at the age of twenty-one by his father, a confirmed recluse. He gets a start in life through a letter from his father to an old friend, and becomes immediately mixed up in a mayoralty contest between a fine woman and his first employer. His chivalrous nature leads him to defend the woman against insidious attacks on her character, and he falls in love with her daughter. He goes to many cities in search of evidence which will clear up these aspersions on Mrs. Burke, the candidate for Mayor, and communicates with his father on the subject.

Frank returns from his search without the evidence sought, but his letter brings his father to the scene, and he discovers that his real name is Burke—the mayoralty candidate is his mother, long separated from his father because of the same unjust suspicion against her. Now is set up a most interesting dramatic situation. He is deeply in love with the daughter of his mother. The author has not had time to work out some powerful psychological effects at this stage—so much space has been given to catching trains at the last moment, and the story suffers in consequence. The announcement that she is an adopted daughter enables the author to clear up his complication, but so little is made of the love affair that it seems a pity. Robert Harron is consistent in his role, but it would be a relief to see him in one where the hero exercises a little more common sense.

"God's Man"

Nine-Reel Screen Version of Novel by George Bronson Howard Has Many Elements That Make for Popular Success—Produced by Frohman Amusement Corporation.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE screen version of George Bronson Howard's novel, "God's Man," is a triumph of mind over much strangely assorted, but, for the most part, decidedly entertaining, matter. Shorn of its half-baked moral philosophy and its pretense to serious ethical purpose, the residue consists of expert reporting among the gay resorts of New York's Great White Way. The author is at home here and enlivens his photographic flashes of the night life that ebbs and flows along the famous thoroughfare with a series of substitles illuminated by a sophisticated and biting humor. This portion of the picture is full of entertainment for the initiated, and likewise for the stranger who knows Broadway only by hearsay. Other parts of the story also have the elements that make for popular success.

The task which confronted Anthony P. Kelly when building up the scenario was fraught with many difficulties. Out of an almost overwhelming mass of material that embraced the opium evil, horse racing, insanity, suicide, factory laws, prostitution, tango teas, the gay life, the present state of the spoken drama, ticket speculation, shop lifting, kept women, burlesque queens, cloakroom pirates, crusaders and Congressmen, and resulted in a cast of characters containing thirty names, he has constructed a nine-reel screen narrative that is nearly always coherent, and is well worth seeing—if taken at its proper value. It is hardly necessary to add that equal skill on the part of every one else concerned in the making of the picture was indispensable to such a state of affairs. The cast provided by the Frohman Amusement Company, and the thoroughness of method of the director, George Irving, combined the requisite qualifications. Nothing has been left undone to render "God's Man" impressive as a production, and to deliver George Bronson Howard's message to humanity. If the picture fails to reach the high purpose announced by the author, the fault lies with him alone.

Of the many evils touched upon during the progress of the story, the illegal sale of opium occupies the largest place in the plot. It brings about the tragedy at the finish, and the author's bitterest denunciation is hurled against the men who profit by its traffic. His indictment of this plague spot upon our civilization is forceful, and can lead to but one verdict.

Scene from "God's Man" (Frohman).

The other charges he makes are not so well sustained, and he writes in a spirit of irritation that tends to weaken his arguments when depicting the pitfalls of the street called Broadway. He is at his lowest intellectual depth, and also least entertaining, when he essays to become a teacher of moral philosophy. He places the blame for the sins he uncovers upon the spirit of commercialism that is rife amaong us—and rifest of all in little old New York. Well, there's considerable truth in that! But his contention that the Divine Purpose in having man experience sin and suffering is that he may better teach the consequences to his fellows seems merely another way of saying that a married rake makes the best husband. All his reasoning would carry deeper conviction if he had drawn his hero more consistently and made him less of a Don Quixote. The starving child in the poem begged for three grains of corn; Arnold L'Hommedieu should have prayed for one grain of common sense. His manner of trying to right one wrong by committing another of far greater magnitude is the mark of an almost irresponsible brain. He gravely delivers himself of the truism that unless the love for refinement and good taste be inculcated in the home the chances of obtaining it are very slim, and, shortly afterward, in spite of his own excellent home influences, makes a remark to a lady upon the subject of dress that no gentleman would ever be guilty of. Such points of criticism would be trivial if the author had not protested so much for the high moral purpose of his work. As an offset to the shortcomings of this portion of "God's Man," one may turn to the other and greater part and find it fulfilling the first duty of all screen dramas—entertainment. Of this quality it has more than a fair share.

H. B. Warner is the star of the production. The choice could not be bettered. The long list of names that comprise the supporting company is a guarantee of the manner in which the parts are played. From first to last every character is worthily represented.

"The Flower of Doom"

Five-Reel Red Feather Production Pictures Tong War and Chinatown Scenes in Graphic Fashion.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE mysterious doings presumed to occur in the Chinatown of the average American city boasting such a section are a source of universal interest to visitors. This five-reel number, written and produced by Rex Ingram, will appeal to exactly this type of curiosity in the general run of observers. As a story, it has no particular suspense until toward the close. There are, in fact, several different stories running along through the production, connected but slightly at the beginning.

What the number lacks in continuity it makes up in good measure in realistic atmosphere. It is true to conditions in Chinese sections, and exhibits a number of situations in low life that will carry the interest. Numerous character types are well portrayed, and the offering as a whole possesses considerable general appeal of an informative character.

In the beginning bad blood is created after a meeting of the Hop Sing Tong, where a certain individual is designated to kill another. The crime is committed and a young Chinaman named Charley Sing arrested. He is innocent, and obtains freedom through the influence of Buck Mahoney, a gang politician. Samuel Slavinsky, keeper of a pawnshop, is then brought into the story. He is married, but becomes enamored of a dancing girl named Neva Sacon. Paul Rasnow, a Russian sculptor, well portrayed by Nicholas Dunaew, also figures prominently in the tale, being in love with Tea Rose, a pretty Chinese miss. The "Flower of Doom" is a tong emblem, which comes into the possession of Neva through a newspaper reporter. This leads to her abduction by the leader of a rival tong. There is plenty of action in the final scenes of a melodramatic character.

The various roles are in good hands, the principals being Yvette Mitchell, Wedgwood Nowell, Gypsy Hart, M. K. Wilson and Frank Tokonaga.

"Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation"

Powerful and Timely Spectacle by J. Stuart Blackton, Produced by the Greater Vitagraph Company.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"WOMANHOOD" is in every respect a finer example of artistry than "The Battle Cry of Peace," primarily because the story is not continual lybroken by preachment. The subtitles of great vigor fit naturally into the composition, a harmonious part of it, enhancing rather than destroying interest. With the same obvious purpose in view, "Womanhood" reaches deeper into the sympathies of an audience, and will on that very account make a more profound impression. "The Battle Cry of Peace" was an intellectual argument. "Womanhood" is an inspiring appeal to chivalry, to manhood, to ennobling sentiments which lie deep and strong in the American heart, though almost smothered by material prosperity.

High tension is set up from the start by the elimination of all but essential activities among the main characters, the story scenes flashing along at high speed, with an occasional relief of large assemblies from real life, one intensifying the other in cleverly arranged structure. The unrelaxed grip on emotion is especially valuable in driving home imprinted sentiment—the mind of the spectator is reached through his heart. There is a story continuously and successfully presented in the midst of a grand spectacle.

There is no fault to find with Mr. Blackton's sincerity, none with his structure, none with his treatment; but it becomes quite obvious as the development proceeds that he is actuated largely by a sense of justice and a desire to arouse a fuller conception of the wrongs perpetrated by a mentally cunning and warlike nation—wrongs which may be brought home to us in bitter experience. The motif of the play is involved in a warning to prepare, with only a suggestion as to our deeper motives for entering a world conflict. There is no doubt that our people are deeply moved by the terrible wrong and injustice being done by a powerful autocracy in Europe—the fact that we have sent millions to relieve distress shows how we feel—but we have realized our own impotence, and have held aloof, with a hope that some adjustment might be reached in the European situation without our direct interference.

The Russian revolution had done much to transform our passive attitude into an active one, because the issue is fast becoming that of our own Revolutionary War; the issue of our Civil War. Those are issues we cannot evade, and they are suggested all too mildly in "Womanhood." The great world issue becomes ours when it is clearly defined as that of democracy in opposition to organized tyranny. Here and there Mr. Blackton makes this point, and whenever he does the audience storms its approval. As it is never too late to add an effective subtitle, he might interpolate that when this Gibraltar of democracy goes into the world war it will be to stay until there is neither Hohenzollern nor Hapsburg left to break world peace.

There is great power in the presentation of "Womanhood," and it is so timely that it is bound to win wherever adequately shown.

ART DRAMA'S latest offering, "The Inevitable," a five-reel drama produced by the Erbograph company, in which Anna Q. Nilsson is featured, is a photoplay that follows the same general lines of many that have gone before. A few new twists and a few more or less dramatic situations have been injected into the hackneyed idea of the girl who, to avenge some one or something, plans to wreck a man's life, but who, in the end, falls in love with her intended victim. This time the girl plans to ruin the son of a man who is indirectly responsible for her father's death—death resulting from shock when the old father is accused of theft by his partner.

Three reels would have been plenty in which to tell the story unfolded in "The Inevitable," and to bring the length up to five reels much superfluous matter has been used. The result is a slowness of action that particularly characterizes the first two reels. The last three reels are somewhat better than the first two in action and power to hold interest suspended. A fairly good fight is staged by two of the characters. In the picture we are given to know that the girl's bills are being paid by a youth who, of course, later marries her.

Anna Q. Nilsson is attractive and capable enough to cause chief interest to center on her, both as to herself and as to the character she portrays. Chief in support is Chester Barnett. Other important members of the cast are Lucile Dorrington, William Bayley, Wilson Reynolds and Albert Favernier.

Production details are adequate.

A FIVE-REEL problem photoplay of considerable strength and dramatic worth is "The Power of Decision," a production made for Metro by Rolfe Photoplays, Inc. Much of the interest that is compelled by the picture centers around Frances Nelson, who is seen in the featured role. Miss Nelson displays an ability for emotional work that is sure to win her many new followers. She is surrounded by a good cast, which fact adds considerably to the worth of the picture as dramatic entertainment.

In the film we see Miss Nelson as a girl who, falling in love with an artist, marries him without the knowledge that he is already married. As soon as she finds out that the man is already married she leaves him, to later meet with Austin Bland, an entirely different type of man. She marries him. Through a series of logical circumstances the girl is led into a situation in which she is confronted with the alternative of going with the man she once loved, and who exerts an evil influence over her, or remaining with her husband. The power of decision rests with her. She chooses the right road.

The continuity in the picture is almost unbroken, and the production given it by John W. Noble is entirely in keeping with the good story material furnished by George W. Gunn.

The arch swindler succeeds in not only stripping them of their money, but manages to separate a young minister from his sweetheart, and then persuades the penniless girl to become an inmate of his house. Once there, she is drugged and, after regaining her senses, consents to remain as the man's mistress. Vice is overthrown at the finish, however, and the minister, who hasn't acted just as he should himself, is united to the heroine. A symbolical character, called "The Servant," runs through the plot. His mission is to point out the straight and narrow path to all other characters.

The story itself is not without interest, but it is told after the fashion of a simple and moral tale of several generations back, and is provided with subtitles on the order of "Beware of the wolf in sheep's clothing." It is acted in the proper spirit by Marc MacDermott, Miriam Nesbitt, William Wadsworth, Robert Brower, Edward Longman, Jessie Stevens and Florence Stover, and may be regarded as an excellent example of its class. The production, directed by Ben Turbett, is in keeping with the play's requirements.

THE Message Photoplay Company, Inc., which is a unit of the B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation, is responsible for the public presentation of the photoplay entitled "Birth Control," in which Margaret Sanger appears and in an unobtrusive manner sets forth her beliefs regarding a question which has aroused not a little controversy within the past few months. It will be remembered that Mrs. Sanger, for advocating the diffusion of knowledge concerning birth control among the more ignorant and unfortunately situated of her sex, was forced to submit to a brief prison sentence.

The picture in question has been handled with great care and contains story interest sufficient to hold the attention through five reels of film. In the opening of the production a double exposure scene throws on the screen simultaneously two contrasting pictures in which the struggling mother of the poor, without money wherewith to purchase the knowledge that would lessen her burdens, and her sister of means, stand side by side. Pictures are also presented of the feminine keeper of public morals, and of the male parasite who seizes upon an opportunity to persecute the little woman who has stirred up more than a "tempest in a teapot" for the replenishing of his own purse. The greater part of the first reel is given over to the visualizing of an interview with Mrs. Sanger. In this many scenes from the overcrowded slums are inserted, showing some of weak and crippled children of exhausted, poverty-stricken mothers, including the story of one mother who had appealed for help and had died because the necessary knowledge had been denied her.

The remaining portion of the picture tells the story of the persecution of Mrs. Margaret Sanger, including scenes at the clinic where she presided, and where mothers of the poor quarters might apply and be helped, while those of physical fitness and in good financial circumstances would be turned away. One of the strong points of the picture consists of the emphasis of the fact that only the unfit and financially depressed women should receive aid at one of these clinics.

The production is one to be recommended, particularly for adult audiences. It is expected that after the Broadway engagement of the picture Mrs. Sanger will tour the country with it, delivering her lecture on "Birth Control."

"Mrs. Balfame"

Splendid Adaptation of Gertrude Atherton's Novel Appearing on Mutual Program Features Nance O'Neil.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

TO NO other Mutual production of recent months can we point with as much assurance with regard to general excellence as to the adaptation of the Gertrude Atherton novel, "Mrs. Balfame," in which Nance O'Neil plays the role of the unhappy wife. The picture, which contains some six thousand feet of material, was made by the Frank Powell Producing Corporation with a competent cast consisting of Frank Belcher, Robert Elliott, Agnes Eyre, Annie Raines, Alfred Hickman, Grace Gordon, Aubrey Beattie and Elsie Earle.

The story deals not with the usual triangular love story, but with the predicament of the wife of a drunken politician who, in desperation, is about to poison him when, through a mysterious circumstance, the mystery of which is not revealed until the close of the picture, he is shot near his own home. Throughout the production we are inclined to place the blame on Mrs. Balfame, who lives in constant dread of the accusation, because of a happening which occurred on the night of the murder. After having mixed poison in a glass of lemonade and leaving it on the dining-room table for her husband to drink on his return, she saw some one prowling about the grounds of her home. Taking a revolver in her hand, she stole quickly from the house to the grounds, hid behind a tree, and, upon seeing her husband drop dead from a shot from some other revolver, she fled to the house, threw away the poison, rinsed the glass, and rushed to her own room, where she quickly disrobed and turned out the light. Finally she is arrested for the murder, and is defended at the trial by a young lawyer who is in love with her. A confession signed by Mrs. Balfame's greatest friend, Dr. Anna Steuer, on her deathbed reveals the fact that she, for the sake of her friend, committed the murder.

There is not a wasted moment in the picture. It is purely a tragedy, consistent in story and as totally without message of morality as any other story of this character. It does, however, afford fine entertainment, stimulates thought on the subject that it proposes to discuss, and has fine dramatic values.

"The Manxman"

Nine-Reel Screen Version of Hall Caine's Widely-Read Novel, Produced on the Isle of Man by George Loane Tucker, Has Much Scenic Beauty—Cosmofotofilm Release.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ADMIRERS of Hall Caine's novel, "The Manxman," will be rejoiced to learn that it has been transferred to the screen. The word transferred may be taken almost literally, as the nine-reel version produced by George Loane Tucker was photographed on the Isle of Man, and the scenario was made under the supervision of the author himself, very little of the original story being left out. Mr. Caine also had a voice in selecting the cast. The result of all this is a slow moving picture, told in narrative form, that has authentic local color and many movements of great scenic beauty.

The theme of the novel is one of sacrifice, the tale of a man who loved a woman well enough to give her up when he found that her heart was another's. Pete, the Manxman, one of the inhabitants of that sturdy little island in the center of the Irish Sea, is an appealing character, a simple soul, but worth twenty of the man to whom he yields his wife and child. Fred Groves, the actor intrusted with the part, gives a sympathetic and finely human performance of the Manxman. The other actors of "the eternal triangle" are Elizabeth Risdon as Kate, and Henry Ainley as Philip. Miss Risdon is attractive and plays with feeling and skill. Henry Ainley's efforts, although earnest and effective, are overburdened with the weight of mental suffering. The other professional actors comprise an unbroken list of competent impersonations, and the large number of natives that assist in the different scenes enter into their work with commendable zeal. Neither must the baby be forgotten. Although shown in too many close-ups, it is a most engaging bit of humanity, with a smile that is irresistible.

The most serious criticism to be made of the picture is its length. Less of reverence for Mr. Caine's work and more regard for good showmanship would result in the elimination of every possible foot of film that can be spared without weakening the story. After all, a moving picture is intended for showing in a theater before a mixed body of spectators, and the more narrative fiction can be cast into the form of drama the firmer its hold on the attention of every one present. How many persons read a novel through at one sitting—even the works of Hall Caine? The psychology of the crowd is worth careful study. The closest possible attention from the greatest attainable number is the objective of all drama. Narrative fiction on the screen should follow the same rule.

Explains Purchase of "Mothers of France"

"Specials No Better Than Real Program Features," Says Head of World Film Corporation.

"OUR purchase of 'Mothers of France'," said William A. Brady, director general of World Pictures Brady-Made, "had an object very considerably beyond money making. In the first place, it enabled us to do something of very unusual value for exhibitors using the World program, and, in the second, it placed us in the position to prove our contention that specials are no better than real program features—only sometimes longer.

"In his letter to our corporation, S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rialto theater, New York, said 'Mothers of France' was the most valuable attraction that had ever played in his theater, because it brought people in who had never been there before. This is precisely what we are going to do for theaters taking World service.

"We are convinced that World Pictures Brady-Made are, in fact, a program of specials. In case there may be persons who think we are overenthusiastic about our own product, let us refer them to the Sarah Bernhardt picture play, which we did not make, but which we place upon our program, first, to give our exhibitors the best that the market affords, and, second, to indicate that we do not fear comparisons.

"If we are willing to sandwich a feature like 'Mothers of France' in between two of our regular releases we are certainly submitting our own pictures to as severe a test as could possibly be brought to bear.

"What is more, the test is not to end with this particular instance. At the time of making the arrangement for the Mme. Bernhardt photoplay in America we also concluded a deal under which we are to have the rights for certain other great French pictures made by the same company and under the same director, Louis Mercanton."

Comments on the Films

EXCLUSIVELY BY OUR OWN STAFF

General Film Company.

HARD TIMES IN HARDSCRAPPLE (Kalem).—This one-reel Ham and Bud comedy brings to the screen a new stunt—a sprinting bed. The reel is a burlesque on the Wild West type of stories, and the funny pair, aided by Henry Murdoch and a pretty girl, get over a number of laughs. Two gunmen and gambling joints, mountains and arroyos, form the backgrounds of the action. A fair offering.

THE MUNITIONS PLOT (Kalem).—Helen Gibson performs some more unusually hazardous feats in this one-reel number of the "A Daughter of Daring" series. Her stunts consist of several leaps and swings from bridges and cables to moving trains. She foils the plot of Germans and averts a collision between two cars loaded with high explosives and the limited.

THE GODDESS OF CHANCE (Selig).—A one-reel drama evidently made some time ago. The story concerns gambling. One man loses everything at cards, and is about to kill himself when things are given a happier turn. The cast includes E. J. Brady, Virginia Kirtley, Robyn Adair and Eugenia Forde.

General Film Company Specials.

BE MY BEST MAN (Essanay).—One of the "Black Cat" features. This is a two-reel mystery drama with enough suspense and excitement and human interest to make it interesting. The story tells of a young man who wants to marry a girl but has to overcome mother's preference for a baron to do so. He does, however, and things are made all right. Probably the best touch in the picture is the introduction, which shows a crowd of onlookers watching the newly-wedded pair. Then the action dissolves into what happened before the marriage. The leading parts are taken by Edward Arnold, Hazel Daly and Ernest Maupain.

THE TYRANT OF CHIRACAHUA (Kalem).—An episode of "The American Girl" series. Of its type there are few better two-reelers produced than this one. It is a Western with its locale in that part of Mexico lying just south of California. Madge King (Marin Sais) this time rescues her father and his superintendent, both of whom have been kidnapped by a Mexican tyrant. A longer review is printed in another column of this issue.

FATHER AND SON (Selig).—An ordinary two-reel drama. The story tells of the son of a divorced couple who later plans a theft with a beggar. The beggar proves to be the youth's father—the divorced husband. The cast includes Fred Eckhart, Byrdie Zuber, M. C. Von Betz and Casson Ferguson.

Art Dramas, Inc.

THE INEVITABLE (Erbograph), April 12.—Anna Q. Nilsson is the featured player in this five-reel drama. A full review is printed on another page of this issue.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

THE GIRL IN THE CHECKERED COAT (Bluebird), April 23.—A five-reel drama that can be booked with the assurance that its paper claims are borne out on the screen. Dorothy Phillips is seen to excellent advantage in a dual role—that of two sisters whose moral characteristics are almost exact opposites. The picture is thoroughly worth while. A longer review is printed on another page of last week's issue.

Cosmofotofilm Company.

THE MANXMAN (Cosmofotofilm), April.—A nine-reel screen version of Hall Caine's novel of "The Manxman," this picture was made on the Isle of Man. It follows the story closely and is full of scenic beauty. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Frohman Amusement Corporation.

GOD'S MAN (Frohman), April.—A nine-reel screen version of a novel by George Bronson Howard, this picture is finely produced, and is acted by a large and skillfully selected cast headed by H. B. THE POWER OF DECISION (Rolfe), April 9.—A five-reel problem photoplay of considerable strength and dramatic worth. Frances Nelson is the featured player, and is surrounded by a good cast. The story brings about the situation in which a woman is faced with the alternative of going with the man she first loved or staying with the man she later married. She chooses the right road. In another column of this issue a longer review is printed.

PUTTING IT OVER ON HUBBY (Metro-Drew), April 9.—A delightful one-reel domestic comedy with Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew at their best. The film shows how Friend Wife rifles the pockets of Friend Husband. The resulting complications and counter moves of the pair are indeed humorous.

Mutual Film Corporation

MUTUAL TOURS NO. 22 (Gaumont), April 3.—This is an especially interesting and timely reel. In it we see the Danish West Indies, which have just been purchased by the United States Government. We see the harbors, fortifications, cities and other points of interest in the islands that form the group; also the modes of living of the inhabitants, and their chief industrial pursuits—raising cotton and sugar.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 118 (Gaumont), April 4.—Interesting things in this reel are an aeroplane that carries a motorcycle and messenger, a new armored motor car with observation tower; scenes showing the interned German sailors leaving Philadelphia, the mobilization of the boy scouts and the section devoted to the new styles in ladies' footwear. The reel closes with an appeal to the patriotism of men eligible for navy duty and shows some of the applicants being examined.

THE LADY DETECTIVE (Cub), April 5.—In this number of the Jerry comedies he plays the role of a female detective, becoming the maid of a pretty young lady. Some rather amusing scenes occur in the comedy which will be found entertaining to the ordinary audience.

REEL LIFE NO. 49 (Gaumont), April 5.—This reel contains an interesting screen exposition on the flying torpedo, a new weapon of war which is dropped from a speeding aeroplane. In the film we see a ship sunk by the torpedo. Other interesting things are "Dancing for Health?"—at Denishawn; how anyone can make an ice skooter with a few barrel staves, etc., and Indian basket making. An interesting reel.

HER HERO (Strand), April 11.—The first of the Billie Rhodes comedies. This reel is a refined comedy that contains no little amount of amusement. The story tells of a youth who gets into many funny situations when he changes coats with his pal and takes his sweetheart and her sister out for a day at the country club. In the end, even if he did have to swipe a counterfeit bill, he wins the girl.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

WHY BEN BOLTED (Vogue), April 7.—A two-reel comedy number with Ben Turpin and Edward Laurie doing most of the work. The offering is of the slapstick variety and several laughs are registered in this manner. Ben and his pal, tramps, get away with a lot of stuff when Ed. masquerades as a gentleman. In reality he is a counterfeiter. They get mixed up with an auto magnate and his daughter with quite laughable result.

MRS. BALFAME (Mutual Star Production), April 9.—A six-part adaptation of Gertrude Atherton's novel featuring Nance O'Neil. The picture was made by the Frank Powell Producing Corporation, and is of exceptional excellence as regards dramatic and entertainment values. The story treats of the predicament of the unhappy wife of a drunken politician, who is accused of his murder following a resolution on her part to administer a dose of poison. The suspense of the story is cleverly held. A full review of the production will be found elsewhere.

THE RAILROAD RAIDERS NO. 1 (Signal), April 9.—"Circumstantial Evidence" is the title of this the first episode of the serial. Helen Holmes is the star, and in the first chapter is supported by Will Chapman, Thomas G. Lingham, Leo D. Maloney, William Buhler and William Brunton. This episode is thrilling and holds the interest as have others of the Frank Spearman stories which have been handled by J. P. McGowan with Helen Holmes as the featured member of the cast. The story centers about a gang of raiders who steal from the railroads and in this particular chapter have tried to get away with seventeen thousand dollars.

HIGH PLAY (Mutual Star Production), April 9.—William Russell is the featured player in this five-reel offering. It is a moderately strong melodrama with sustained interest and enough story material to keep things moving on the screen and to keep the attention centered there. A longer review is printed in another column of this issue.

THE SINGLE CODE (Centaur), April 16.—A five-reel story with the sex motive predominant. This has a strong plot, which holds the interest well in spite of numerous drawbacks in presentation. The photography is uneven, but generally acceptable, and there are one or two theatrical touches that might well have been avoided. A man, who has himself lived with a mistress, marries a girl who had sinned. They are happy, and when the wife learns her husband's story she forgives. The husband, however, when he learns his wife's story, deserts her. The close is rather abrupt. This handles a delicate problem entertainingly and without offense. Crane Wilbur, Olive Stokes, Florence Printy, F. A. Johnson, Harrish Ingraham, Nan Christy and John Oaker are in the cast.

PERILS OF OUR GIRL REPORTERS (Niagara).—"The Meeting" is the title of this number of this serial. The story, while it is entertaining, is not particularly strong, and treats of how a young wife, growing tired of working to keep an indolent and vicious husband, goes to another city and finally marries her employer, believing her own husband dead. One of the old gang with which her husband associated discovers her, and looking up her former husband proceeds to stir up trouble. Finally in a struggle with the woman the former husband is shot and the domestic happiness of the woman is again established.

Paramount Pictures Corporation

PARAMOUNT-BRAY PICTOGRAPH NO. 62, April 9.—This number of the Pictographs contains some interesting subject matter, including "Developing the Ballet," with scenes photographed in the ballet school of the Metropolitan Opera House with Ottokar Bartik instructing the class; "Prehistoric Tar Pits," and "Curiosities of New York." The cartoon number of this issue is "Miss Nanny Goat at the Circus." A full review of this subject will be found in the Motion Picture Educator of April 21.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THE WINGS OF DEATH (Pathe), April 8.—The title of the 13th instalment of "Patria" refers to a struggle in an aeroplane, between the American girl and a Jap. Patrio gets the better of him, and he falls to his death. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

MUSIC HATH CHARMS (International), April 15.—One of the George McManus "Bringing Up Father" series of cartoon comedies; this picture is on the same reel with an educational, Button Making. The cartoon is filled with broad humor, and the educational shows the method of making buttons from vegetable ivory.

FLORENCE ROSE FASHIONS NO. 28 (Pathe), April 22.—"The Season's Novelties" is the alluring title of this number of the Florence Rose Fashions. The same skillful and artistic display of ladies' wearing apparel is shown. "Chiffa Gorge," a beautiful scenic taken in picturesque Algeria, shares the reel.

MAX THE LADY KILLER (Pathe), April 22.—Some one pins the sign "Kiss Me" on the back of handsome Max, and a string of females tries to accept the invitation. They follow their hero to the home of his sweetheart and discover that he is already spoken for. The reel is equal to the others that have preceded it from the other side of the ocean.

THE DEAD COME BACK (Astra), April 22.—Number 6 of "Mysteries of the Double Cross" serial, contains the first hint to the identity of the Masked Stranger. Everyone is kept busy during the two reels, and the interest of the story is as gripping as ever. The instalment is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

THE HUNTING OF THE HAWK (Astra), April 22.—William Courtenay is the star of this five-reel crook drama, which has a surprise finish and a series of incidents that hold the interest all through the action. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Universal Film Mfg. Company

ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 66 (Universal), April 4.—United States war preparations are featured in this diversified number, the subject being treated in various interesting phases. Other pictorial topics are included.

FOLLOW THE TRACKS (Nestor), April 16.—Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Edith Roberts and Gertrude Astor appear in this breezy comedy. Eddie and Lee leave their wives to attend a banquet. They accumulate too much champagne and have a funny time with a borrowed Ford car. Well handled and amusing throughout.

IT HAPPENED IN ROOM 7 (Victor), April 17.—A comedy number, by Capt. L. T. Peacock. This pictures the separation of a young married couple, because the husband flirts. Later the husband mistakenly invades his ex-wife's room and goes to sleep in a chair. She comes in and takes his roll, as alimony. The plot is trifling and represents little more than an illustrated joke. An average subject.

CHUBBY TAKES A HAND (Laemmle), April 18.—A little comedy, by E. Magnus Ingleton, featuring Zoe Rae, Wm. V. Mong, Violet Schram and others. The small girl pits her wits against a socially ambitious mother and sees that her hero gets the daughter's hand. The plot is not exceptional in any way, but entertains fairly well.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE NO. 15, April 20.—This issue of the Screen Magazine contains the following interesting subjects carefully illustrated: The "Creeping Grip," a new war engine; "A Diamond-Back Terrapin Hatchery," "A Florida Milky Way," "Molding Rookwood Pottery," and "Time Savers for Your Kitchen," including the latest devices, the usefulness of which is demonstrated by Mrs. A. Louise Andrea, and an animated cartoon by J. R. Williams entitled "Trench Warfare in the Sahara."

TAKE BACK YOUR WIFE (Joker), April 21.—A pleasing burlesque number by Chas. J. Wilson, Jr., featuring Gale Henry, Wm. Franey, Cas. Conklin and Lillian Peacock. The bandits capture two tourists. They demand ransom money for the wife, but the husband refuses to pay it. She makes love to the bandit leader and he is glad to get rid of her. This is quite laughable and well presented.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials

THE FLOATING SIGNAL, April 8.—No. 15 of "The Purple Mask," Universal Special. Patsy, in jail for supposed participation in the air raids, escapes by aid of her Apache friends. She foils a plot on the part of some revolutionists to blow up some secret service men. Later, when imprisoned in a smugglers' cabin, she sends a message on a life preserver, which is picked up by Detective Kelly. There is interesting material in this, but it is loosely constructed and lacks suspense.

RING RIVALS (L-KO), April 11.—A two-reel comic, featuring Dan Russell, Gladys Roach, Dick Smith and others. This has a strong "sporting" turn, two ring battles being featured. The action begins in the East and then drifts out to a small Western town. Dan rules the latter place until his old rival shows up and conquers him. This is slightly rough in spots, but does not greatly offend. Some of the small business is very funny.

A PRISONER OF LOVE (Universal Special), April 14.—No. 16, concluding number of "The Purple Mask" serial. In this final installment Detective Kelly releases Patsy from the smuggler's shack. She escapes by swimming, but is later taken by the police. Kelly then intercedes for her, and after agreement of the officials not to prosecute they are married. The serial, as a whole, has not been as strong as the opening number promised, though there have been all through it indications of what Francis Ford and Grace Cunard are capable of at their best. What they seem chiefly to require is a well-sustained plot in which the story interest is kept uppermost at all times.

THE FLOWER OF DOOM (Red Feather), April 16.—A five-reel "Chinatown" story, written and produced by Rex Ingram. It features Yvette Mitchell, Gypsy Hart, Wedgwood Nowell, M. K. Wilson and others. The story itself contains numerous threads, which are none too well connected at the beginning, but are later drawn together in an entertaining way. A "tong" murder, opium den scenes, the abduction of a white girl and other features are introduced. The production is strong in atmosphere and gives a good idea of the average American Chinese quarter. The later scenes contain some interesting melodrama.

FOR LACK OF EVIDENCE (Gold Seal), April 17.—A three-reel subject, by Blair Hall, dealing with the white slave motive. The cast includes Tina Marshall, Adella Barker, Ned Burton and George Marlo. The hero is a newspaper reporter who endeavors to save a girl from the clutches of a procuress. The girl later turns out to be a female detective. This follows along in the manner of former offerings of the type and seems rather like a return to familiar plot material. The struggle of the girl and her would-be seducer is too melodramatic. If this is cut out there is nothing else of an offensive nature in the production, but it is not a very commendable type of story. Some of the photography is too dark.

LOVE AND BLAZES (L-KO), April 18.—A two-reel subject, featuring Phil Dunham, Lucille Hutton and others. This comic opens in a fire department, where numerous farcical incidents are pictured, done in broad burlesque style. Some of it is a little vulgar, but there is nothing to give great offense. In the second reel the firemen appear in "Exhibition Day" stunts. This never becomes extremely laughable, but contains a lot of diverting nonsense and makes a fair subject.

THE TOPSY-TURVY TWINS (Victor), April 19.—A breezy two-reel comedy by Walter Woods, featuring Carter De Haven and Vola Smith. He doubles in the part of two brothers, one a city sport, raised by his uncle, and the other a quiet country youth, raised by his grandmother and aunts. The latter goes to the city, where he becomes involved in the gay life led by his brother anl they wind up by changing places. The double exposure photography in this is much better than the average and the whole production shows careful handling throughout. It is a lively production and full of interest.

THE INTERNATIONAL SPY (Imp), April 20.—The seventh episode of "The Perils of the Secret Service," by George Bronson Howard, featuring Kingsley Benedict as a society detective. In this number he rounds up Guy Sterner, a weakling, who has married a wealthy girl and obtained a position in a state department. The close is tragic and well-staged. The detective shoots one of the accomplices and assumes his place. The weakling, after being unmasked, kills himself. A good number of the type, containing elements of quite strong appeal.

THE TELL-TALE CLUE (Bison), April 21.—A two-reel subject by Helen Jonas, featuring Molly Malone, Jack Nelson and others. The plot is conventional, but entertaining. The frustrated hanging at the close seemed a none too convincing feature, as it was led up to rather hurriedly. The picturesque settings and excellent photography do much to make this offering attractive.

Triangle Film Corporation.

PADDY O'HARA (Ince-Kay Bee), April 15.—A mythical kingdom romance on the Prisoner of Zenda style, with William Desmond in the character of a gay and adventurous war correspondent. Beautiful settings throughout.

AN OLD-FASHIONED YOUNG MAN (Fine Arts), April 15.—A story of complicated plot, well worked out by the author, Frank E. Woods, with Robert Herron in the title role. Fairly interesting, but capable of larger development.

World Pictures.

FORGET-ME-NOT (Peerless), April 16.—This five-reel photoplay was adapted from a celebrated drama of twenty-five years ago. The screen version differs considerably from the original, but retains much of its dramatic force. Kitty Gordon plays the star part. The picture is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Miscellaneous.

BIRTH CONTROL (Message—Moss), April.—A five-part production in which Mrs. Margaret Sanger is featured. The production is one to be highly recommended as explaining the primary objects of the Birth Control movement which was started by Mrs. Sanger. A full review of the production will be found elsewhere.

NEW FILM COMPANY IN CANADA.

An announcement of much interest to the moving picture trade and public in Canada was made this week. A new company, known as the Independent Film and Theater Supply Company, has been launched with A. H. Sawyer as general manager. Arrangements have been completed with George F. Perkins, general manager of the Perkins Electric Company, whereby the Independent Film and Theater Supply Company and the Perkins Electric Company will be handled from the same offices throughout the Dominion.

The Perkins Electric Company is the exclusive distributor in Canada of the Power's and Simplex projection machines, Speer carbons, Minusa screens, and other standard moving picture supplies. By the working arrangements entered into between these two companies exhibitors may now secure their film service and their moving picture supplies from the same company. An extensive advertising campaign is being started by both companies. Already changes have been made and the offices consolidated in Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, and St. John, N. B. Mr. Perkins is leaving very shortly for Vancouver, where the same plan will be carried out.

The Independent Film and Theater Supply Company has bought the Art Dramas franchise for Canada, and has twelve pictures in Canada at the present time, the first of which will not be released until the latter part of April. Art Dramas will be released at the rate of one a week. With Mr. Sawyer's advertising ability and success in putting films over, the future of Art Dramas program in Canada seems assured. The Independent will also handle box office "specials," and has on hand several big productions. A new serial, to follow "The Crimson Stain Mystery," which is now playing to big success in Canada, will also be marketed through the Independent.

NEW WALT MASON COMEDIES AT RIALTO.

A new type of single-reel comedy made its appearance at the Rialto, New York, last week in the form of the first of a series of Walt Mason human interest stories, "The Dipper," based on Walt Mason's popular poem of that name, and produced by the Filmcraft Corporation, of 8 West Fortieth street.

This series of comedies, of which there will be one a week, will aim to stir the risibilities by a scrupulously natural treatment of the quaintly humorous, perennially optimistic philosophy of Walt Mason, the Emporia, Kan., bard who keeps the newspapers of the country hustling to provide enough white space to accommodate what he pounds out day after day in his spare time after he and William Allen White get through with their own paper, the Emporia Gazette.

The first production, "The Dipper," directed by Addison J. Rothermel on the beautiful grounds of the old Hawley plantation outside of Fayetteville, N. C., received the instant and unqualified approval of the Rialto clientele all during the week.

Royale V. Rothermel, general manager of Filmcraft, is strongly inclined to the idea of releasing these comedies through independent exchanges, and states that he will have a definite announcement of interest to the trade ready in a very few days.

"THE TRUFFLERS" RELEASE POSTPONED.

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay announce that "The Trufflers," formerly scheduled for release April 9, will not be released until later in the month, because they want exhibitors to get the full benefit of a nationwide advertising campaign starting immediately in all the Hearst publications. This means that full page display ads and full page illustrated feature stories will be printed in all the Hearst daily papers from coast to coast during several weeks preceding release date. Besides many smaller ads and shorter stories, there will also be a campaign of exploitation in behalf of "The Trufflers" through the International News Service, an agency controlled by William Randolph Hearst.

Special Booking Plan for "Honor System"

Direct Bookings of Fox Feature for New York and New Jersey.

OFFERS of unprecedented rentals from exhibitors of the metropolitan district have caused the Fox Film Corporation to make a radical innovation in the handling of its big ten-reel sensational cinemelodrama, "The Honor System."

Many offers of from $3,000 to $4,000 per week for "The Honor System" have been received, and in response the Fox people have established a special booking department for the city and state of New York and the state of New Jersey for the handling of this great production. The booking for this territory will be in charge of Carey Wilson, who will have his offices on the fourth floor of 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York city. While the bookings for the city and state of New York and New Jersey will be made direct, two other territories have been disposed of on a state right basis. Proposals have also been submitted for many of the desirable territories remaining.

There is hardly one of the better class exhibitors in the metropolitan district who is not represented by a telegraphic or mail offer for "The Honor System." These exhibitors, who by reason of their proximity to New York are best able to watch the market, have been quick to realize the box office possibilities of the production. They have not only had their own judgment to rely upon, but they have been able to watch the effect of "The Honor System" upon the 240,000 people who have seen it during its three months' run at the Lyric theater, Broadway and Forty-second street, New York city.

The marvelous personal and human appeal of "The Honor System" has been irresistible, and has so impressed exhibitors that they have offered Mr. Fox extraordinary rentals.

The state right proposals will be handled by Winfield Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, who has already had propositions aggregating $400,000.

"The Honor System" received from the New York newspaper and trade press the greatest praise ever accorded a picture. Some of the enthusiastic critics have declared that "The Honor System" eclipsed "The Birth of a Nation." All of them were unsparing in their commendation.

WARWICK TRAINING FOR "A MODERN OTHELLO."

In filming "A Modern Othello," an original story written especially for Robert Warwick by his director, Leonce Perret, Mr. Warwick has to do many unusual stunts, a number of which are performed on horseback. A good horseman ordinarily, Mr. Warwick, rather than have some one double for him in the thrilling as well as daring scenes, engaged Johnny Breen, well known turfman and former jockey, to train him for the stunts which will be required of him in filming this picture.

Mr. Warwick has been riding in Central Park as well as at several of the Long Island courses, where he could hurdle and practice stunts which the park authorities would not tolerate in Central Park, and when Mr. Warwick's company left last Friday for Richmond, Va., it included Mr. Breen, who will keep the star in shape until the completion of this picture.

"A Modern Othello" will mark Mr. Warwick's third contribution to the Selznick program, and Elaine Hammerstein, remembered for her excellent work in "The Argyle Case," will again play opposite Warwick, having been engaged for the next two Warwick-Selznick productions.

"THE LITTLE CHEVALIER" FOR CONQUEST PICTURES.

The motion picture rights to M. E. M. Davis' "The Little Chevalier," a stirring tale of Louisiana, laid in the days when that territory was a French colony, have been secured by Thomas A. Edison, Inc., for picturization for the Conquest Pictures program. Plans have been made to give this superb story an exceptionally fine production, and Shirley Mason, a star who is ideally fitted to the part, will play the title role. While the story warrants a five-reel production it will be made either in three or four reels in order to have it conform to the requirements of the new program on which it will appear, and it promises to be one of the most attractive subjects that will be seen among the early Conquest Pictures publications. Miss Mason will be supported by Ray McKee, and among the other members of the cast will be Richard Tucker, William Wadsworth and Joseph Burke.

MONMOUTH OFFICIALS PLAN TRIPS.

W. E. Kesting, for many years connected with the motion picture industry, leaves New York next week on an extended tour in the interest of the Monmouth Film Corporation.

He will visit the various exchanges of the Mutual Film Corporation in Texas, touching St. Louis, Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, etc.

Heavy bookings on the "Jimmie Dale, Alias the Grey Seal," series necessitates this flying trip of Mr. Westing's.

His trip will be followed up by Mr. Burnstein, vice-president and general manager of the Monmouth Film Corporation, who will extend his trip to the Coast, touching the various exchanges throughout the far West.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"TREASON" (Bluebird).

Timeliness marks the release on Bluebird's program for May 14. "Treason" is the title and the military motive of the subject is expressed in that one word. Robert Lee Weigert wrote the story and furnished the scenario from which Allen Holubar directed the production. This will introduce Mr. Holubar to Bluebirds both as a director and featured actor, the leading roles also employing Joseph Girard and Lois Wilson as names to be carried prominently in the advertising.

The locale represents an imaginary principality at war with its neighbor. Battle scenes of seething activities, illustrating trench warfare and all modern methods of extermination will be timely features in reflecting the military state of mind in which the nation finds itself even before the picture is released. As a call to patriotism, and an inspiration to love of country and the flag, Bluebird believes that "Treason" will furnish valuable assistance in times when the Nation needs leaven for its martial spirit.

Apart from a great host employed in the battle scenes, Leo Pierson, George Pearce, Burton Law, Edward Hearn, L. M. Wells and Dorothy Davenport will have supporting roles. "Treason" is likely to register heavily at the box-office of exhibitors because of its patriotic appeal and will stir enthusiastic response from its observers because of its sensational call to the spirit of the times.

TRIANGLE FEATURE RELEASES FOR APRIL 29TH.

Wilfred Lucas and Charles Ray are the stars of the Triangle feature releases for April 29. Lucas will appear in a Fine Arts mystery story of rapid action entitled "Hands Up!" directed by Tod Browning. Charles Ray will be starred in a Kay Bee production of college life from the pen of C. Gardner Sullivan, known as "The Pinch Hitter," directed by Victor L. Schertzinger under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince.

As the star of "Hands Up!" Wilfred Lucas takes the part of a reformed bandit who has paid the penalty of his wrongs to society and has become a successful business man and president of a railroad. He believes that his past is safely buried, but while he is taking a journey with his young daughter, the private car in which they travel is held up by outlaws, and complications ensue which enmesh the railroad builder and his daughter in a series of stirring events.

"The Pinch Hitter" is a typical American comedy of farm and college life. The opening scenes are laid in a backwoods hamlet known as Turkey Creek, where Joel Parker, impersonated by Charles Ray, is the trial and despair of his close-fisted old father, who is convinced that he is a spineless sluggard, unfitted to do a man's work. Merely to keep the promise he had made the boy's mother before her death, Obediah Parker sends his son to college, hoping to be well rid of him. After many amusing trials, during which he is the butt of his heartless fellow students, young Parker succeeds in making himself solid with Abbie Nettleton, who operates the students' favorite lunch room. Abbie succeeds in arousing the lad's smouldering ambitions so that he successfully meets the big crisis of his career on the diamond. As a result, he is suddenly transformed from a joke "mascot" into the prize pinch-hitter of the year.

MAE MURRAY SIGNS AGAIN WITH LASKY.

Just before departing for California to visit his studio at Hollywood, Jesse L. Lasky announced the signing of a new contract with Mae Murray, by the terms of which she will appear in Lasky-Paramount pictures for the next two years. Miss Murray has just completed "The Primrose Ring," an adaptation of Ruth Sawyer's delightful story, for the Eastern scenes of which she made the transcontinental journey.

The success scored by Miss Murray upon the screen is a source of gratification to the Lasky company, because of the fact that it was this concern which introduced Miss Murray to the photoplay public, and under whose management she has remained throughout her screen career.

While Miss Murray is in New York City she will be featured in "Little Miss Grown-Up," at the Famous Players studio, before returning to the Coast studios of the company. After the conclusion of this one picture, Miss Murray will return to the Coast to star in a number of pictures which are already being prepared for her use.

"A MAGDALENE OF THE HILLS" (Metro.)

"A Magdalene of the Hills," with charming Mabel Taliaferro as the star, is the feature released on the Metro program April 16. This powerful five-reel Metro wonderplay is a story of a mountain girl's love. It is presented by B. A. Rolfe, and was produced by Rolfe Photoplays, Inc. Harry Chandlee wrote the story, which was put into scenario form by June Mathis. John W. Noble directed the production, and the photography was done by Herbert O. Carleton.

In "A Magdalene of the Hills" Miss Taliaferro again proves herself an emotional actress of unusual power. Heretofore she has appeared as "the sweet girl in rags" type; but in this mountain story, with its background of rugged beauty, she is a girl who is torn between love and a spirit of vengeance.

"LOCAL COLOR" (Essanay).

Here's a new type of detective story that's got a regular punch in it. A would-be novelist, his manuscripts rejected because they are not true-to-life, ventures into the underworld to get some local color. He succeeds, and also gets on the track of a notorious gang of robbers whom he brings to justice. The picture is replete with thrills, and has a good love story interwoven into the plot. This is a Black Cat Feature with a screen time of 28 minutes. Webster Campbell, who scored a hit in support of Mary Charleson in her current success, "Satan's Private Door," is featured. A capable supporting cast is seen with him. The photography is excellent and there are some mighty good scenic effects.

Pathe Pictures for Week of April 22

William Courtenay and Marguerite Snow, Mollie King, Mrs. Vernon Castle and Max Linder on List.

WITH William Courtenay and Marguerite Snow—chosen as George M. Cohan's screen leading woman—Mollie King, Mrs. Vernon Castle and Max Linder on the program for the week of April 22, Pathe presents a strong front.

William Courtenay and Marguerite Snow in a five-reel feature, said to be one of the strongest ever released under the Rooster trademark, head the list. It is called "The Hunting of the Hawk." It was written by George B. Seitz and directed by George Fitzmaurice. "The Hunting of the Hawk" is rated as better even than "Kick In," the A. H. Woods play in which William Courtenay and Mollie King have had such an overwhelming success throughout the country. "The Hunting of the Hawk" is a gentleman-crook picture, with thrills, fast action, suspense and a twist at the end.

Mollie King in "Mystery of the Double Cross No. 6" is another strong feature on the Pathe bill. This episode is called "The Dead Come Back," and is characterized by surprise after surprise. The production is by Astra under the direction of William Parke. The scenario is by Bertram Milhauser from the story by Gilson Willets.

The fifteenth episode of "Patria," in which Mrs. Vernon Castle brings to a triumphant close her big serial romance of preparedness and society, is entitled "For the Flag." It is claimed for this chapter that it is the greatest serial episode that has ever been made. It shows battle scenes that have seldom been equaled on the screen. Theaters everywhere report big success with "Patria," and it is breaking all records.

Max Linder appears in a one-reel comedy entitled "Max the Lady-Killer." The story tells how Max's little cousin pins a note reading "Kiss me, I love you" on his back. The housekeeper, the janitress and every other lady in town do their best to obey the command, and Max is forced to seek protection at the home of his fiancee.

The twenty-eighth release of the Florence Rose Fashion Films is called "The Season's Novelties," and it shows beautiful girls in beautiful garments of an unusual nature. Many exhibitors have found that they can make friends for their theaters by showing these pictures and advising their women patrons to write for advice as to what to wear and how to wear it to Miss Florence Rose, 303 Fifth avenue, New York.

On the same reel with the fashion release is a Pathe-colored picture called "Chiffa Gorge," which is part of "Picturesque Algiers."

The famous Katzenjammer Kids are represented in the International cartoon, "Robbers and Thieves," on the same reel with which is an interesting International industrial called "Tree Surgery."

The Hearst-Pathe News No. 34 and No. 35 complete the program.

BILLIE RHODES IN STRAND-MUTUAL COMEDIES.

Billie Rhodes is small but she willingly takes upon her square shoulders the responsibility for producing more laughs than anyone else in the Strand comedies which will be released weekly through Mutual starting April 11.

Billie has had about four years' experience before the camera and she has steadily advanced in ability and popularity since her first engagement with the Kalem company. Her first production was "Perils of the Sea," and her good work in that picture led to her assignment to important roles in "A Daughter of the Underworld," "The Man Who Vanished" and others. By this time she had decided that her forte was comedy and decided to devote herself to that branch.

Her next engagement was with A. E. Christie for Nestor Comedies and she worked under his direction for nearly three years. Now she has joined the Caulfield Photoplay Company and will play the featured parts in the new Strand-Mutual comedies. These will be light comedies of the sort with which Miss Rhodes has been identified and will give her even greater opportunities for the display of her talent and charm.

"THE MYSTIC HOUR" (Art Dramas).

"The Mystic Hour" is the title of the Apollo-Art Drama which is to be released on May 10. Agnes Fletcher Bain is the author of this, and the direction is in the hands of Richard Ridgely. Alma Hanlon and Edward Ellis are the featured players.

The story is a mystery tale, taking up a subject never before touched upon in pictures—dreams and their relation to the waking life. It is based upon the studies in dream psychology and the subconscious made by Dr. Sigmund Freud, whose book "The Interpretation of Dreams," has attracted world-wide attention from scientists recently.

The exact nature of the story has not yet been disclosed. It is promised, however, that it will hold the spectator in suspense until the very end. The plot is so constructed that the central mystery—one so wierd that it savors of the supernatural—is not solved until the finish of the picture.

Some new things in photography are promised to audiences in "The Mystic Hour."

Lasky to Produce Hawaiian Legends

Lehua Waipahu, Who Appeared With Sessue Hayakawa in "The Bottle Imp," to Make Adaptations.

AFTER the success scored by Lehua Waipahu, the clever Hawaiian actress who is seen in support of Sessue Hayakawa in the Lasky-Paramount adaptation of Robert Louis Stevenson's "The Bottle Imp," the Lasky company engaged Miss Waipahu to prepare for them a series of scenarios founded on the legends and folk stories of the Hawaiian Islands.

Miss Waipahu, who was educated abroad, has made a study of ancient legends of the idolatrous Hawaiian days before the invasion of Christianity. She has prepared a number of short stories and has presented these in dramatic form.

The aboriginal Hawaiians belonged to the Mala-o-Polynesian race, and just one family bears the strain of the Spanish women of the early voyagers. This is noticeable in the unusual fair skin of Miss Waipahu compared to the reddish brown of the real Kanakas.

PREPAREDNESS KEYNOTE OF SELIG-TRIBUNE NO. 28.

Preparedness is the motif of the latest issue of the Selig-Tribune, the news bi-weekly distributed by the General Film Company. The scenes along this line include a stirring view of Independence Hall in Philadelphia, which is being used for a recruiting station for the fifth time in the history of the United States. At Columbia University, where the students are drilling daily, in order to be ready for Uncle Sam's expected call for 1,800 officers for his volunteer army, the Selig-Tribune photographer secured some excellent views. Again at Annapolis the graduation of 180 midshipmen ahead of time in order to fill vacancies in the navy sounds the note of preparedness. Other interesting portions of this news reel show the opening of the new Hell Gate Bridge in New York City, establishing a direct means of communication between the South and New England. This bridge is of vital importance in war times, and is guarded by soldiers. At Juarez, Mexico, General Bell is shown saying good-bye to Mexican officials before departing to assume his duties as commander of the Department of the East in New York City. This issue of the Selig-Tribune is extremely timely in the face of the present crisis, and should be popular with picture patrons in all portions of the country.

DRAMATIC FORCE IN "THE SECRET SPRING."

The dramatic power of Clarence B. Kelland's novel, "The Hidden Spring," which is being picturized at the Metro-Yorke studios by Fred J. Balshofer, featuring Harold Lockwood, and which will be called "The Secret Spring," is brought out forcefully in a foreword which accompanies the picture. The foreword is this:

"In every man there is a hidden spring. Some men find it and press it themselves. Chance, hardship and ambition have touched the spring; love of man for woman has found it. But neither by hoping nor praying alone has the spring been loosed, and because of this it lies undiscovered in multitudes until it has lost its power. By whatever hand, by whatever love, by whatever hate the spring be pressed, it releases within the man the driving, urging onward, forcing power of the will, and a new man is born to accomplishment—of good or evil."

A-KAY COMPANY MAKES HIT.

A decided success has been registered by the A-Kay Company, 729 Seventh avenue, New York, in marketing "20,000 Feats Under the Sea" on the territorial rights plan. Practically the entire country has been sold within two weeks, and the picture is scoring a great hit everywhere. Its New York first-run commenced two weeks ago at the Broadway theater, where the picture is still running to large and delighted audiences. The title of the second release of the A-Kay Company's series will shortly be announced. The picture itself will be an extremely humorous burlesque of a widely known screen success, and is already near completion.

CHARLES WEEKS GOES TO COAST.

Charles A. Weeks, of the Rex Beach Pictures Company, left Friday on an extended trip to the Coast to arrange the bookings for "The Barrier." He will visit Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle and other important coast cities, and institute extensive newspaper publicity and advertising campaigns in the cities where the picturization of the famous Rex Beach novel is to be shown. H. H. Buxbaum, comptroller of the General Film Company, has also left on an extended Western trip, which will include visits to the General Film branches at Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis and St. Paul.

GENERAL FILM TO RESUME BLACK CAT SERIES.

The Essanay series of Black Cat features based on stories published in the famous Black Cat Magazine are to be resumed after a short cessation, and the next two to be distributed by the General Film Company are "The Finish" and "The Ham What Was." In "The Ham What Was" a novelty is introduced by the acting of Abigail, a trained pig. The animal belongs to a ham circus around which the story is woven. There is plenty of action from start to finish, and a circus side show is screened in full swing with the fat lady, the human skeleton and the bearded female.

BRAY PICTOGRAPH FOR APRIL 15.

The subjects composing the sixty-third release of Paramount-Bray-Pictographs, to appear April 15, do not fail to measure up to the high standard of interest and quality that has come to be expected from the productions of the Bray Studios, Inc., the producers of this famous "magazine-on-the-screen." As usual, there are three magazine subjects, with an animated cartoon following.

In order to take the "Abalone Pearl Fishing," which makes up the first subject, it was necessary to construct a platform on a reef more than a half-mile out in the Pacific Ocean, as the oysters, from which these iridescent bulbs of loveliness make their home, cling to the rocks when the heavy surf pounds continuously. The picture is one of rare beauty, and the conditions under which the divers work make it extremely interesting.

The second subject, "An Old-Fashioned Coon Hunt," was taken in the forests of North Carolina, where an occasional four-footed "coon" is hunted down by sportsmen of the two-footed variety, called by the same name. There is unusual action in this picture and enough excitement and picturesque scenes to assure its appreciation by audiences everywhere.

The third installment of Sam Loyd's amusing Picto-Puzzles follows. The interest which was created by the first two issues will be materially increased by the present group. Mr. Loyd has furnished some clever ideas, which the Bray studios have animated.

Once more Bobby Bumps, cutest of screen kiddies, comes forward with his pup to furnish the laughter in this release. This time the story centers around Daddy Bump's efforts to get rid of the dog and Bobby's determination to keep him at any cost. Needless to say, the dog remains in the Bumps household, but before he is recovered not a few things happen that will keep audiences in a roar.

"PUTTING IT OVER ON HENRY," DREW COMEDY FOR APRIL 9.

"Putting It Over on Henry" is the Metro-Drew comedy, with Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew as stars, which is released on the Metro program April 9. This side-splitting playlet is one of the best of the famous Metro-Drew laugh-makers. It gives a brand new twist to the grand old indoor sport of "nipping small change from hubby's pockets."

"MAX IN A TAXI" (Essanay).

Trade showings of Max Linder's third Essanay comedy, "Max in a Taxi," are now attracting exhibitors' attention at all branch offices of the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service. The noted European comedian's latest American production will be released April 28.

"Max in a Taxi" represents Monsieur Linder's initial effort on the Pacific Coast. Technically it affords an interesting comparison between the natural lighting and scenic effects of California and the artificial accommodations of Essanay's Chicago studios, by which his first two comedies, "Max Comes Across" and "Max Wants a Divorce," were produced. So far Max has uttered no word of praise, one way or the other.

According to reports from the K-E-S-E headquarters, the third picture is up to Essanay's standard technically. The photography is excellent, and, otherwise, no detail has been overlooked to make it a perfect bit of film.

As for the story, which has been told in brief in a previous issue of this journal, it affords Max a greater field, even, for his comical actions than his prior releases. Better than anything else, it is promised that "Max in a Taxi" is clean, wholesome comedy, which will form good laughter for everybody. There is not an offensive piece of business, so it is said, in the entire production.

"Max in a Taxi" has a screen time of approximately thirty minutes.

MARCUS LOEW BOOKS "VOICE ON THE WIRE."

The Universal Film Company announces that Marcus Loew completed arrangements yesterday to show the new Universal surprise serial, "The Voice on the Wire," throughout his entire circuit of theaters. Mr. Loew's decision was reached following his attendance at a preliminary showing of a part of the serial held in the Universal studios last week, at which he declared that "The Voice on the Wire" was one of the most thrilling and entertaining weekly features to have been filmed in recent years. It has been booked for first showing in the twenty-five Loew theaters in the metropolitan district, following which it will be featured on the weekly program of the Loew houses throughout the country. Fifteen weeks will be required to exhibit the picture in its entirety.

PATHE CARTOONS POPULAR.

With the demand for comedy reels growing in all parts of the country, Pathe is gratified by the reception accorded its new cartoon comedies, which are drawn by many of the most celebrated newspaper cartoonists in the world. Contributing to the International animated cartoons released through Pathe are F. Opper, George McManus, Walt Hoban, George Harriman and Tom Powers.

These cartoons are released in split-reel with scenic or industrial pictures of unusual value. They are proving popular in many of the best houses of the country. With the immense amount of publicity which they receive through their publication in important newspapers they gain added value.

STUNT TO ADVERTISE "DOUBLE CROSS."

"Stunt" advertising is being used to good advantage, Pathe reports, by many exhibitors showing the "Mystery of the Double Cross" serial. One of the most effective of these stunts is described as follows:

Engage a good looking young girl, place her in box on left side of theater, take off her coat and expose a well-dressed girl in evening gown, but wearing a domino and having a large double cross on her bare right arm. Throw spotlight on her, she to keep right arm hanging over rail of box. Run story in your local newspapers headed, "Who is the girl living in our town that has the mark of the Double Cross on her arm?"

Universal Program

A Red Feather Heads It for the Week of April 16—Numerous Other Good Subjects.

LEADING the program of releases for the week of April 16, of the Universal Film Manufacturing company, is the five-act Red Feather production, "The Flower of Doom" a powerful drama of heart interest in which the Oriental customs are intermingled with present day life in the west. The story was written by Rex Ingram, who also directed this tense photodrama. The situations are thrilling and the suspense and mystery of the story handled in a most skillful and gripping manner. The picture gets its name from the sign and emblem of the Hop Sing tong, one of the most powerful of all Chinese organizations whose death warrant was the Flower of Doom.

Gypsy Hart and Wedgwood Newell head an excellent cast which includes Nicholas, M. K. Wilson, Yvette Mitchell, Tommy Morrissy, Frank Toknaga, Gordo Keeno and Evelyn Selbie.

"The Flower of Doom," is one of the strongest and best produced photoplays ever offered on the Universal program, and will be released Monday, April 16. On the same day will the Nestor one-act comedy, "Follow The Tracks," featuring that popular trio of screen comedians, Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts.

The feature for Tuesday, April 17, is the Gold Seal three-part detective drama "For Lack of Evidence." The story is by Blair Hall and the scenario by John C. Brownell and the picture was produced under the direction of Edwin Stevens which bespeaks its high quality. Tina Marshall has the leading role supported by George Marlo, Ted Burton and Adella Barker. "It Happened In Room 7," a Victor one-act comedy written and produced by Capt. Leslie T. Peacocke, is the other offering of this date.

The Hicksville Fire Department and the Police Department encounters all sorts of trouble in the L-Ko two-part comedy "Love and Blazes," featuring Phil Dunham, which will be released Wednesday, April 18. The Laemmle one-part drama, "Chubby Takes a Hand" with William V. Mong, and little Zoe Rae, the talented child actress in the leading roles and the regular issue of the Universal Animated Weekly, are the other releases of Wednesday.

Carter De Haven is the star in the two-act Victor comedy "The Topsy Turvy Twins," which will appear on Thursday, April 19. In this farce drama Carter De Haven plays a dual role, that of twin brothers, one of whom is a rounder while the other is a quiet studious chap. The mixed identities causes many amusing situations which makes this an exceedingly funny photoplay.

The Big U drama "The Pace That Kills," written and produced by Raymond B. Wells, with Claire McDowell in the leading role supported by Malcolm Blevins and Jay Belasco and the Rex drama "The Sorceress," with Herbert Rawlinson and Cleo Madison completes Thursday's releases.

On Friday, April 20, the seventh adventure of the Perils of the Secret Service entitled "The International Spy," will be released. This series has been an unsuually successful box office attraction and the latest adventure surpasses all previous ones in thrills and suspense. Issue No. 15 of the Universal Screen Magazine and the Victor comedy drama, "Tit For Tat," featuring Hobart Henley, will appear on the same day.

Charming Molly Malone, one of the real beauties of the screen, appears to excellent advantage in the principal role in the Bison two-act drama of the Northwest, "The Tell-Tale Clue," which is released Saturday, April 21. Other Saturday offerings are the Joker comedy, "Take Back Your Wife," with Gale Henry and William Franey furnishing most of the laughs, and the Imp drama "The Blazing Secret," featuring King Baggot and Leah Baird.

The Powers comedy cartoon, "The Good Story About a Bad Egg," and the Big U two-act animal drama "Her Great Mistake," with Marie Walcamp in the leading role are the offerings for Sunday, April 22.

During the week the sixth episode of the popular Universal serial "The Voice On The Wire," entitled "The Death Warrant," will be released. Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber are carried through further thrilling adventures in this episode and the mystery is still sustained.

WIDESPREAD DEMAND FOR "DOUBLE CROSS" SERIAL.

The popularity of Pathe's latest serial, "Mystery of the Double Cross," featuring Mollie King, is indicated by the widespread demand in all parts of the country. Some of the important first-run houses that have booked this serial are showing each episode from three days to a full week. According to Pathe, there are fewer single day bookings than on any previous serial.

The seven-day houses include the Pantages, of Minneapolis, and the Palace, of Los Angeles. The St. James, of Boston, is showing each episode three days a week; the hippodrome, of San Diego, Cal., four days a week; the Park, of St. Louis, four days; the Majestic, of Albany, two days; Proctor's, of Schenectady, three days; Colonial, of Utica, three days; Mary Anderson, of Louisville, two days; Bank of Akron, Ohio, two days; Metropolitan, of Cleveland, Ohio, three days; Abeles Opera House, of Easton, Pa., three days; Orpheum, of Allentown, Pa., three days; Palace, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, two days; Proctor's, Elizabeth, three, and Proctor's, Newark, three.

Margaret Illington to Make Screen Debut

Lasky-Paramount Adaptation of "Sacrifice," Written by Charles Kenyon, to Be Released in May.

CONTRARY to a former announcement, the first photoplay in which the celebrated stage star, Margaret Illington, will appear upon the screen will be "Sacrifice," which was written especially for her by Charles Kenyon and adapted for the screen by Beatrice De Mille and Leighton Osmun. It is now in the course of production at the Lasky studio under the direction of Frank Reicher, and will be released by Paramount in May. It is an interestng coincidence that it was Margaret Illington who appeared in the first play which Charles Kenyon had produced upon the stage, and it will be remembered that she scored a tremendous success in his great drama, "Kindling." Mr. Kenyon has been engaged by the Lasky company to write photoplays for Miss Illington, and "Sacrifice" represents his first direct contribution to the photoplay.

Despite the fact that Miss Illington is a screen novice, her first picture will show her in the difficult feat of playing two different roles at the same time. She will appear as Mary Stephani, the daughter of an important personage in the little kingdom of Zandria, and as Vesta Boris, a notorious dancer in a neighboring principality, Nordoff.

Jack Holt, Winter Hall, and Noah Beery are among the principal players in support of Miss Illington.

ETHEL BARRYMORE BEGINS WORK ON "HER GREATEST POWER."

Ethel Barrymore has begun work at the Metro-Rolfe studios on her next great photodrama, called "Her Greatest Power." Edwin Carewe, one of Metro's directing staff de luxe, is directing this production, his assistant being Harry Franklin. "Her Greatest Power" is the work of Louis R. Wolheim, prepared for the screen by Albert Shelby Levino, and it will be given a production thoroughly adequate to the powerful dramatic features of the story.

A distinguished cast has been engaged to support Miss Barrymore in this production, which will be screened in five acts. The leading male role has been entrusted to William B. Davidson, seen with the star as the Stranger in her recent success, "The White Raven," and who will appear with her in an important part in the picture version of Edward Sheldon's play, "Egypt," entitled "The Call of Her People."

Harry S. Northrup, one of the best-known "stage villains" in America, will be responsible for the major part of the villainy in "Her Greatest Power." Frank Currier is another well-known player engaged for "Her Greatest Power." Mr. Currier will play the part of Miss Barrymore's father in the production. W. W. Black, Frederick Truesdell, John Smiley and Kenneth Cree are other favoritie players in the cast.

Edwin Carewe, who will direct this production, was also Miss Barrymore's director in "The Final Judgment." He has directed most of the Metro wonderplays in which Mabel Taliaferro has starred, as well as "Destiny, or the Soul of a Woman," and "The House of Tears," with Emily Stevens.

E. K. LINCOLN IN "JIMMIE DALE" SERIES.

In "The Mitzer Murder," the fourth of the "Jimmie Dale Alias the Grey Seal" stories, Jimmie Dale decides that he does not agree with the adage that "imitation is the sincerest flattery." He is proud of the reputation of the Grey Seal and is jealous for his honor when he finds someone else committing crime under his insignia.

It is queer coincidence that assigns to Jimmie Dale, as a cub reporter, to find out whether it was the Grey Seal or some one else who was responsible for the Mitzer murder. In his wrath that anyone else should dare to paste a grey seal, his own personal insignia, on the body of the victim, Jimmie Dale works like a whirlwind.

The other side of Jimmie's nature is manifest in that he will not allow an innocent person to be accused of a crime of which he believes him innocent.

Jimmie's sleuthing brings out the fact that the reward of $25,000 for the apprehension of the notorious Grey Seal is the reason for the great zeal of the police officer to place the crime on another. Jimmie proves by the fingerprint method that the same police officer is really guilty of the murder and stole from the police collection the grey seal with which he marked the victim.

LITTLE MARY SUNSHINE PICTURE TO PLAY THE RIALTO.

The great demand for Pathe's "Little Mary Sunshine" pictures and the uniform high quality of the product is illustrated by the announcement that the Rialto, of New York, has booked "Told at Twilight" for the week of April 15.

There is only one Baby Osborne. The child is not only wonderfully giften in talent, but her personality is charming. The pictures in which she stars are so wholesome that everywhere they are pointed to as examples of what the screen may accomplish in the way of "uplift." Furthermore, they succeed in all classes of houses, the best proof of their unvarying interest.

Chaplin on Mutual Program

Will Appear in "The Cure," Two-Part Comedy, During Week of April 16.

THE CURE," the tenth Mutual-Chaplin special, two-part comedy, will be ready for the public on April 16. The theater man needs no special "stunt" to attract the crowds when Charlie is the headliner—all he needs is to make a big display of the name of Charlie Chaplin to let the people know the time and the place and they will all be there. Chaplin's name is sufficient—the people themselves will do the rest.

In "The Cure," Chaplin chooses a health resort as the background for his antics. Could anything be funnier than the idea of a sanitarium where people go for rest and the cure invaded by Charlie and his pranks? The theater patrons will come a second time and probably a third just to have another good laugh.

April 16 also brings Mary Miles Minter in "Environment," a story laid in a New England village. Miss Minter is another star whose name will bring the crowds. This picture will hold a special attraction for high school pupils as it deals with the graduation exercises and the life of the young people of the village.

Invite the girls to come and see the graduation dress which the little star made herself and which is so simple that every girl can copy it. This is also a splendid picture to be used as the feature in a special program for children.

"The Single Code," scheduled for April 16 is the second of the Crane Wilbur series and treats, as the title suggests, with the question of whether there should be a single code of morals for both men and women. This will be best advertised from the problematical standpoint—the asking of questions which will arouse a discussion on this subject.

"A Double Steal," the second chapter of the Helen Holmes serial "The Railroad Raiders," comes on April 16. Play up the high lights of the release, the stealing of jewels from a private car, the dynamiting of the railroad track in front of a special, the hold-up of a Pullman, a police raid on the gang of thieves and a splendid hand to hand fight between Helen Holmes and one of the members of the gang. These will arouse keen interest in this chapter of the serial.

"Shorty Lays a Jungle Ghost," the fourtteenth story of the "Adventures of Shorty Hamilton" series will be ready April 16. The scenes of this picture are laid in the Philippine Islands and show some splendid fights in a Filipino uprising. In the conflict Shorty kills the leader with the same spear which has been used to kill Anita Keller.

The fifth of the "Jimmie Dale Alias the Grey Seal" series entitled "The Fight for Honor," will be released on April 20. Now that the people have become intensely interested in these stories further incite their patronage by co-operating with a book store in the sale of Frank L. Packard's book, "Jimmie Dale Alias the Gray Seal." These were originally magazine stories and have been gathered in book form. A good window display and a slide on the screen announcing the book sale will be of mutual benefit.

The second Strand comedy "When Mary Took the Count" goes to the screen on April 18. Billie Rhodes and Jay Belasco are the featured players, and a big wedding is one of the important scenes of the picture.

On April 19 comes the Cub Comedy featuring George Ovey and entitled "Somewhere in the Mountains."

The Vogue Comedy released April 21, "Masked Mirth," features Ben Turpin.

"Mutual Tours Around the World," released April 17 shows views of Russian Caucasia; Copenhagen, Denmark; and Salzburg, Austria.

"Mutual Weekly" comes on April 18 and "Reel Life," April 19. The six topics making up "Reel Life" are "New Legs for Soldiers," "Fishing Through the Ice," "A Traveling Dairy," "Making Iron Pipe," "A Vest Pocket Water Sterilizer" and "A Mock Bull Fight."

VIVIAN MARTIN AND JACK PICKFORD CO-STAR.

The first production in which Jack Pickford will appear since his transfer from the Famous Players studio in New York to the Lasky studio in Hollywood will be "The Girl at Home," in which he will co-star with Vivian Martin. This, by the way, marks Miss Martin's first appearance under the Lasky management. The story was written by George Middleton, the well-known playwright, and adapted for the screen by Beulah Marie Dix. It was staged under the direction of Marshall Neilan, who has directed so many recent Lasky successes, and whose "The Bottle Imp," with Sessue Hayakawa, created such a sensation and is proving a tremendous success all over the country.

James Neil, Edyth Chapman and Olga Gray play important roles in this production, which is a rare combination of comedy and drama, with always a subdued note of pathos in the background. Jack Pickford is Jimmy Dexter, an only child, whose mother is in such financial straits that she cannot afford to send him to college as she had always planned to do. Vivian Martin is Jeanne Hilton, the ward of a neighbor of the Dexters and a youthful sweetheart of Jimmy's.

"HUNTING OF THE HAWK" (Pathe).

On April 22 Pathe will release "The Hunting of the Hawk," a five-reel photoplay starring William Courtenay, which has been greeted as even better than "Kick In." The leading lady is Marguerite Snow, who was chosen as George M. Cohan's screen leading woman. The story was written by George B. Seitz, famous as the author of "The Iron Claw" and many other successes. George Fitzmaurice is the man under whose direction it was produced.

"The Huting of the Hawk" is a wonderful gentleman-crook picture, with thrills, fast action, suspense and a twist at the end. A feature of the production is the wonderful interior and exterior scenes. The sets are deep, solid and beautifully lighted. The story centers around a bold attempt to steal a valuable necklace. The heroine falls in love with Desselway and later has reason to believe that he is The Hawk, a famous international thief. The action develops to a powerful and thrilling climax, and the picture keeps the spectator guessing from beginning to end.

"THE VALENTINE GIRL" (Famous Players).

Marguerite Clark has in her next Famous Players-Paramount picture, "The Valentine Girl," a delightful opportunity to present to her screen admirers one of those elfish characters that have made her so popular.

Marian Morgan is a tiny tad of a girl whose mother died when she was born and whose father, in the bitterness of the moment, has banished her forever from his sight. She has been brought up by an aunt who has succeeded in always holding before little Marian the vision of an ideal father whom it would some day be her privilege to meet. The dreams of this little girl are constantly filled with thoughts of this great man whom her imagination has pictured as a superman capable only of the greatest kindness and possessed of almost infinite wisdom.

Those who have seen Miss Clark in "Snow White," as the imaginative little girl in "Molly Make-Believe," or as little Lady Eileen, who believed in faries, will readily picture to themselves how charmingly and how convincingly Miss Clark plays the role of Marian Morgan. Director J. Searle Dawley, who invested these productions with their exquisite and fantastic atmosphere, has created an equally appropriate setting for "The Valentine Girl."

Pauline Frederick Leads Paramount

Appears in "Sleeping Fires" with Strong Support—Many Good Features for Program of April 16.

"SLEEPING FIRES," a play of a self-sacrificing mother, in which Pauline Frederick will be seen in the leading role, and "The Lonesome Chap," in which House Peters and Louise Huff will co-star, are the two features on the Paramount Program for the week of April 16. The former is a Famous Players production and the latter a Pallas production.

Pauline Frederick, whose beauty and histrionic ability made her an ideal Sapho in the Famous Players adaptation of the celebrated Daudet's novel, is to play a completely different type of character in her next production "Sleeping Fires," which is scheduled for release by Paramount April 16. Whereas Sapho was a heartless, uneducated seeker after pleasure, Zelma Bryce, the character assumed by Miss Frederick in "Sleeping Fires," is a woman of high mentality and very evident refinement, whose life is wrapped up in her little son.

"Sleeping Fires" was produced under the direction of George Middleton, the well known playwright and author, and was directed by Hugh Ford, who has directed several of Miss Frederick's most successful photoplays, and was responsible for her latest triumph "Sapho." Among those in the strong cast are such well known players as Thomas Meighan, John Sainpolis, Helen Dahl, and Joseph Smiley. Mr. Meighan has been playing opposite Miss Frederick ever since he was transferred from the Lasky studio to the Famous Players, having appeared with her in "The Slave Market" and in "Sapho," where he did such notable work as young Gaussin. John Sainpolis has done excellent work in a number of recent Famous Players pictures, having appeared with Marguerite Clark in "The Fortunes of Fifi," and with Miss Frederick in "Sapho."

In "The Lonesome Chap," Louise Huff makes her first appearance as a Pallas star, co-starring with House Peters. This is the first production in which Miss Huff has apepared since leaving the Famous Players studio for the Pacific Coast.

In this picture Miss Huff plays the role of a little school girl who captivates her guardian, a man somewhat older than she is, only to be convinced that he does not care for her. For his own part, the man is doing his best to conceal his feelings, believing that he is doing so in justice to his ward. House Peters, is, of course, the guardian in question. Others in the cast beside Miss Huff and Mr. Peters are John Burton, Eugene Pallette, J. Parks Jones, Senor Buzzi and Betty Johnson.

Surrounding the program for this week, will be the 62nd edition of the Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen; the 63rd of the series of weekly trips personally conducted by Burton Holmes, the world's greatest traveler in which he takes his fellow journeyers to "Old India," and a Black Diamond Comedy entitled "The Wishbone."

The Pictographs for this week contain four very interesting subjects, chief of which shows "Curiosities of New York" shown in Pictographs, in which there is pictured some of the curious places where some of the five million people who live in New York city, find a place to hang their hats, some of these strange and curious scenes of the greatest city in the world, and which cannot be duplicated anywhere else on the globe, are shown in this section of the magazine-on-the-screen.

Through the medium of the Pictographs and the influence of Dr. George B. Shattuck, one of America's foremost geologists, there will be shown some of the secrets of Dame Nature's wonderful creation of more than 100,000 years ago. These pictures were taken in Southern California, and show great pits filled with a semi-liquid of tar.

Another very interesting subject in this edition of the Pictographs, is the visualizing of the methods of conducting the ballet school of the Metropolitan Opera House of New York under the direction of Ottokar Bartik, and a goodly amount of comedy is brought into the release by "Miss Nanny Goat at the Circus."

After having visited the wonders of Suez and its surrounding communities Burton Holmes in his 62nd of his weekly trips around the world, takes his journeyers to interesting parts of "Old India," beginning at Jaipur and going to Agra and Calcutta, all of which are marvelously colorful and interesting the way Mr. Holmes shows it. As a special diversion, Mr. Holmes asks his travelers to join him in an elephant ride which is an extremely novel screen experience, and reminds one of sitting on the side of a mountain, enjoying a slight volcanic eruption or earthquake. There is also pictured a really-truly harem with its manners and customs—Mr. Holmes worked years to be able to present these views in this country.

The two famous Black Diamond comedy tramps that have created such a wonderful amount of amusement on the screen through the past year, will be seen in "The Wishbone" a single reel comedy to be released this week.

CHANGE IN RELEASE DATES OF ART DRAMAS.

"The Inevitable," the Erbograph-Art Drama which was scheduled to be released on April 5, has been postponed to April 12, on account of the slight illness of Anna Q. Nilsson, who was unable to finish the last few scenes of the picture on time.

This will make a change in all following release dates. The new order will run as follows: "The Inevitable," April 12; "The Great Bradley Mystery," April 17; "A Mother's Ordeal," April 26; "The Auction of Virtue," May 3; "The Mystic Hour," May 10.

A change in title has also been announced. The picture which went under the working title of "One Woman's Ordeal" has been changed to "A Mother's Ordeal." This is a Van Dyke production starring Jean Sothern.

RALPH E. PECKHAM TO DISTRIBUTE.

A deal of vast importance has just been consummated in Cincinnati between the Facts Film Corporation, and Ralph E. Peckham of the Queen City. Under the terms of the contract, Mr. Peckham becomes sole distributor for the United States and Canada for the pictures produced by the Facts Film Corporation.

The Facts Film Corporation has just recently come into existence through the discovery of a new process whereby pictures of the cartoon type can be made much superior to what have already been produced along this line.

The first picture, which has already been released, is the "Big Question." This picture is one of timely interest, and full of patriotism and was purchased in its entirety by a big distributing organization in New York. "How About You?" is the title of the second picture to be released shortly. Following this there will be two pictures produced and released each month through the foremost exchanges of the United States and Canada.

Mr. Peckham has been in the exchange business for the past several years and is well known through the central west where his activities have been mainly confined and in this new venture he is taking a step upward in the film business . Temporary offices are now located at No. 23 Opera Place, Cincinnati, O., but will be removed in a short time to New York City.

THE "WOMAN AND BEAST" OFFERED.

A sensational state right picture that is nevertheless clean and, to quote its distributors, "sane in plot," is promised in a five-reel production by the Graphic Films, entitled "The Woman and the Beast." Marie Shotwell, star of "Enlighten Thy Daughter," and "The Witching Hour," heads the cast, which is of the all-star variety through the presence of Alphonse Ethier, Fred Eric, J. H. Gilmour and Kathryn Adams. Ernest C. Warde is the producer and this fact will generally be accepted as a guarantee of production merit.

The story, by Emmet Mixx, deals with a timid man—a first rate pacifist—who took himself a spirited wife. He believed that meekness was more attractive than aggresiveness, she in not turning the other cheek. Their opinions clashed continually. She came to lose respect for him.

The moral of the play becomes evident: Is a pacifist necessarily a coward? That moral is of interest in every city, village and hamlet in the country today—wherever war is discussed, and that is everywhere.

Showings of the picture are being given to state right buyers daily at the office of Graphic Features, Room 401, 729 7th avenue, New York. The posters and general advertising reflect the heart interest element in the story.

BLUEBIRDS OF MAY.

Lynn F. Reynolds has produced another Bluebird, of his usual "nature study" type, and it will complete the May assortment for that program. The release date will be May 28, and the tentative title is "Three Guardians." It tells a story of Kentucky, and reflects the usual Reynolds style—gripping interest, beautiful nature settings and no crime of villainy.

George Hernandez and Myrtle Gonzales will be featured in "Three Guardians," with Jean Hersholt, Jack Curtis, George Marsh, Elwood Bredell, Maxfield Stanley, Fred Church and Charles H. Mailes in supporting roles. "The Code of the Klondyke," a previously announced Bluebird, has been held back until later in the season.

May releases complete, including the Reynolds picture, embrace Violet Mersereau, supported by Sidney Mason, May 7, in "Little Miss Nobody," "Treason," introducing Allen Holubar and Joseph Girard to Bluebirds as featured players, May 14, and Dorothy Phillips in "The Flashlight," May 21. The last named feature has been heretofore referred to as "The Flashlight Girl," but the photoplay has reverted to the original title of the story, as published in a popular magazine.

LOCKWOOD SUPPORTED BY STRONG CAST.

Harold Lockwood is to be supported in "The Secret Spring," the latest of Fred J. Balshofer's Metro-Yorke features, now under production, by an unusually strong cast. In the story, Lockwood, as Donald Keeth, a young attorney in a mining town, matches his physical and mental strength against the unscrupulous owner and operator of the town. This part is played by Herbert Standing, an actor of international reputation for years. A character lead of the picture, that of Wheeler, the friend to the young lawyer, is played by Lester Cuneo, the Metro-Yorke actor who has appeared in all the late big Metro releases with Harold Lockwood. Another strong character part is that of Daniel Kerston, the town drunkard, who, through a little act of kindness on the part of Keeth, is set on the winning road. Doctor Crane, who has played hundreds of successful character parts on the stage and screen, is in this role. Miss Billie West plays the part of Thora, the girl of the story.

Six Laskys for May

Madame Petrova and Margaret Illington Head List of Eight Stars in the Releases for the Month.

THE month of May will be one of the greatest in the history of the Lasky company, in that it will mark the advent of two new and distinguished stars upon the company's roster of players, and will see the release by Paramount of six Lasky pictures within the month with a total stellar representation of eight players. Madame Petrova, the great Russian actress, will make her first appearance in a Lasky-Paramount picture, and Margaret Illington, the distinguished stage star, will make her motion picture debut, while other stars represented in the six productions for the month will be Fannie Ward, Mae Murray, Blanche Sweet, Thomas Meighan, Wallace Reid and Anita King.

The first Lasky picture scheduled for release in May is "Sacrifice," written especially for Margaret Illington by Charles Kenyon, author of some of her most notable stage successes. May 3 is the date set for the release of "Sacrifice." The second is "The Primrose Ring," starring Mae Murray. Its release date is May 7. This is a fanciful tale adapted from the popular story by Ruth Sawyer, which presents Mae Murray in an entirely new light to her photoplay admirers.

Madame Petrova's first Lasky picture will be "The Undying Flame," to be released May 10. It is a story of ancient Egypt and of the present day. It is a powerful drama written especially for her, and directed by Maurice Tourneur, the noted French director, who has contributed so many great successes to photoplay history.

The fourth in the month is "The Silent Partner," starring Blanche Sweet and Thomas Meighan, which is scheduled for release on May 24. This is a story of big business written by Edmund Goulding. Though the drama itself is intense and at times thrilling, the story possesses a great deal of delightful comedy as a relief. The production was directed by Marshall Neilan.

On May 28 Wallace Reid and Anita King will co-star in an adaptation of "The Squaw Man's Son," Edwin Milton Royle's sequel to his own celebrated stage and screen success, "The Squaw Man." The cast includes Raymond Hatton, H. B. Carpenter, Dorothy Davenport, Charles H. Geldert, Ted Duncan, Frank Lanning and Donald Bowles.

On May 31 Fannie Ward stars in "Unconquered," another powerful and dramatic story, which is expected to rival "The Cheat" in popularity. Jack Dean, Hobart Bosworth, Tully Marshall and little Billy Jacobs are others of equal screen renown who are in support of Miss Ward.

MUTUAL WEEKLY PICTURES PREPARATIONS FOR WAR.

In these stirring times America might be pardoned for giving way to national emotionalism, but as the spirit of the nation is reflected in Gaumont's Mutual Weekly the events leading up to active participation in the great world war are transpiring without unusual display. Mutual Weekly No. 119 is made up largely of pictures of men answering the call to war. For East and West comes views of the same determined citizens making ready for duty.

The line of first defence—the navy—is represented by the magnificent Atlantic fleet, once more back at Hampton Roads after its winter target practice. The great ships are an inspiring sight. From the West Coast come pictures of recruiting on the sands at Venice, Cal., as well as of the big 14-inch guns to be used for coast defence at San Pedro, Cal.

Pacifists and patriots storm Congress at the opening of the extra session. The Gaumont cameramen witnessed the descent upon the national capitol, and recorded it for this issue of the Mutual Weekly. Just how the one side protected themselves under the wings of the dove of peace, and how the other side presented a more belligerent attitude is set forth in the pictures.

The Boy Scouts of New York had another test mobilization. This time they are pictured as they protect Manhattan's City Hall. Another organization at present without firearms is that of citizen soldiers for whom rifles have not been provided. They are armed with wooden guns. The picture preaches a sermon for preparedness. A third section of unarmed men is devoted to the interned German sailors who reach Fort McPherson at Atlanta, Ga.

Freight congestion in America is brought forcibly to mind by pictures of passenger automobiles loaded on trucks being carried overland 1,500 miles. Another interesting picture is that of a motorcycle hill climbing contest.

GET-RICH-QUICK CONCERNS EXPOSED.

No lesson truer to life could be drawn from a moving picture than that portrayed in "Builders of Castles," an Edison feature released through Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay. The so-called get-rich-quick corporations and the many fake building and loan associations organized especially to fleece the poor are exposed pitilessly in this feature. In a striking manner the story shows how a respected business man permits cupidity to get the best of him, and he lends his name to a scheme through which the poor are to be defrauded. Of course, he pays the penalty, finally, but the picture also shows the terrifying results that overtake the poor when they are lured into these schemes. Marc MacDermott and Miriam Nesbitt are featured in "Builders of Castles," which will be released through K-E-S-E April 16.

"The Neglected Wife"

Pathe Photodrama Based on Mabel Herbert Urner's Famous Stories Will Have Wide Appeal.

"THE NEGLECTED WIFE," a thrilling story dealing with the complex problems of married life and based on Mabel Herbert Urner's famous stories, "The Journal of a Neglected Wife," and "The Woman Alone," will be Pathe's next serial release. The release date has not been definitely set, but will be some time in the near future.

Ruth Roland, charming heroine of "Who Pays?" and "The Scene from "The Neglected Wife" (Pathe).

Red Circle," and one of the most popular serial girls in the country, is the featured player. She is supported by Roland Bottomley, the noted English actor. The serial was produced in California by Balboa from the scenarios of Will M. Ritchey, the author of the two original stories on which Miss Roland's previous serial successes were based.

There is probably no writer in America who is so well known to the newspaper public as Mabel Herbert Urner. For years she was a contributor to the great chain of Hearst newspapers, and the characters of Helen and Warren created by her are still being featured in leading newspapers in more than thirty of the most important cities of the country. The publication of these stories, it is believed by Pathe, will be of direct benefit to the exhibitors who show the serial. Of course, there will be the usual extensive advertising campaign in leading newspapers, beginning about ten days before the showing of the picture and continuing throughout the serial.

The two stories on which the serial is based have also been read by millions. "The Journal of a Neglected Wife" was published serially in the New Jork Journal, Chicago Examiner, Los Angeles Herald, Dayton (Ohio) News, Baltimore Times, Detroit Journal, Pittsburgh Post, Lancaster (Pa.) Intelligencer, Boston American, San Francisco Examiner, Washington Times, Grand Rapids News, Philadelphia Times, Cleveland News, Reading (Pa.) Evening Journal and Oakland Tribune.

The Grand Rapids News, Springfield (Mo.) Leader, Lima (Ohio) Gazette, Lorraine (Ohio) Times-Herald and Racine (Wis.) Journal published the story of "The Woman Alone" as a serial.

"The Neglected Wife" deals with the human triangle. It is the story of a man, his wife and the "other woman," while additional heart interest is furnished by another man who falls in love with the "other woman."

"MORMON MAID" NEW YORK AND JERSEY RIGHTS SOLD.

Jake Wilk, of the well-known duo of Hiller and Wilk, announces that they have disposed of the New York and New Jersey rights of "A Mormon Maid" for a very handsome sum.

This picture was bought by this firm for the purpose of selling it on the state right basis, and up to the present they have been approached by many ready purchasers. Mae Murray and Hobart Bosworth are featured in this production, and it is one of the best pictures Miss Murray has ever appeared in.

The picture was produced by Robert Leonard, and he has worked the thread of the Mormon attack theme into a story of melodramatic action so intelligently that this never impresses as preachment, but rather holds all the better because of the strength of the underlying thought standing back of the melodramatic action.

There are many who question whether the picture would be accepted by Utah, but Hiller and Wilk are now considering taking the picture to that state and giving a grand showing in the Mormon Tabernacle in Salt Lake City.

At any rate, the owners have little to fear, even though they do not sell Utah, for they are disposing of the other states very rapidly, and in the past few days have sold, in addition to New York and New Jersey, Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas and Louisiana, and are now negotiating for the sale of New England.

Kalem Productions

"American Girl" Series, Ham Comedies and "Daughter of Daring" Series.

KALEM'S current releases, "The Vulture of Skull Mountain," a two-reel episode of "The American Girl" series, gives Marin Sais an opportunity to do a bit of detective work. She is at San Remo ranch when a horse drags in an injured man. Gleaning a clue from the injured man's ravings about "Skull Mountain" and associating it with a newspaper clipping which she had, giving an account of bandits in these mountains, she starts off to solve the mystery. Her adventures in the mountains and the subsequent rescue of a girl captive and her father, who has been robbed and confined in a treacherous mountain lair, are sure thrills. Director James W. Horne is now working on the twelfth episode of this series, which he says will be a prize winner.

"Hard Times and Hardscrapple," the current "Ham" comedy in one reel, find "Ham" and "Bud" in some "side-splitting" comedy. They buy a restaurant with a few worthless gold nuggets which they pick up by the roadside, and the fun starts. The "bad man" enters and abruptly disturbs their prosperous lunch business, and hard times again comes knocking at the door. Al Stantell, who directs all "Ham" comedies, is rapidly recovering from a severe case of ptomaine poisoning, and will be back on the job this week, after a few days' confinement. The latter part of April Kalem will release the first of the two-reel comedies featuring "Ham" and "Bud." The demand for these comedies in greater lengths has been so heavy that Kalem will in the future make all "Ham" comedies two reelers.

Helen Gibson does some thrilling stunts in "The Munitions Plot," a forthcoming Kalem release of "A Daughter of Daring" series. Four daredevil stunts are recorded in a single reeler, which is one of the best yet. Helen drops from a carryall arrangement running on a cable stretched between two telegraph poles, one on either side of the railroad tracks. As the train approaches, she shoots across the cable, hanging to the carryall arrangement, and, as the train rushes by, drops to the top of one of the cars. The next instant she is seen jumping from the top of a passenger coach to the top of a freight car. Thrill after thrill is registered in this one reeler.

WILBUR SERIES BEGINS AUSPICIOUSLY.

Judging from the wide showing given the initial production and the favorable comments on the first picture, there is every indication that the new series of Crane Wilbur features, which David Horsley is distributing through the Mutual, and which began with the release of "The Painted Lie," on March 19, will be a success from every viewpoint.

The trade reviewers were unanimous in their praise of the first picture, and these opinions were backed up by daily newspaper reviewers in cities where "The Painted Lie" had its first-run showings.

This new series of Crane Wilbur features represents Mr. Horsley's most ambitious attempt in the production of a group of features. All of the six pictures comprising the series are being made from scenarios furnished by Mr. Wilbur, who has demonstrated an exceptional ability along this line; and the casts, settings and other phases of production are in thorough keeping with Mr. Horsley's idea of making the series a notable one.

As the second picture of the series, Mr. Horsley will offer "The Single Code," a morality drama by Mr. Wilbur, which was directed by Thomas Ricketts.

New Hamilton Theater at Lancaster, Pa., Puts in Big Instrument as Added Attraction.

THE Hamilton theater, the new $200,000 edifice erected in Lancaster, Pa., owned by George M. Krupa and Elsie Krupa, opened on Lincoln's Birthday to capacity house. The theater is undoubtedly the most magnificent structure in Lancaster Valley, and is, in short, a modern temple of motion pictures. As an extra attraction, the Hamilton theater has installed a beautiful pipe organ manufactured by the American Photo Player Company of New York, Chicago and San Francisco.

The inaugural recital upon this great organ was given by Clarence Reynolds, popularly known as "Storm" Reynolds, who plays the big pipe organ at Ocean Grove, N. J. Reynolds' work on the organ was enthusiastically applauded, and ,although he had only arranged to stay for one day, by popular demand he agreed to stay for the entire week, so that the people of Lancaster could have the pleasure of hearing this wonderful instrument played by Reynolds. Roy Scott Shimp, one of the well-known organists in Lancaster, has been engaged by the management of the Hamilton to preside permanently at the organ.

The organ contains about fifteen hundred speaking pipes and about five hundred notes and Cathedral chimes. Alongside of the organ consul in the orchestra pit is a specially constructed piano, from which the organ may be controlled, as well as from the consul of the organ. This permits the operator to play by hand from the organ consul, or to play by using hand cut rolls of the world's famous composers from the piano.

The instrument includes numerous traps and effects, such as bob white, duck, cow, hen, rooster, cuckoo, baby cry, police whistle, gas motor, gear, typewriter, chain, water falls, waves of surf, wind siren thunder, distant; thunder, close; cannon, machine gun, lightning, locomotive exhaust, locomotive bell, steam, wood, glass crash, rattle, squeaker, Chinese gong, fire gong, street car gong, conductor or maid's bell, electric gong, school or dinner gong, jingle bell, electric cow bell, electric buzzer.

ROBERT WARWICK AND COMPANY IN "A MODERN OTHELLO."

Robert Warwick and a company of twenty players have left New York for Richmond, Va., recently, where the exterior scenes for "A Modern Othello" will be filmed, in order to complete Mr. Warwick's part of the picture as early as possible, so that he may be free to answer a call to arms if necessary without interfering with his picture. Harry Rapf will be business manager for the trip.

"THE DAUGHTER OF 'GAS-HOUSE' DAN." (Selig.)

The Selig company announces its latest release in General Film Service, entitled "The Daughter of 'Gas-House' Dan." It is a multiple reel subject, having to do with a ward "boss" who educates his only daughter in France, so that she will be ignorant of her father's unsavory reputation. He does not permit her to visit America. A ward "heeler," for revenge, forges the father's name to a cablegram, and induces the girl to come to America. Thus she is made aware of her father's influence in corrupt politics. How she finally is instrumental in redeeming her father from his political plottings and wins the love of a wealthy man contributes to a very entertaining and exciting drama. The photography, sets and lighting effects are pronounced first class, and the cast is a capable one.

"Bill and the Bearded Lady," is another of a series of one-reel farce comedies being released in General Film Service by the Selig company. It has to do with the side show of a circus, and the rivalry existing between the "freaks." Those who contribute to the laugh-provoking qualities of this comedy include John Lancaster, Lyllian Leighton, William Scott and others.

GAUMONT SINGLE REELS FULL OF WAR INTEREST.

Discounting the certainty of hostilities, the Gaumont company for some time has been preparing its editorial forces for war. Every exhibitor knows that with patriotic fervor at such a high pitch the pictures that please patrons most are those which have to do with war and preparations for war. The Gaumont company in such single-reel releases as "Reel Life," the Mutual Magazine in Film, and the Mutual Weekly has seized the opportunity to capitalize this national wave of enthusiasm for the exhibitor.

The current issue of the Mutual Weekly is full of war pictures, and "Reel Life" has an intensely interesting section devoted to "Our Patriotic Maidens." The exhibitor fortunate enough to show "Reel Life" will interest his spectators in pictures of how war is carried on in the twentieth century. In these days an entire nation equips itself for war, the women no less than the men. Women are now hard at work in automobile schools, learning to grind cylinders, take down engines and put on tires. They are pictured in "Reel Life" as they have their first lessons in driving ambulances, and some venturesome spirits are even qualifying themselves as drivers of armored trucks.

These pictures give the entire country an idea of what can be done to meet a national emergency, and, therefore, are highly important additions to any exhibitor's program. The Mutual Weekly is also a reel which should be a weekly feature, since it mirrors the leading war operations now under way.

UNIVERSAL GIVES NAVY ENLISTMENT FILM.

The United States government has decided to use motion pictures as the means to increase enlistments in the three branches of the service—the army, navy and marine corps.

The third part of "Uncle Sam at Work," a series of pictures recently released by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, which show the different departments of the United States government in operation, has been selected by the navy as the film to arouse patriotism that will increase enlistments to a point where every vessel in the navy will have a full complement of men.

The Universal is in receipt of the following telegram from B. G. Barthalow, recruiting inspector of the Western division of the navy, stationed at San Francisco, Cal.:

"We desire to purchase film, 'Uncle Sam at Work No. 3,' to use for advertising purposes in connection with obtaining recruits for the United States navy. It is requested that you quote us your lowest price per foot, and if reasonable will purchase through manager of the California Film Exchange."

In reply the Universal company stated: "We gladly donate reel, 'Uncle Sam at Work No. 3.' Have advised agent accordingly."

KLEINE OFFERS "THE FIXER" AND "THE POLITICIANS."

What are probably the most expensive two-reel comedies ever filmed are to be released through Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service. They are offered by George Kleine, whose advertising department is on record as stating that these comedies cost more than the average five-reel feature.

"The Fixer" and "The Politicians" are the titles. The first to be released April 15, the latter May 13.

Harry Watson, Jr., star of "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer," is featured in these two-reel comedies, and in them has splendid vehicles to demonstrate his original film mannerisms, which have made for him so many admirers.

"SPOILERS'" UNUSUAL NEW YORK POLICY.

Following a two-year withdrawal of "The Spoilers" in New York state, it is announced that the de luxe edition of same, which has only commenced booking in New York state, will be completely withdrawn following the expiration of six "available" months, beginning April 15. It will not then be available for bookings for a two-year term, to wit: Until October 15, 1919. The 1917 showings commence with Keith, Proctor and Moss circuits in Greater New York and up-state at Proctor's, Albany, and the Family, Buffalo. Explaining the withdrawal policy, C. C. Loftus, representing the owners, states:

"The de luxe 'The Spoilers,' by Rex Beach, will be available for New York state booking for six months, beginning April 15, and then not for two years, to wit: October 15, 1919. 'The Spoilers' has the enviable reputation of being the best box office attraction in film history, excepting 'The Birth of a Nation,' of course. Such an attraction becomes most valuable to its owners and to the theaters playing it when released only for limited periods. A 'complete withdrawal' is in the interest of the attraction owner and the attraction booker. It has been figured that no large attraction—film or otherwise—should stay continuously on the market, and that a withdrawal of from one to two years is the proper duration. The proof of this is that in the state of Pennsylvania 'The Spoilers,' as originally issued, played every picture house in the state down to the 5 and 10-cent houses, and that a year and a half later the writer booked the second edition into the largest legitimate theaters, as a show, with publicity, on a percentage basis, and did a business that is still the talk of Pennsylvania."

WHARTON COMPLETES FIRST SUBJECT.

One of the Wharton companies has just returned from Saranac Lake, where they have been for the past four weeks working on "The Great White Trail," which will be the first of the Wharton superfeature releases. The company is headed by Doris Kenyon, who is supported by Thomas Holding, Paul Gordon, Hans Robert, Edgar L. Davenport and Mrs. Charles Willard.

The interior scenes are being taken at the studios at Ithaca, and Director Leo D. Wharton expects to finish the studio work within the next four weeks.

A two-reel comedy entitled "Below Zero" has just been completed at the studios, and will be released at the same time as the first feature.

Several very prominent stars and well-known writers have been engaged for the production of the releases to follow, and they will necessarily be of a much warmer nature, since summer has arrived at the studios, and productions of the nature of "The Great White Trail" will have to wait until another winter for their making.

NEW MARY PICKFORD SUBJECT.

The new Pickford vehicle will be released under the title of "A Romance of the Redwoods," and is now rapidly nearing completion. A Western subject of full-blooded, dramatic action, it presents "Little Mary" in a role that is entirely different from anything in which she has ever appeared on the screen. The story was written by the famous director himself in collaboration with Jennie Macpherson, and discloses a wealth of typical Pickford incidents of particular heart appeal. The settings are of the days of '49, during the time of the big gold rush. Mary Pickford as Jenny Lawrence, a little New England miss, journeys to the West in search of her only relative, an uncle. Before she is aware of it, she falls in love, and, as a result, becomes enmeshed in serious complications. Various clever twists to the story afford surprises that add greatly to the general merit of the subject.

In this production Miss Pickford has been under the direction of Cecil B. De Mille, and has worked in the new Lasky studios at Hollywood. May 14 is announced as the release date of this production.

PUBLICITY IDEAS FOR EXHIBITORS.

Every exhibitor of motion pictures is constantly on the outlook for new methods of publicity for his house. Anything that is a little different or a little better than the ordinary publicity mediums now in use is always welcome.

The Cahill-Igoe Co. of Chicago has done a great deal to help the busy exhibitor with his advertising problems. It furnishes a complete service to all its subscribers, which consists of a series of twelve different designs for programs and the advertising write-up for each picture shown. The write-up service is furnished free.

Another item of interest to Paramount exhibitors is the "Filmette," which is produced by this same company. The "Filmette" is a new style of folder, designed to take the place of the customary heralds furnished by the producers. It is absolutely original in design, and contains, besides pictures from the play itself, a curiosity-rousing write-up of the picture. These "Filmettes" are furnished on Paramount releases only.

HAROLD LOCKWOOD RE-SIGNS WITH METRO-YORKE.

Following the return of Fred J. Balshofer to California from the East, and the announcement that Harold Lockwood would be featured in several big Metro-Yorke productions in the near future, comes the news that Lockwood has signed a new contract. It is to run for two years, during which Harold Lockwood will be starred in a number of pictures, which will be bigger than any in which the popular star has yet appeared.

During the time Lockwood has been associated with Mr. Balshofer, a number of prominent Metro-Yorke successes have been filmed. Some of these were "Pidgin Island," "Big Tremaine," "The River of Romance," "The Masked Rider," "Mister 44," and "The Promise." "The Hidden Children" has just been released through the Metro organization, and "The Hidden Spring," which will be known on the screen as "The Secret Spring," has been completed at the Hollywood studio. That all these pictures are successes is evidenced by the anxiety of Mr. Balshofer to sign Lockwood for another term of work under the Metro banner.

"THE SAINT'S ADVENTURE" WALTHALL'S NEXT.

"The Saint's Adventure" will be Henry B. Walthall's next Essanay feature. This photodrama, presenting the great emotional actor in an entirely different characterization from any in which he has yet been screened, will be released May 7. Exhibitors may see trade showings of the picture now at the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay branch offices.

Mary Charleson again appears as Mr. Walthall's leading woman in this production. This little actress has just garnered in for herself a nation full of praise for her latest Essanay feature, "Satan's Private Door." It was the first picture in which Essanay has featured her, and its great success has won for her a big following among photoplay patrons throughout the country. This fact should play no little part in paving the way to success for "The Saint's Adventure."

The story for Mr. Walthall's forthcoming production was written by Willis Brown, former judge and a nationally known figure in sociological and child uplift work.

"GOD'S MAN" HAS AUSPICIOUS SHOWING.

More than three thousand invited members of the motion picture and theatrical profession virtually crowded the famous Rialto theater to the doors on Wednesday morning last to witness the professional pre-release showing of the Frohman Amusement Corporation's newest superproduction, "God's Man," in which H. B. Warner is starred. With one accord, practically, this audience proclaimed this new nine-reel subject the greatest dramatic offering which has been made in motion pictures. It was undoubtedly the most pretentious and successful trade showing of a motion picture which has ever been held in New York city.

Under the direction of Managing Director S. L. Rothapfel, a special musical setting was arranged and rendered under the leadership of Conductor Hugo Reisenfeld with the full Rialto orchestra of fifty pieces.

"THE SILENT MASTER" COMPLETED.

Robert Warwick's second Selznick picture, "The Silent Master," is now complete, and was shown privately to the Selznick department heads last week. It will be released in a few days. Harry Rapf, president of the Warwick corporation, has staked heavily upon the success of this picture. In addition to engaging Leonce Perret, the noted French director, as head of his producing department, he recruited his cast from such screen and stage notables as Olive Tell, Anna Little, Donald Galaher and Henri Valbel. Besides the array of important players supporting Mr. Warwick, the production boasts a variety of unique phases.

CHANGE IN ART DRAMAS RELEASE DATES.

"The Inevitable," the Erbograph-Art Drama which was scheduled to be released on April 5, has been postponed to April 12, on account of the slight illness of Anna Q. Nilsson, who was unable to finish the last few scenes of the picture on time.

This will make a change in all following release dates. The new order will run as follows:

"The Inevitable," April 12; "The Great Bradley Mystery," April 17; "A Mother's Ordeal," April 26; "The Auction of Virtue," May 3, and "The Mystic Hour," May 10.

A change in title has also been announced. The picture which went under the working title of "One Woman's Ordeal" has been changed to "A Mother's Ordeal." This is a Van Dyke production starring Jean Sothern.

MARION SWAYNE MAKES ART DRAMAS DEBUT.

"Little Miss Fortune" is the title selected for Marion Swayne's first feature with the Erbograph company, releasing on Art Dramas program. The story was written by Clarence J. Harris, the prominent scenario writer, especially for the star.

In support of Miss Swayne are Hugh Thompson, Bradley Barker, Lucile Dorrington, Anna Day Perry and Charles Macdonald. Joseph Levering is directing the production, which is rapidly nearing completion.

Miss Swayne plays the part of a poorhouse girl of unknown parentage who is known as "Sis," for want of a better name. In the small town where she lives she is snubbed by all the other girls, and life is made generally miserable for her. It is her ambition to be a famous actress, and when an opportunity for escape comes she takes it and goes to the city.

ASTRA COMPLETES TWO MORE FEATURES.

With the completion of two more features for release on Pathe's Gold Rooster program, in the near future, George Fitzmaurice and William Parke, directors of the Astra Film Corporation, have started work on two new features.

Mr. Fitzmaurice's latest picture is entitled "Fifth Avenue." Mollie King is the featured player. The cast includes Donald Hall, Adaine Dalmores, Ernest Lawford and Paul Everton. The cast of Mr. Parke's picture has not been announced. Mr. Fitzmaurice's next picture will be a secret service story. A society drama has been selected for Mr. Parke.

Work is progressing rapidly on the two serials which Astra is making for Pathe. One of these, "New York Nights," featuring Pearl White, is being directed by George B. Seitz. The other, with Mollie King and Creighton Hale as the featured players, is under the direction of Theodore Marston.

GEORGE OVEY ON SCREEN AS SELF.

In "Somewhere in the Mountains," the Cub comedy scheduled for release through the Mutual Film Corporation on April 19, George Ovey appears on the screen as George Ovey, minus all character make-up, for the first time since his association with Cub comedies.

The picture opens with George Ovey entering a picture show. There, on the screen, he sees himself playing his character of Jerry in a story which takes him into the moonshine country, where he has a series of thrilling adventures. When the story fades out Ovey is discovered in his seat, asleep. The show is over and a pretty girl usher taps him on the shoulder, awakening him.

"THE MYSTIC HOUR," FORTHCOMING ART DRAMA.

"The Mystic Hour" is the title of the Apollo-Art Drama which is to be released on May 10. Agnes Fletcher Bain is the author of this, and the direction is in the hands of Richard Ridgely. Alma Hanlon and Edward Ellis are the featured players.

The story is a mystery tale, taking up a subject seldom touched upon in pictures—dreams and their relation to the waking life. It is based upon the studies in dream psychology and the subconscious made by Dr. Sigmund Freud, whose book, "The Interpretation of Dreams," has attracted world-wide attention from scientists recently.

"THE GREAT SECRET" FOR WORLD-WIDE SHOWING.

Contracts have been signed by which "The Great Secret," Metro's serial in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are co-stars, has been released to the exhibitors of Japan, Mexico, Dutch East Indies, India and the Philippines and Straits Settlements at one of the highest prices ever paid for a serial picture. This world-wide showing establishes a new record for a screen serial of New York life.

Offers also have been received from exchanges covering all of South America, Cuba, Australia, Spain and other European countries.

JANS GETS JERSEY RIGHTS TO "20,000 LEAGUES."

Herman F. Jans, president of the New Jersey Metro Film Service, has just bought the New Jersey rights for "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea."

Mr. Jans returned only a short time ago from a trip to Florida with his wife and daughter.

PATHE ANNOUNCES NEW MAX LINDER COMEDY.

Pathe will issue on April 29 a one-reel Max Linder comedy never before released—"Max Wins and Loses." It is a laughable burlesque on the famous "Exploits of Elaine" serial, and shows the famous comedian at his best.

Industrials As Entertainments

Advertising Films Must Be Made Interesting to Win a Place on Theater Program.

By Watterson R. Rothacker.

QUOTING from an article on the subject of cinema advertisements which was published in the Advertising World of London, England:

"Advertising by means of the cinema is a thing of infinite possibilities; and no inspired prophet is needed to predict a great future for it.

"To insert one or two blatant and uninteresting advertisement films into the program of an ordinary 'picture' show, as is done at a number of theaters, is not, however, to make any advance toward such a future; it is rather a step in the contrary direction. Its effect may tend to disgust the public with film advertisements of every kind whatsoever.

"It is gross impudence to inflict a number of advertisement films that are just advertisements, and nothing more—or even one, for the matter of that—upon people who have paid to see an ordinary cinema program. That such films may be an addition to the usual round of 'pictures' is no excuse whatever. They occupy time, and the only alternative before those who are victimized is to endure them or miss a part of the entertainment that has been paid for."

These words evidently refer to the blunt, unadorned advertisements which are forced upon the moving picture public, and are interesting for reasons of revenue only. The criticisms are fairly aimed, and hit the mark, for, as this English writer states:

"Every advertising film intended to be chosen as part of the program of an ordinary cinema show must be made so interesting or amusing as to deserve exhibition on its merits as an entertainment. Unless it does this it will possess no virtue as an advertisement."

The concluding paragraph in this article referred to says:

"It is quite possible to produce films containing a powerful though unobtrusive advertising moral that, by their interest, humor or ingenuity, would be as welcome to patrons of the cinema theaters as the fare usually provided for them. No others should for a moment be tolerated."

And I say to this discerning English gentleman: "Right you are!"

During 1910 and 1911 my ideas on the subject of moving picture advertising and industrial moving pictures were completely commented upon by the English moving picture trade journal, the Bioscope, of London. At the time I expressed the following opinions:

In so far as educational value of industrial films is considered, there is no doubt that they are a powerful factor in placing before the world various processes of manufacture which would otherwise only be known to the few people actually engaged in them, and, in addition to that, a good industrial film is appreciated, and, in fact, enjoyed by an audience, provided, always, that the subject is treated in a popular manner, and presented upon the screen without too much advertising flavor being incorporated with it.

In advertising, the subjects should be handled so that they are replete with edifying interest, so that they entertain while carrying their deftly concealed advertising or educating message. In other words, a moving picture photoplay should be arranged around a commercial subject, so that, while it accomplishes its object with publicity force, the ulterior motives are successfully veiled, and the subject made acceptable to the most critical audience.

When this is properly done, and where the subject is augmentive, and doesn't displace any part of the regular program, it becomes an added feature. There can be no more objection to it than to the pages of advertising which are a part and parcel of every printed magazine, daily paper or similar publications devoted to news, fiction, science or to the press.

As a matter of record, the advertising in journals is eagerly perused, sought for, and enjoyed by the readers. It directs them to the supply of their wants and needs. If the guidance is suggested by means of a story which comprehensively explains, while making a direct appeal to the senses of enjoyment, can there be a logical or well-founded objection on the part of either the exhibitor of his patrons? I think not, inasmuch as both receive something for nothing, and are put in touch with commercial progress and its offerings in the most unique and subtle manner ever conceived, and at the sole expense of the advertiser.

Now, as far as the exhibitor is concerned, it is not the use of the advertising film which instigates adversion; it is the abuse.

When used with discrimination and foresight, the advertising film is welcomed by the patrons of moving picture theaters, and receives their attentive appreciation, rather than their wholesale condemnation.

It is my contention that advertising films properly restricted, thoughtfully conceived, accurately produced and judiciously exhibited will benefit the advertiser, the exhibitor and the public, and quite as strong is my belief that moving picture advertising improperly handled can do much injury to the patronage of a theater, and, if of that character which causes the injury, they certainly can do but little to benefit the advertiser.

Moving pictures made to advertise must be made properly, and must be made attract've; their presentation on the screen will then be beneficial to all concerned, and, if the advertising message is honestly depicted and pleasingly presented, it serves well the public, as well as the advertiser, and, by serving the public, serves the exhibitor.

PRIZMA CLAIMS COLOR IN SWIFT ACTION.

A popular, if fallacious, opinion exists among some critics that motion pictures in Nature's colors cannot be made of objects moving at high speed without suffering a disillusioning analysis of color.

Prizma Pictures in natural colors, shown at the Strand theater, in which ski jumpers at Saranac Lake leap many feet through the air at break-neck speed, and where bobsleds slide helter-skelter down grade at a mile a minute, or at Palm Beach, where biplanes and power boats travel at tremendous clip, disprove the assertion that color photography is designed to portray only inanimate or slow-moving objects.

Concurrent improvement in camera and projector for more than a decade has eliminated one of the ancient obstacles to photography in natural colors.

DIRECTOR BAKER APPEARS AS ACTOR.

George D. Baker, Metro director, will play his first part before a motion picture camera in "Sowers and Reapers," Emmy Wehlen's forthcoming Metro-Rolfe feature production, which has been written and directed by Mr. Baker. Although at one time an actor on the speaking stage, Mr. Baker has never played in a photodrama, believing that the place for a director is back of the camera and not in front of it. As "Sowers and Reapers" is a story of the motion picture studio, he was prevailed upon to play the part of a director in it, which means simply playing himself as he appears every day on the studio floor.

OFFICIAL ALBANY SEES "TROOPER 44."

"Trooper 44," the five-part feature, depicting the activities of the Pennsylvania State Police, as a background to a vivid and exciting dramatic story, was shown during the past week in Albany. The showing was coincident with the passing of the bill authorizing a New York State Police Force, similar to the celebrated "Black Hussars." Dixon Boardman, president of the E. I. E. concern, under whose personal supervision the picture was produced by Roy Gahris, states that the showing was an unqualified success.

An interesting fact in connection with the showing was that it was made at the particular request of Governor Whitman, who has shown all along a lively interest in the Mills State police bill. The leading parts are enacted by June Daye and George Soule Spencer, the latter portraying the title role. Mr. Boardman wishes to announce that no more private showings of the picture will be given, in order to protect the interests of states-rights buyers, who have fairly flooded the E. I. S. offices with applications for franchises.

It was suggested that at the moving picture shows, which are attended daily by over 200,000 people, patriotic slides and films be thrown upon the screen. It was also urged that during the showing of the patriotic pictures national anthems be sung and short talks given by some popular speaker on the work and aims of the Coast Defense Committee. The heads of the various branches affiliated with the moving picture business unanimously proffered their services and use of the houses to the city at any time desired.

IN PORTLAND, OREGON.
Commissioners View "Patria."

Portland, Ore.—"Patria," showing at the Hippodrome, has received considerable attention from the city administration of late. On March 28 all the city commissioners came to the Pathe exchange, where an episode was screened at their request. Complaints had been made to them, they said, that the picture was not proper to show at this time. The commissioners were apparently satisfied that there was nothing wrong with it, however, as no further action was taken. The censor board and a government official viewed the picture about a month previous.

Admission Up In Portland, Ore.

Portland, Oregon, Downtown Theaters Raise Price to Fifteen Cents All Day—Formerly Charged Ten Cents at Matinees—Service Cost the Reason—Five Cent Houses Expected to Charge a Dime.

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—Commencing April 2, the price of admission in all of Portland's big downtown photoplay theaters will be fifteen cents for matinees as well as for night performances. Heretofore ten cents has been the matinee price. E. J. Myrick, manager of the Columbia, one of the theaters affected, gave as the reason that everything connected with the operation of theaters has increased and that a proportionate increase in admission price was necessary.

An effort is being made to induce the nickel showhouse men to raise to a dime and indications are that such a raise will soon take place.

Two Bits for a Feature.

W. A. Graeper, of the Union Avenue theater, is planning to show "Civilization" April 25 at 25 cents. Admission price raises are unusual occurrences in Portland's suburban theaters, where the price is always a dime and where the biggest features have heretofore been offered for that money or else not shown at all. Mr. Graeper feels, however, that there will be extraordinary features coming along that no up-to-date suburban show can afford to pass up and he is going to show "Civilization" to try out his idea.

General Leaves Portland.

Portland, Oregon.—The exchange of the General Film Company, once one of the biggest on Film Row, pulled up stakes March 31 and quit, at least as a full-fledged exchange. Manager L. A. Todd will remain in Portland in charge of the territory and have headquarters at the Imperial Hotel.

The reason given by Mr. Todd for the withdrawal of the Portland office is the elimination of overhead expense.

Fire at The Dalles.

The Dalles, Ore.—The Grand theater recently suffered from a fire which kept the house closed for several days while repairs were being made. Most of the damage was done by smoke and water and no films were lost. A. Bettingen is manager of the Grand.

The Lifeograph studio has 5,000 feet of floor space and the plant is equipped with several up-to-date printing machines. The directing and technical end of the studio is in the hands of Louis C. Moomaw, who until recently was with Burton Holmes and Paramount in the East.

Theater Is Church on Sundays Before Shows

In Portland, Ore., the Circle Theater Has Been Taken by the Taylor Street Methodist Church for Meetings—Services Before Show Opens.

PORTLAND, ORE.—The Circle theater, one of the city's best liked popular priced theaters, will be used each Sunday as a meeting place of a Methodist church congregation which formerly worshipped at the Taylor Street Methodist church at Third and Taylor streets. Services will begin at 10:30 Sunday mornings and conclude at 12:15. After an intermission of fifteen minutes the photoplay program will go on. The church deacons have leased the show house for Sunday mornings for a substantial period of time.

Manager G. T. Holtzclaw of the Circle is highly gratified by the action of the church people in leasing his house and says he will continue his policy of showing only the best photoplays there.

The leasing of the Circle for Sunday morning church service is considered an important step away from the bigoted ideas that have heretofore been known to exist in Portland concerning photoplay theaters. Last summer A. F. Flegel, a Portland attorney, arose on the floor of the City Council chamber and in a speech on censorship intimated that certain comparisons might be drawn between the motion picture industry and the saloon business. Mrs. A. F. Flegel was recently appointed a member of the censor board by Mayor Albee.

Albany Theater Opens.

Albany, Oregon.—The Opera House, which has been closed for some time, has been opened by F. W. Waters and John V. Hogg. Mr. Waters is the owner of the property. New equipment, including a new projector, has been furnished for the house by Pete Sabo, of Portland. The house opened March 31 with a Gold Rooster play.

It is rumored that C. A. Myers, who controls the Globe and Rolfe theaters, will also open the Rolfe, which has been closed, making three show houses in the town.

Pullman Sunday Closing Fight Nears Climax

Sabbatarians and Picture Show Proponents Each Submit Petitions to City Council—Councilmen Will Decide with the Majority.

By J. S. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

PULLMAN, WASH.—The Sunday moving picture fight continues to arouse considerable public interest. At a meeting of the city council a remonstrance was presented by J. N. Emerson containing the names of 676 voters who favored Sunday closing and Mr. Emerson stated that this represented a majority of the registered voters. At the same session a petition was presented containing 561 names of voters favoring keeping the picture shows open on Sunday.

Insomuch as a majority of the members of council went on record as favorable to respecting the desires of the majority of the voters in the matter, it is taken for granted that should a digest of the petitions disclose the majority claimed by the remonstrators the petition for Sunday opening will be denied.

The cause of the petitioners was presented by E. F. Emmick, manager of the Grand theater, while J. N. Emerson, the Rev. J. G. Robinson and Professor F. A. Thomson represented the opposing faction, all making speeches of remonstrance. The remonstrators say that their petitions represent not only the big majority of the voters, but 590 heads of families, the majority of the school patrons, school teachers and college faculty.

The mayor appointed Councilman Myrtle S. Cardiff a committee of one to assist the city clerk in checking over the two petitions with the registration books. Definite action will be taken by the council at the next meeting.

The councilmen were severly criticised by the Rev. J. G. Robinson in his speech for bringing the matter to an issue by petitions instead of calling a special election or circulating the petitions themselves. He said, "It is an injustice to the community to cause the people to chase over the hills with petitions to ascertain the desires of the majority. You should have done the chasing yourselves or called an election. You have compelled the people of the community to stand on their heads to offset something which they feel ought not to be."

The Rev. Mr. Robinson stated that the churches did not take the initiative in the matter of remonstrance, but that the ministers were asked by the Christian people to take the lead in offsetting the threatened injustice to the majority.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—Fred S. Peachy, secretary and manager of the Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco, has returned from a trip to Sacramento, where the State Legislature is in session, to interview the law makers on measures of interest to the film industry. He states that the outlook at present is that a stop has been put to all legislation detrimental to the film business with the possible exception of one or two measures of minor importance. There is every reason to believe, according to Mr. Peachy, that the state-wide censorship bill has been permanently sidetracked, as has been the proposed age limit law. The motion picture interests of San Francisco took a part in the last general election to the extent of refusing to allow films attacking the wine industry to be shown in this territory and now have the support of wine growers in measures affecting the film business. Mr. Peachy is personally acquainted with most of the senators and assemblymen from Northern California and his personal efforts have counted much in the fight against adverse legislation. Now that these matters have virtually been disposed of Mr. Peachy has tendered his resignation as manager of the local Board of Trade, a position he has filled with success for almost two years, and early in April will become associated with the Universal Film Exchange as head of the sales department.

Fine House Planned for Fresno, Cal.

Fresno, Cal.—James Beatty, who conducts the Liberty theater at San Jose, Cal., and who is rated as being one of the most successful exhibitors in this part of the state, has taken a lease, with Theodore Keech, on a 2,000 seat moving picture house to be erected at once at the Raisin City by the Einstein Investment company. Plans for this theater are being prepared by architects Coates & Traver and it is intended to have the house ready for occupancy before the end of the year.

The new house will be known as the Liberty theater and will be conducted under the direct management of Mr. Keech, who was formerly a resident of Fresno. It will embody many ideas now found only in the finest metropolitan theaters. There will be a smoking room for men on the mezzanine floor and a nursery will be installed as an addition to the ladies' rest room. Special attention will be paid to the heating, cooling and ventilating systems and the theater will be made more comfortable for summer use than the airdomes that are used so extensively throughout the San Joaquin Valley. The estimated cost of the new theater is placed at about $125,000.

M. P. E. L. President Drops Into Town.

San Francisco, Cal.—Lee Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, was a visitor in this city early in the week, but remained for only a few days. But few exhibitors learned of his visit until after his departure and there was no mass meeting of members of the trade, as had been planned.

K-E-S-E in New Home.

San Francisco, Cal.—The K-E-S-E Service has moved to 183 Golden Gate avenue, where a fine builing has been erected exclusively for film exchange purposes. The new quarters are much more central than the former ones, besides being larger and embodying many more conveniences. One of the features of the new home is the abundance of natural light, making the use of electric lights unnecessary throughout the day.

Manager W. O. Edmonds is delighted with the manner in which business is coming in and states that the Max Linder comedies, which have been creating such excitement here, have been booked at the Imperial theater.

Supply House Moves.

San Francisco, Cal.—Walter Preddey, who conducts a large moving picture theater supply house, has moved to 187 Golden Gate avenue. He has fitted up a fine store at this location and now that he is permanently located and has increased facilities for storage at his command is preparing to carry larger stocks than ever. Mr. Preddey is well known through his numerous inventions and has supervised the installation of equipment in many large houses in northern California.

All-Star Feature Distributors, Inc., Move to Avenue.

San Francisco, Cal.—The All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., has given up its old quarters and is now well settled in its fine new home at 191 Golden Gate avenue, at the corner of Leavenworth street. The large basement is to be given over to a printing department, an exhibition room and to the storage of surplus advertising matter. The printing department is a new venture with this firm and has been installed on account of the fact that the printing bills now amount to more than a thousand dollars a month, affording an opportunity for making a substantial saving, as well as insuring quick service. Dick Marshall, formerly with the "Daughter of the Gods," has joined the force of the All Star Feature Distributors, Inc. and will handle the publicity on "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea." M. Rosenberg, of Seattle, called upon Mr. Lesser while the moving operations were in progress to confer on matters pertaining to film rights.

San Francisco Strand Theater Opened Mar. 15

House Once Named the Empress Has Been Overhauled and Beautified—New Managerial Policy With Its New Name.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The Strand theater, for many years conducted under the name of the Empress theater, opened March 25 under its new name and a new managerial policy. Although closed for but six days the house presented an entirely different aspect upon opening as an exclusive moving picture theater, having been redecorated both within and without and many new furnishings installed. The ticket booth has been removed to a position nearer the street, the entire lobby has been covered with a rich carpet and luxurious draperies added. Loge chairs have been installed on the main floor and in the balcony, the lighting system has been changed throughout the house and a new ventilating system has been put in. During the brief period in which the house was dark a large Wurlitzer-Hope Jones unit orchestra was installed, it having been necessary to employ workmen on this on day and night shifts in order to have it in readiness for the opening.

The opening attraction was "A Poor Little Rich Girl," featuring Mary Pickford, and the demand to see this has been so great that it has been decided to run it for a second week. It will be followed by "The Price She Paid," with Clara Kimball Young. In addition to the regular musical program offered by the orchestra Manager Sid Grauman presented a boy violinist, whose work is creating a furor here. The opening bill also included the Strand Theater topical review selected and compiled by the management. The serial atraction, "The Great Secret," is shown at matinees only. The admission prices are 15, 20 and 30 cents. The executive staff consists of Mark M. Leichter, assistant director; Seth Perkins, resident manager; W. Harold Wilson, publicity director; Herman Heller, musical supervisor; Cecil Teague and John Forrest, organists, and John Ford, chief operator.

Davis Bros. Enter Film Exchange Field.

San Francisco, Cal.—Davis Bros., who formerly conducted a large poster exchange on Eddy street, but who have been out of business for several months, have entered the feature distributing field and have opened offices with Walter Preddey, at 187 Golden Gate avenue. They have purchased the California and Nevada rights to "Where Are My Children?" from Sol. L. Lesser, as well as the rights in the same territory to "Purity," formerly handled by the Warner Film Attractions. An entirely new line of advertising matter is being prepared and these productions will be offered to exhibitors at once. It is the plan of Davis Bros. to purchase other large productions at once and to engage in the feature film business on a large scale.

Portsmouth, Va., May Tax High Admissions

New Tax Measure Would More Than Double License Fees to Theaters Charging More Than Ten Cents—Would Stop All Big Shows.

By Clarence L. Linz

PORTSMOUTH, VA.—The city fathers of Portsmouth, Va., are to take a hand in the game of the high cost of living. Yes, their plan is not to make the farmers charge less for potatoes, onions, and other flowers of the garden, but, on the contrary, their efforts are to be along lines which, to their minds, will result in keeping the cost of admission into the motion picture houses from rising.

A new tax bill is being submitted to the council for final action. If this is adopted, or at least that part of it which relates to motion pictures, it will be up to the managers to keep their prices of admission as they now are 5 and 10 cents. The present annual tax on theaters charging 5 cents for admission is $50, while the 10 cent shows must pay an extra $25, or $100 per annum, for the privilege of doing business in Portsmouth. The council has been asked to add a clause to the present tax bill whereby all theaters charging over 10 cents admission will have to pay an annual license tax of $500. This is more than double the present rates, and would apply even though the manager of the house only charged more than 10 cents for admission to occasional shows, such as the big features for which he must pay a higher rental. The law, if enacted, will serve to prevent the theaters from even exhibiting the big features that are offered at prices in advance of the average booking rates.

Insure Films Sent by Post for Sake of Record.

Washington, D. C.—George M. Mann, manager of the Famous Players' exchange, is improving upon the exhibitors in the territory covered by him that all films returned by parcel post must be insured, at least at the 3 cent, or lowest, rate. Mr. Mann states that by insuring films the shipper gets a record, the exchange at Washington being required to sign for each shipment, and any trouble that may possibly arise may be traced and the occurrence prevented. Ordinary shipments are not booked by the Postal Department as they are by the express companies, and therefore, in the event of loss, damage, or delay, no records are available to aid in tracing the matter. Other exchanges are also desirous of having the shipments insured, and, as the rate is so small, the exhibitors are largely complying with the request.

Haas Announces Partnership Change.

Washington, D. C.—F. B. Haas announces that the partnership existing between himself and Earle F. Reese, trading as the H. B. Film Company, of Washington, D. C., has been dissolved and that he has formed a new partnership to operate the business with E. S. Miller, of Richmond, Va. The concern will handle features in Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and N. C. Carolina as well as the District of Columbia. Mr. Haas will act as general sales manager, while Mr. Miller, who has been engaged for a number of years in newspaper work in Richmond and who at one time was manager of a theater in Boston, will act as general office manager.

Buffalo News Letter

By Joseph A. McGuire, 137 N. Elmwood Ave., Buffalo, N. Y.

"Did She Keep Her Word?"

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Ties to the striking question appearing as the headline of a miniature insert recently accompanying the printed programme of the Elmwood moving picture theater, Buffalo. To whet the readers' curiosity Manager Weinberg of the Elmwood adds this to the question: "Find the answer by meeting Ethel Barrymore in 'The White Raven.' Below this advice in a picture of the star.

Allendale's Manager Adopts a Slogan.

Buffalo, N. Y.—"A picture playhouse for old and young," is the slogan used to describe his house by Manager Johnston of the Allendale theater, Buffalo. The house caters to both the aged and the kiddies, as well as to hundreds of intermediate years, with "a double feature every night." Mr. Johnston recently gave to his patrons souvenir booklets advertising "The Press and the Spellman," a film produced by the Buffalo Evening News and shown at the Allendale.

The Star and the Teck Showed Films Holy Week.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Two Buffalo houses, the Star and the Teck, both playing the large legitimate attractions throughout the moving pictures for Holy Week. The silent drama brought good returns, while it was figured that spoken performances during the week would have brought only light receipts. Dr. P. C. Cornell, manager of the Star, showed "Intolerance," which he advertised extensively. "Mothers of France," featuring Sarah Bernhardt, was shown by Manager Olshet of the Teck.

Manager Cummings of the Regent Finds Business Good.

Buffalo, N. Y.—"We are getting fine returns from our showing of 'The Seven Deadly Sins,'" said James A. Cummings, manager of the Regent, Buffalo. "This picture will be presented each Saturday for a period of seven weeks." The Regent is located at Main and Utica streets, known as "Buffalo's Busy Corner." This was a lively transfer point for the crowds who visited Billy Sunday's tabernacle. During the eight weeks' stay of the baseball evangelist in this city thousands dropped into the Regent to enjoy the show while on their way from the Tabernacle.

"Our programme seemed to relieve the Sunday enthusiasts of the severe tension which they experienced while listening to the dynamic Billy," said Mr. Cummings.

Newark Film News

By Jacob J. Kalter, 25 Branford Place, Newark, N. J.

Big Features in Vogue in Newark.

NEWARK, N. J.—Newark has had the good fortune of having had the highest-classed screen productions at its theaters during the past few weeks. A house that is making a policy of showing only the most stupendous productions is the Strand theater, 148 Market street, owned by the Frank G. Hall Amusement company, and under the management of J. B. McNally. The Strand formerly showed vaudeville and pictures, but last month inaugurated a policy of showing nothing but the best visualizations. The first attraction at the theater was the "Birth of a Nation," which ran two weeks, and which was followed by "Intolerance" for an equal length of time. Then came "Joan the Woman," which was also shown two weeks. Then during the week of March 26, "Enlighten Thy Daughter," Ivan's drama, was exhibited. Booked for the week of April 1 is George M. Cohan's "Broadway Jones."

Another house that is devoting itself exclusively to the more expensive screen productions is the Goodwin theater, 863 Broad street, under the management of Mrs. L. H. Webbe. This theater has shown in the past few weeks such pictures as "The Crisis," "The Price She Paid," and, during the week of March 26, "The Masque of Life."

The Shubert theater, a legitimate house at Broad street and Central avenue, under the management of M. H. Schlesinger, turned "movie" in order to show Annette Kellermann in the Fox film, "A Daughter of the Gods," during the week of March 19. All in all, Newarkers have been treated to some excellent screen productions.

Calls His House Temple Theater.

Kearney, N. J.—James O. Lindsay, 195 Devon street, has filed "The Temple Theater" as the name of the moving picture theater located at 223-227 Kearney avenue.

Waste of Film in Maritime Provinces

Careless and Incompetent Handling of Film Causes Needless Expense to Exchanges—May Cooperate to Lessen Trouble.

By F. F. Sully, The La Tour, St. John, N. B.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—Exchange men doing business throughout the territory are becoming very much disgruntled over the condition in which films are being returned to the offices. Many of the managers feel that unless there is a decided change in the manner in which some of the houses are handling film that it will be necessary to co-operate and deal with the situation unitedly. Several of the concerns doing large volumes of business in the provinces have experienced heavy losses lately, solely because what were new films have been returned to them practically ruined.

In making transfers from house to house many of the companies are unable to revise the reels, and as a result one theater will ship pictures to another with the films torn and improperly patched, and frequently without returning pieces that may have been taken from one or more of the reels, and often minus the lithographs. After passing through several hands the films are thus returned to the offices, torn, gouged, and in anything but fit condition for screening. Some of the managers have taken up the matter with A. E. Wall, chairman of the Board of Censors for the Province of Nova Scotia, and he has promised his co-operation in every respect.

It is felt that incompetent operators, poor help in the operating rooms, and carelessness and incompetency on the part of the men in general who handle the pictures are some of the causes responsible for the present condition of affairs. It is only during the last two or three months that these developments have reached a point where it is almost unbearable for the exchange men, who say they are ashamed to return the films to the head offices after once being used in the territory.

It is pointed out that it is an evil that should be nipped in the bud. If it were a condition that grew out of necessity the exchange men would not complain, but where it is purely the outgrowth of carelessness and incompetency they feel they have a right to voice a strong word of protest and dissatisfaction.

Censorship a Proposed Sex Interest League.

St. John, N. B.—A movement was set on foot at Ottawa last week at the meeting of the executives of the National Council of Women to have a woman appointed to every provincial board of censors throughout the dominion. The resolution, which was passed practically unanimously at the capital, will be referred back to the various council centers in Canada for discussion and approval before being urged upon the governments. The St. John Council of Women have been asked to deal with the matter, and it is felt from opinions already expressed that they will heartily endorse the proposition. If the government of New Brunswick consented to do this it would mean that the board would have five members instead of four.

The Maritime Provinces Motion Picture Exhibitors' League has already expressed itself in favor of a federal board of censors, with the abolition of the provincial boards, which are an added expense to every province. According to this expression of feeling the league stands opposed to the movement of the Council of Women to have a woman member added to each board.

It has been announced that the Maritime Provinces Motion Picture Exhibitors' League will not oppose the bill recently introduced in the Nova Scotia Assembly for the taxation of theatergoers.

Business Notes in Maritime Provinces.

B.—Isadore Sourkes, resident manager for the Fox Film, gave a private screening of the seven-reel production, "Romeo and Juliet," starring Theda Bara and Harry Hilliard, in the Unique theater. Manager Steve C. Hurley and Fred G. Spencer, proprietors, were present, and several other exhibitors and their friends.

St. John, N. B.—Charles Burman, special representative of the Regal Films, has been on a business trip through the Sydneys, and has booked up several new houses for Regal service. "The Masque of Life," the Canadian rights for which have been secured by the Regal, will come into this territory in a short time.

Charlottetown, P. E. I.—The first William Fox production to be seen on the island is to come soon to F. G. Spencer's Princess theater. Other houses in this section which have contracted for Fox service are: C. E. Givan's Lyric, Sussex, N. B., N. J. Wootten's Specialty theater, Perth, N. B.; and G. H. Prior's Annue U theater in Marysville, N. B., a milling town just outside of Fredericton.

St. John, N. B.—R. Allan Christie, of the Universal forces, returned last week from a trip along the North Shore. Mr. Christie says that the exhibitors in that section have had none too good a season, but with the closing of the skating rinks in Newcastle and Campbellton business is beginning to pick up. G. A. Mannetta, manager of the local office, was a recent business visitor in Montreal.

Objectionable Posters Removed.

Newark, N. J.—Chief Long has taken a determined stand against the showing of objectionable posters in front of moving picture theaters. Saturday evening, March 24, complaints were made to him concerning some objectionable posters in front of a moving picture house on Market street. The chief sent Lieutenant Quinn to investigate, and he compelled the removal of the offending pictures.

Woman Tries to Stop Show.

West Hoboken, N. J.—An attempt to excite a large audience in the Spring theater, on Spring street, was made by Mrs. Maloney, of 317 Angelique street, against the picture, "Whom the Gods Destroy," showing the events leading up to the execution of Sir Roger Casement. Mrs. Maloney was the sole objector to the picture. The picture has been shown in other cities.

Atlanta Council Stops Sunday Shows

By Vote of 17 to 11 Decision Is Reached to Close All Houses—Reverses Recommendation of the Ordinance Committee.

By A. M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill Ave., Atlanta, Ga.

ATLANTA, GA.—Rejecting the report of its ordinance committee and after considerable debate, in the course of which one alderman who voted with the majority on the ordinance committee explained his reasons for changing his position, council yesterday placed a ban on moving pictures operated for charity on Sunday by a vote of 17 to 11.

When the report of the ordinance committee, which was adverse to the banning ordinance, was reached Councilman Buchanan, author and chief advocate of the ordinance, moved to substitute a minority report of the committee which favored its passage. The debate was on the substitute offered by him.

Arguing for the adoption of his motion prohibiting Sunday pictures, Councilman Buchanan said that the privilege of operating for charity had been abused; that the larger charities, such as the Salvation Army and the Associated Charities, had never asked for the help of the Sunday movies and did not want it, and that the moving picture men themselves did not seek a continuation of the privilege.

Alderman Johnson said that he had changed his mind on the matter, after thinking over the lessons of the ten commandments taught him by his mother, the two of which that made the deepest impression on his memory being "Remember the Sabbath day," and "Honor thy father and mother," and he could not be loyal to either of these commandments unless he voted for the Buchanan substitute.

Louisville News Letter

By Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Stark Building, Louisville, Ky.

Louisville Theaters Show Patriotism.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—Patriotism is rampant at and around the Louisville moving picture theaters. At all of them the picture of President Wilson and the flag are thrown on the screen at intervals and uniformly are greeted with applause from the houses, which invariably rise and cheer when the "Star Spangled Banner" or "My Country, 'Tis of Thee" is played. The managers of the local theaters have been much interested in the movement, which seems to be gaining headway, to select "Dixie" as the national air, but they have been careful about overdoing it. Kentucky was a border state in the Civil War times and the chances are that a too enthusiastic display of the Southern melody might be misunderstood by some of the people.

All of the theaters are more or less elaborately decorated with the Stars and Stripes and anything in the way of a film with a patriotic angle is in great demand. Some weeks or months ago there was a disposition to put the soft pedal on the press notices which called attention to war pictures, because of the variant sympathies of the people, but now that a definite war development has come this caution is thrown to the winds.

Manager Bleich Gives a Belgian Benefit.

Owensboro, Ky.—In co-operation with organizations of women and churches Manager Bleich of the Grand theater has just concluded two special entertainments for the benefit of the Belgian children. For the occasion he displayed the film, "Somewhere in France," and "Great Expectations," while local amateurs sang and provided other entertainment. The admission prices were advanced to 25 cents and 15 cents and on both occasions the theater was filled.

Louisville, Ky.—The Booker T. Washington Amusement Co. has filed incorporation articles here with an authorized capital of $25,000 and proposes to erect a theater for colored people on Breckinridge street between Preston and Shelby streets, where there is a large and prosperous colored community. There are other theaters in the western part of the city for colored people, but this will be the first in this particular district.

Cherokee Theater Does Its Bit for New Albany.

Louisville, Ky.—Officials of the Cherokee Theater and the Cherokee Improvement Club combined in their efforts to raise a fund for the New Albany tornado sufferers. The theater arranged to put on four daily shows for two days, while the members of the club put their canvassers at work to cover the whole of the highlands selling tickets of admission. At 10 cents each they were able to urge that the residents purchase them for the good of the cause whether they expected to go to the theater or not. Results were very satisfactory.

L. S. Goldberg to Manage Big Features Exchange.

Louisville, Ky.—Lee S. Goldberg, secretary-treasurer of the Big Features Rights corporation, of which Col. Fred Levy is president, and heretofore joint manager of the Mary Anderson and the Strand theaters, has been made manager of the corporation, relinquishing the active management of the two houses. Harry A Bilger becomes the manager of the Mary Anderson, and Joe Goldberg becomes the active manager of The Strand. Lee Goldberg will serve in an advisory capacity, especially as to the bookings made for the two houses.

The Big Features Rights Corporation is prosecuting its work with marked success. "The Crisis," of which it has now four prints out, is doing very well indeed wherever it is shown.

Keith Houses Aid Tornado Victims.

Louisville, Ky.—A practical bit of relief work was done by the three Keith houses in Louisville for the sufferers from the New Albany tornado of recent date. The managements of the houses and those connected with them did "their bit" individually in the way of relief, but the theaters, Keith's vaudeville, the Mary Anderson and the Strand, donated the gross proceeds of the matinees of each house to the fund raised by Louisville. The motion picture houses' receipts were $120 and the vaudeville house about $200.

Manager Phillips Sells Kitchener Theater Interests.

Kitchener, Ont.—Moving picture fans have heard with regret that Manager Pop Phillips of the Grand and Theatorium, Kitchener, Ontario, has sold out his interest in these houses to H. H. Jennings, formerly owner of the Mary Pickford theater, Toronto. Mr. Jennings has had a long and successful career in the Canadian film field, while Mr. Phillips was much respected in the Ontario city. That Mr. Phillips will be missed from Kitchener is evident by the number of items in local newspapers, all of which laud him for his straightforward and successful efforts.

His headquarters are in Toronto. On the occasion of the departure of L. H. Watrous, formerly manager of the Greater Vitagraph office, from the city to assume a new position at the Boston branch of the company, the exchange managers of Toronto tendered a farewell supper to him at the St. Charles hotel.

H. L. Breining and Peter Toole Are, It Is Rumored, to Build a Picture Theater—Planning to Form a Great Picture House Chain.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 So. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Quincy, Ill.—Drawings have been submitted for a handsome theater to be erected some place downtown by H. L. Breining and Peter Toole of this city. It is announced that associated with these two are New York and St. Louis men who plan to form a chain of theaters including the cities of Quincy, Decatur, Terre Haute, Indianapolis, Evansville, Nashville, Memphis, Birmingham, Montgomery, New Orleans, Houston, Dallas, Fort Smith, Ark., and East St. Louis.

The house to be erected here probably will be known as the Plaza Garden theater. It will set back from the curb line on a beautiful lawn and the interior will be a perfect flower garden. An orchestral organ will be on one side and a set of chimes on the other; music will be a feature of the programs. The Quincy theater will serve as a pattern for other houses in the chain. For attractions it is planned to use high-class pictures, vaudeville and musical comedies.

Censorship Advocates Active.

Oak Park, Ill.—Members of the Suburban Civics and Equal Suffrage association were urged by Mrs. Charles Wilmot to write to Illinois legislators and urge them to vote for state censorship. She said that the organization of local committees to study the motion picture problem in Oak Park had resulted in better pictures, but that there still was room for improvement.

New Company Takes Over "Creation."

Belvidere, Ill.—Dr. Leslie W. Jones, formerly of Belvidere, is one of the organizers of a company which has taken over the photo-play "Creation," sponsored by the International Eible Students' Association (Pastor Russell's organization), and will show this with other films. The concern is incorporated in New Jersey and capitalized at $250,000.

SEATTLE NEWS LETTER.

Seattle Exchange Notes.

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

SEATTLE, WASH.—Georpe P. Endert has resigned his position as manager of the Greater Features Company to accept another place which he is not yet ready to announce. G. L. LeRoy, formerly with C. R. Coulter, has succeeded Mr. Endert.

E. R. Redlich, former special representative on the Pacific Coast for the Max Linder comedies, has gone to Toronto to take charge of the Metro office there. Mr. Redlich's many friends, both among exhibitors and exchange men, were sorry to see him leave Seattle.

T. C. Malcolm, Coast supervisor for Mutual, spent several days in Seattle this week.

J. V. Lynn, advertising manager of the Seattle Paramount office, went to Portland last week to give a special smoker exhibition of "Joan the Woman." Over fifty exhibitors and newspaper men attended the exhibition and were very enthusiastic over the Farrar feature.

During the week of the exhibitors' convention in Seattle F. C. Quimby, Pathe's Northwest manager, called in his two Washington roadmen, P. L. Carrol, who covers the Spokane territory, and W. H. Rankin, who works out of Seattle, and the three held a convention of their own, discussing how best to work the bookings on the new Pathe serial "The Mystery of the Double Cross," featuring Mollie King.

A private showing of "The Double Cross" was held Thursday, March 29, in the Liberty theater, Seattle.

W. H. Rankin, Pathe roadman, has invested in a new Studebaker motor car to use in working his territory. We suppose Mr. Rankin thought he could well afford such an extravagance, since he has won a fine new spring suit from Mr. Quimby for making 50 bookings on "Patria" before April 1.

Manager Quimby reports record bookings during Lent on the colored 7-reel picture, "The Life of Our Saviour."

Carl Stern, K-E-S-E manager in Seattle, has resigned to take charge of the Denver Pathe office.

H. A. Johnson Has Been Ill.

Seattle, Wash.—The many friends of H. A. Johnson, of the supply house which bears his name, are congratulating him on his recovery from a recent serious illness. Many out-of-town exhibitors, especially those from Alaska, make Mr. Johnson's place of business their headquarters while in the city, and these men as well as his Seattle friends were very much alarmed when they heard that their friend had suffered two hemorrhages and was in a critical condition. Mr. Johnson's robust constitution enabled him to pass safely through the crisis, but he is still very weak, and can leave home for only two or three hours each day. During his illness he received many tokens of esteem from his friends.

Important Bookings.

Seattle, Wash.—Jensen and von Herberg have signed for Pathe's entire output of 18 reels per week. The first feature of the new service to be shown was "Kick In" at the Coliseum last week.

Lathrop, Code, and Thorne, who own the Alaska Feature Film company and a string of motion picture theaters in central and northeastern Alaska, have bought "Patria," which they will put on at their houses at advanced prices.

Cincinnati League Prepares to Aid Nation

Will Do Everything In Its Power to Promote the Enlistment of Recruits—Slides and Patriotic Films Will Be Plentiful.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati, O.

CINCINNATI, O.—The Cincinnati Motion Picture Exhibitors' League is prepared to do everything in its power to assist Uncle Sam in getting ready for trouble, from running patriotic films to enlisting. At least a resolution was passed at a recent meeting of the organization tendering to the local and Federal authorities the use of the screens of the photoplay houses for patriotic purposes, and the first practical use made of them was the showing of slides, made at the expense of the league, bearing the advertising of the recruiting departments of the Army and Navy.

Family Theater Ownership Suit Settled.

Cincinnati, O.—Title to the property on which the Family theater stands, as well as other large and valuable structures at Fifth and Vine streets, has finally been determined, adversely to the suit of Robert H. O'Neal, the Rising Sun, Ind., grocery clerk, who six years ago started litigation on a claim to the ownership of the property. One or two courts favored his suit, but the Supreme Court of the United States has finally settled the matter by refusing to grant an appeal to O'Neal. Pending the final decision of the matter the Family management and other tenants on the property have been paying their rental into court.

"Broadway Jones" Pleases Walnut Patrons.

Cincinnati, O.—The Walnut theater has the pleasure and profit of running the George M. Cohan picture, "Broadway Jones," the Artcraft release featuring the famous and versatile actor-author-composer-producer-manager. The new Walnut scale of prices, fifteen cents to twenty-five cents, prevailed, and Manager Libson is of the opinion that much higher prices could have been had during this engagement at least, on account of the popularity of the star.

Rumor Plans a 3,500 Seat House Here.

Cincinnati, O.—Plans are understood to have reached a fairly definite state for the construction on East Sixth street, between Vine and Walnut, of the largest moving picture theater in the city, with a seating capacity of 3,500 and the most modern features in every respect. The promotors have secured options on the property desired for the theater, and the capitalists interested are amply able to finance the venture.

Can't Stop a Film Passed by State Censor.

Dayton, O.—"Purity" is causing in Dayton the furore which is brought about in Cincinnati, Cleveland, Youngstown and other Ohio cities, but is being shown, none the less, at the Majestic, to large crowds. Posters advertising the film and showing the "form divine" of Audrey Munson were torn down by order of the city authorities under an ordinance authorizing such action, but City Manager Waite informed a conference of ministers that the city had no authority to suppress the film. The recent instance of "The Birth of a Nation," against which the colored element entered vigorous protests, was pointed to, and it was explained that any attempt to suppress a picture duly passed by the censors merely meant litigation, which could easily be prolonged during the run.

King Baggot Appears with "Absinthe."

Piqua, O.—The personal appearance of the popular star, King Baggot, at May's opera house, in connection with the engagement of "Absinthe," drew large crowds, and his remarks were heard with interest. Mr. Baggot went from Piqua to Dayton, and will appear in a number of Ohio towns in the next few weeks.

Manager Rayburg to Improve His New Lyceum.

Dayton, O.—New Lyceum theater is to be considerably enlarged and otherwise improved, Manager Valentine Rayburg announces. He intends to make it one of the finest moving-picture houses in the city. Increased business has made a large seating capacity necessary, and the other changes will be made while the enlargement is going on. The New Lyceum was opened eleven years ago, and has been successful from the start.

Cincinnati Theater and Business Notes.

Manager John Havlin, of the Grand opera house, was in Cincinnati for a few days recently, returning from his winter's stay at Miami, Fla., partly to attend to personal matters and partly to witness "The Birth of a Nation." He will go back to Miami shortly.

Manager Harris Hurst, of the World Film, is preparing for a special showing of the great Bernhardt film, "Mothers of France," and hopes to arrange for the use of one of the big downtown houses for its initial Cincinnati run. The first Ohio run was at the Grand, Columbus, following a special showing to newspaper men in the capital.

Manager Schnitzer, of the Cincinnati Bluebird exchange, received a real thrill the othe rmorning when he discovered that a duplicate-key thief had entered his office overnight and got away with about $30. No clue to the culprit has been found.

Will Combine the Picture and the Star.

Cincinnati, O.—Philip Selznick, who is related to L. J. Selznick, the prominent moving picture magnate, has opened quarters in Cincinnati for the handling of a unique and promising line of work in pictures. He proposes to devote himself exclusively to showing pictures in connection with the personal appearance of the stars featured in them, and has already secured the interest of a sufficient number of exhibitors to make his success certain. Christine Mayo will be the first star to appear in Cincinnati under his direction. The film to be used has not yet been announced. It is said that Mr. Selznick has some substantial financial support in the venture.

Philip Selznick.

Mayor Davis Forbids "Nation" Film Showing

"The Birth of a Nation" Is Billed for the Cleveland Opera House—But There Is a Chance That It Will Not Be Seen After All.

From M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbia Bldg., Cleveland, Ohio.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—A few more sighs and a couple of weeps for "The Birth of a Nation."

It don't seem no how as if the folks in Hicksburg or thereabouts will ever git to see that famous moving picture. Wall, it's running in Cincinnati and Dayton, but the latest is that Mayor Harry L. Davis, who put "Purity" to sleep in the film tin cans, has given his police officers an order that "The Birth" is not to be born in Cleveland.

"The Birth of a Nation" is billed in the papers, on the fences and billboards to open April 9 at the Opery House. This trade paper goes to press a little before that time, so we can't say that it did or it didn't. However, the mayor said that the film tends to excite race feeling and might cause a riot.

"Such a possibility must be avoided by all means, especially in such critical times as these," said the Mayor.

But the law director said a complaint had been made by colored citizens.

Manager Gardner of the Opera House would not discuss the situation, but instead the following day after the Mayor's statement, large ads announcing the coming of the picture were run.

So ya can't tell Bill, if it's a publicity stunt, or if it's the real thing. Ya know, Bill, the Mayor did stop "Purity" and that was no publicity stunt. It ain't played a day since the police seized the reels two months ago.

F. P. Woda Heads Strand.

Cleveland, O.—F. P. Woda, formerly of the Orpheum theater, East Ninth street, is now operating the Strand theater on Superior avenue.

Leetonia's New American Theater a Beauty.

Leetonia, Ohio.—Leetonia is to have one of the finest picture theaters in Ohio when the new American theater is opened in a few weeks.

The house is being built by P. M. Kelly, who takes particular pleasure at this time in naming it after his country. It will have 450 seats and will be equipped with the latest features.

Besides having a Minusa screen, Simplex machines, a ticket-selling machine and a change maker, Mr. Kelly has provided his own electric light plant, which is something that many of the larger theaters don't have.

K-E-S-E a Hive of Business.

Cleveland.—The local office of the K-E-S-E, in the Sincere building, seems to be a bee-hive of industry these days. The Max Linder comedies are booked for a week first-run in the Standard theater, while the Selig release, "Little Lost Sister," has just completed a successful week's run at the Orpheum.

A Versatile Manager.

Cleveland, Ohio.—One of the most versatile managers in Ohio is G. Gullia, manager of the Venice theater, Mayfield road, Cleveland.

Gullia's theater is in the Italian district. He soon found that the folks out that way wanted something besides pictures, so he organized a stock company of six people and gave them opera classics. Such operatic dramas as "Lucia," "Aida," etc., are on the program.

And in between acts he runs a Charles Chaplin film. With such a combination, Impressario Gullia gets away with the business in fine shape.

Metro Opens a Depot Office Here.

Cleveland, O.—Metro has opened a depot branch of the Pittsburgh office at 701 Belmont Bldg., where exhibitors of Cleveland call and return their films. This does away with the uncertainty of express delays, as all films are shipped in lot shipments to and from Pittsburgh and the local depot. And besides it saves the exhibitors of Cleveland express charges.

New Michigan Theaters.

Paramount to Double Its Exchange.

Detroit, Mich.—There will be at least three first-runs in Detroit on the Roscoe Arbuckle comedies. The Majestic, Regent and Rialto theaters have contracted for them. H. A. Ross is manager of the Paramount exchange.

Manager Ross has been given authority by S. J. Stoughton, district manager, to proceed with the enlargement of the Detroit quarters so as to care for 100 per cent. increase in business. Among the many improvements and changes to be made is the installation of a projection department in the basement. The sales force of the Paramount in Michigan now consists of Lew W. Foster, J. E. Ryder and Harry Zapp.

The largest staff of experts in all departments makes the MOVING PICTURE WORLD the one paper in the trade that fully fills the requirements of every reader.

Open Booking Finds Favor in Detroit

Exhibitors Like to Play Safe With a Good Program Back of Them, But Are Booking from Open Market Several Days Each Week.

By Jacob Smith, 503 Free Press Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—The writer has been doing some investigating among small and large exhibitors regarding the program and the open booking policy on motion pictures, and in justice to the facts brought out in such investigation credit must be given the open booking policy as against the program. By that I mean to say that exhibitors are leaning more to the policy of open booking than they are the program. As the writer said once before, most of the exhibitors like to be tied up to one or two programs for protection and devote the rest of the time to open booking attractions. Here is the best proof that the open booking policy is gaining. It used to be that the exhibitor would have only one or two days' open booking, while at the present time they will run about four or three days of program and the rest open booking.

Exhibitors at the present time want big attractions, such as "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," "The Girl Philippa," "The Barrier," "Civilization," etc. Properly exploited these big attractions certainly draw the crowds, whether in the smaller cities or the suburban houses of the larger cities. For instance, the Knickerbocker theater at Jefferson and the Boulevard, Detroit, ran "Civilization" for three days, April 1, 2 and 3, at 25 and 50 cents, playing capacity every performance and packing the theater as it was never packed before. So well pleased is Frederic Ingersoll, president of the company, and Manager Martin, that they are now looking around to play similar big attractions at least one or two days of each week. What applies to the Knickerbocker is also true of such other houses as the Rialto, Stratford, Ferry Field, Globe, Regent, Alhambra, Rosedale, Del-The, etc. They all want the "big stuff."

W. M. Elliott Praises "Joan."

Elliott, after spending a week in New York, returned to Detroit on April 2, to assume charge of the Detroit office of the Barnett Film Attractions, 307-308 Peter Smith building. Mr. Elliott saw "Joan the Woman" while in New York and from the enthusiasm he displays over this feature it must be a wonderful production in every respect. "Bill" can't wait for its exploitation in Michigan—he wants them to feel just as enthusiastic as he is. He left for the upper peninsula on April 5, where he will arrange bookings on "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea."

Memphis Sees a Theater Building Boom

Joe Maceri to Erect a 700-Seat House—Sam Zarulla Will Spend $25,000 on a New Theater—Other Picture Theater Improvements.

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.

MEMPHIS, TENN.—A survey of local building activities discloses the fact that many new theaters and enlargements are now in course of preparation, or contemplated for the near future. One of the most important of the new houses will be erected by Joe Maceri, manager and part owner of the Daisy theater in Memphis. It is planned by Mr. Maceri to put up a handsome theater, with a seating capacity of 700, to embody the latest scientific architectural details, and be operated as an exclusive motion picture house, which policy is also in effect at the Daisy at the present time.

Sam Zerilla, owner of the Pastime theater, has just purchased a plot of ground in the central district, and will erect a high-class house, with a seating capacity of 800. The cost of this theater will be approximately $25,000. A number of new theaters for colored people are also proposed for Beale street within a short time to take care of the large negro patronage in Memphis.

The Metropolitan, showing both pictures and vaudeville, will be overhauled within a short time and extensive enlargements made. A. Barrasso is owner of the Metropolitan, and is of the opinion that business conditions justify an enlargement of this character. With the many additions to the Memphis moving picture theatrical field, it would appear that theater men are fortifying themselves to take care of a box office rush during the coming seasons.

Palace at Jellico Sold.

Jellico, Tenn.—A theater deal of importance was recently recorded here when the Dreamland Amusement company, operating the Palace Theater company, was sold to the Palace Theater company of Jellico. The stockholders of the new organization are G. W. Townsend, president; Robert Brummett, secretary-treasurer and general manager, and L. J. Baker, vice president. Mr. Brummett is in active charge of the Palace interests, and being a man of wide experience in the moving picture field is expected to guide the destinies of the Palace in a capable manner.

National Anthem Precedes Show.

Nashville, Tenn.—The custom of rendering "The Star Spangled Banner" preceding each performance at the Princess theater is lending much to the spirit of patriotism in Nashville, and Manager Harry Sudekum may be numbered among the patriotic theater men of the country. The entire audience rises in respect to the flag when the orchestra strikes up the national air, and the stars and stripes are simultaneously projected upon the screen. This is a splendid tribute to the nation, and should be employed more widely throughout the various states.

R. T. Kelley with United Film.

Memphis, Tenn.—Manager A. H. Kaufman announces the affiliation of R. T. Kelley with the local branch of United Film service, having been placed in charge of shipping and transportation matters for this exchange. Mr. Kelley is thoroughly familiar with routing, etc., having been identified with the Wells Fargo and Southern Express companies for a number of years previous to his connection with United, and is expected to make a valuable addition to the efficient force of Mr Kaufman's division.

H. Shepherd Obtains Vaudette.

Dyersburg, Tenn.—The Vaudette theater, formerly operated by C. J. Enochs, has been sold to H. Shepherd of Dyersburg. The Vaudette is a thriving theater of this town, and seems assured of a successful career under the leadership of Mr. Shepherd, who is an experienced theater man, with other theater holdings in the state.

Operators' Union Backs President.

Birmingham, Ala.—Local No. 78, Executive Board of Stage Employees, has condemned the action of the Birmingham Trades Council in withholding indorsement of President Wilson in his relations with Germany. The Stage Employees are back of the President to a man, as well as Moving Picture Operators Local Union No. 236, the latter organization having drafted resolutions and sent same out under the union's seal. The resolutions state that the organization is ready to back up the President's stand in any possible manner with regard to the international situation. The Moving Picture union resolutions are signed by J. T. Pruitt, Chairman of Trustees; J. F. Mankin, Sergeant-at-Arms; J. C. Halfacre, Vice President; J. T. Rinberson, Treasurer; W. C. Alexander, Recording Secretary; W. A. Moore, President; and W. O. Harding, Business Agent.

What Is Doing in St. Louis Film Circles

Fight On Against Free Shows—Bluebird Hennessy Meets a New Hotel Clerk—One from Hammerstein and Another from Hy Slocum—Brent's Newsie.

A. H. Giebler, 4123 Westminster Place, St. Louis, Mo.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—Exhibitors in this city are threatened with a vivacious form of competition in the shape of free picture shows on wheels that can be driven up to any vacant lot or corner. An advertising concern is getting ready to use moving vans for this purpose. The back of the van will be fitted with a screen, and the pictures projected from the inside of the van, and while the films will be mostly advertising, there will be enough of other subjects to hold the crowds. A committee appointed by the Exhibitors' Association to look into the matter reported that the city authorities say the moving van shows cannot be stopped or made to even pay a license, as long as no admission is charged. Further efforts will be made by the Exhibitors' Association.

John Gentner's Bright Sign.

John Gentner, of the Retina theater, Twentieth and Market streets, believes in letting his light shine, so much so that he has had a great big wink-every-second electric sign put up over his theater. John always was some advertiser, though.

That Seven A. M. Call Was Working.

Bluebird Hennessy brought this one in: "I was in a little Northeast Missouri town and there was a new night clerk at the hotel. He was a very obliging chap, but it didn't take much of an observer to see that he had not been away from the farm long. After I had registered, I asked to be called at seven the next morning. The clerk consulted the call-board and turned back with an apologetic and sorrowful voice: 'I'm awfully sorry,' he said, 'but seven o'clock is taken. The best I can do for you is 7:15, 7:45, or 8:30.'"

Here's Your Horrible.

Lew Bent, who goes around with Triangle films, says the newsboys have got so in the habit of yelling "All about the horrible murder," and "horrible" this and that, that they can't get along without the word. Lew heard a kid the other night who didn't have anything terrible to announce yelling "Here's your horrible green sheet."

Gives Space to All Big Features Showing Here.

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat has started making announcements of all the big features released in this territory each week. Louis Cella Buys Players Theater?

There is a report that Louis Cella has bought the Players theater, on Grand, near Olive, and will increase the seating capacity by one thousand. Mr. Cella now owns and controls the Columbia, the Grand, the Orpheum, in course of construction; the Kings, the Park and the Shenandoah. Two of these houses, the Kings and the Shenandoah, maintain all picture bills; the Park splits fifty-fifty with vaudeville. The Players is now running dramatic stock productions, and it is not stated what sort of program will be used if Cella does secure possession of the house.

What Exhibitors and Exchange Men's Photograph Looked Like.

A great many people who saw the photograph of the Exhibitors and Exchange mens' luncheon at the Mercantile Club recently want to know how it is that the photo looks so much like a close-up of the Universal office staff. We asked Barney Rosenthal and Bob Taylor and Al King, and they all said: "Oh, that's a little way the Universal has of kinda pushing to the front." Hector Pasmezoglu was in the picture, too.

"Somme Battlefield."

Henry Slocum, who is responsible for McClure's "Sins," in this territory, was in a theater the other night where war pictures were being run. One of the scenes showing a piece of ground that was all shot to pieces was labeled "Somme Battlefield." A man behind Henry spelled the title out letter by letter, and said: "They've got that word spelled wrong, but that sure is some battlefield, all right."

"20,000 Leagues" Is Coming Back.

Sid Baker, having been kind enough to give us a pass good for two, and as our little boy, being under twelve, didn't cost anything to take in, "us" and our wife took him to Mr. Sievers' theater at Grand and Lucas avenue, Sunday, so he could see "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea." The house was jammed full of people who seemed to like the show first rate, and Mr. Sievers says he is going to show it again in a couple of months.

Something About E. L. Hammerstein.

E. L. Hammerstein, better known as "Hammer," not because he's a knocker or a hammerhead or anything like that, but because everyone likes short words better than long ones—we do ourself—and Hammer shows greater practicability and adaptability to the enunciation, and coheres, so to speak, with a greater degree of consanguinity to the vocabulary of the Hoi Polloi than the more elongated word Hammerstein—let's see, what were we trying to say? Oh, yes, Hammer, who is going to work out of the Universal exchange with Southern Missouri and Illinois for a territory, says that the rabbits in Stone County, Mo., have heads shaped like a wedge, so they can dodge around between the rocks without butting their brains out.

The first of May, Rosenthal will open with Nazimova in the Selznick production, "War Brides," for a week's run. With an augmented orchestra this picture will be put on in a most elaborate manner, the most elaborate yet used in the state. It has kept the Mid West office in Des Moines busy attempting to secure enough paper on this production, so widely is Rosenthal advertising his opening bill. The picture season will run for from four to six weeks, and the Selznick production, "The Common Law"; "Panthea," "The Price She Paid," "The Argyle Case," "The Eternal Sin" and "The Easiest Way" already has been booked for three and four-day runs.

Blank, of the Mid-West Photoplay Corporation, in particular, and to the Des Moines motion picture trade in general. Blank enterprises, had been more than instrumental in putting Des Moines on the photoplay map.

Tom Burke, of the Westcott Film Company, in Minneapolis, was in Des Moines the past week arranging for the four-day run of his picture, "The Masque of Life," at the Majestic the week of April 1. Mr. Burke has been making a tour over Iowa in the interests of this picture.

Evansville Operators' Local Gives Banquet

F. H. Richardson, Projection Editor of Moving Picture World, and Others Give Talks at New Vendome Hotel Before Local Operators.

By Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Building, Indianapolis, Ind.

EVANSVILLE, IND.—One of the most interesting gatherings which motion picture men of Evansville have attended for some time was the banquet given at the New Vendome hotel last week by members of the Evansville local of the Moving Picture Machine Operators Union. The banquet, attended by about seventy-five exhibitors and operators, was given in honor of F. H. Richardson, editor of the Projection Department of the Moving Picture World.

In addition to honoring Mr. Richardson, who is touring the country, visiting 102 cities and traveling 18,000 miles, it provided an opportunity for the men who manage and own moving picture houses of Evansville to get together collectively with the men who are stationed afternoon and evening in booths from which the pictures are projected. It was evident from the success of the banquet that it will be made an annual affair.

Prior to attending the banquet, at which he gave a highly appreciated talk on "The Projection of Moving Pictures," Mr. Richardson maanged to visit most all of the theaters in the city and inspect and note the manner of projection in each. This enabled him to offer suggestions that will no doubt aid greatly in the showing of the pictures. His talk was as interesting to the laymen present as it was to those directly interested.

S. C. Ruschmeier, chairman of the banquet committee, acted as toastmaster. A. J. Merrill, owner of the Princess theater, talked for the exhibitors, his subject being "Co-operation of Operators and Theater Manager," a subject that proved highly valuable. E. C. Kerth, city inspector, gave an interesting talk on "Public Safety as Applied to the Theater." H. E. Shaw, Evansville manager of the Central Film Company, gave an instructive talk on "Exchange Co-operation," telling how the exhibitor and the operator working with the exchange could profit in various little ways.

L. McCool, president of the operators' union, was unable to attend because of illness and his substitute, Earl Dewitt, had for his subject "The Operators' Organization and Its Work." He told how valuable it is not only for the operators but for the exhibitors and public alike. E. C. Graham, director of vocational education in the Evansville high school, spoke on "Possibilities of Vocational Education for Motion Picture Operators." His talk was considered very valuable, for it opened a new thought to many and told the visitors and unitiated of possibilities in their work.

Among the guests at the gathering were friends of the theater men and operators, representatives of the newspapers and quite a number of exhibitors and operators from neighboring cities and towns. George Bleich, an exhibitor of Owensboro, Ky., gave a short talk at the conclusion of the banquet.

J. S. Spiker Improving the Royal Theater

Vincennes, Ind.—J. S. Spiker, owner of the old Royal theater at the corner of Sixth and Main streets, has a force of workmen converting the theater into an up-to-date, modern photoplay house. The building is to be lowered to a level with the sidewalk and will face Main street squarely instead of diagonally as it did in the past. A new front will be built and the entire exterior will be finished in stucco. Mr. Spiker said the new house has not been leased but intimated that he probably will grant the lease some time next week. The work on the building will be completed about May 1.

Greensburg to Taste Blue Laws.

Greensburg, Ind.—That the people of Greensburg are to get another taste of the old "blue laws" is evident from a declaration issued last week by Mayor Mendanhall in which he instructed the police to enforce the Sunday closing laws. The order includes cigar stores, candy kitchens, etc., as well as motion picture theaters.

James Alcorn, owner of the South Side and Lyric theaters, said that although he had not definitely decided just what action he would take in the matter he feels that he has as good a right to keep open on Sunday as the garage man and the restaurant keeper. He says that if the blue laws are to be screwed down on him he will insist that all other forms of business be made to comply with the same law.

Menlo Moore Promises a New Theater.

Bedford, Ind.—Menlo Moore, the Chicago theatrical man, owner of the Crystal theater in this city, was here last week looking over a suitable site on which to erect a new theater. Mr. Moore says he intends to give Bedford one of the finest motion picture houses in the southern part of the state and that work on the new building will be started as soon as he can perfect his plans.

Parent-Teacher Shows Failures?

So-Called Voluntary Co-Operation Between "Better Film" Advocates and Exhibitors Seems a Bit Too Official—Shows Are Not Attended as Well as Might Be—Plan Liked By Some Exhibitors.

By Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Building, Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY MO.—"Voluntary co-operation" with a strong official smack to it, between exhibitors and Parent-Teachers associations, is not going very well in Kansas City. Apparently it too strongly resembles official censorship—and the people are staying away from the shows.

The "clean pictures list" idea was the proposal of the Collegiate Alumnae, and this organization and the Parent-Teachers associations worked out a plan of "co-operation." The ladies were to select a list of pictures, which the exhibitors were to run on "clean pictures" nights. Friday night of each week was selected as being the best for the children. The parents were going to support the shows with their presence, to demonstrate that they were in earnest in the effort to encourage "better pictures."

Some nine exhibitors are now running the pictures recommended by the central examining board, or the censoring committee; and the Parent-Teachers association is paying for a display advertisement announcing the names and locations of these theaters. The exhibitors are doing their part by running the suggested films—but the other factor is lacking; in very few cases have the theaters had as large audiences as under the old plan of selection by the exhibitor.

It is interesting to note, too, that most of the theaters participating in the "clean pictures" arrangement do no advertising to speak of. The only display advertising they get is paid for by the Parent-Teachers association.

"The assumption was that the women would see that the shows they recommended had active support," said one exhibitor. "We expected to get the crowds. But the patronage hasn't shown up."

Some of the largest theaters in the city have turned down the Parent-Teachers proposal flat, declaring that they receive no criticisms of their pictures from patrons, that they get satisfactory crowds, and that they want to choose their own programs.

The programs selected by the Parent-Teachers association are perhaps good enough—they are often about what the exhibitor would select anyway. It is not the program that keeps the people away, apparently—it must be the fact that somebody has imposed this program on the patrons. The pictures are nearly all those that have been shown in Kansas City elsewhere. The chief method of selecting the approved list is by suggestions of various pictures by members of the association, or of the central committee. There is always a scenic and always a juvenile or a comedy.

Two or three of the exhibitors say that the arrangement is very satisfactory; these usually have some means of guiding the committee into choosing pictures of a kind or from an exchange that are customarily run at their houses.

Reappointed to Kansas Censor Board.

Kansas City, Mo.—Miss Carrie Simpson, the only member of the old board of censors in Kansas to receive appointment to the new Board of Motion Picture Review, is Kansas-born, and has spent much of her life in that state. She was for some time associated with her brother, Ben Simpson, in theatrical enterprises, and there got her training in the drama, which has stood her in such good stead. She has a natural aptitude for criticism, which is constructive. And from behind the scenes came many reports in the old days of controversies between Miss Simpson and one or two of the other members over the approval or rejection of a picture, Miss Simpson taking a broad view.

Miss Carrie Simpson

There was some surprise in Kansas that Miss Simpson was not made chairman of the new board, though it is recognized that Mrs. Miller, who is president of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, and for many years has been prominent in society and club circles, is well qualified for the higher position. Miss Simpson was on the first censor board of Kansas, appointed two years ago. She is widely known among film men—and she has got on well with them.

Among Kansas City Exchanges.

Kansas City, Mo.—W. E. Brennan, formerly of Chicago, is now representative of the Mutual, Kansas City, Mo.

W. B. Emrich, Bluebird representative at Kansas City, Mo., and well known film man, is seriously ill. His friends, who entertain hopes of his recovery, say, however, that he will have to leave this climate.

The Kansas City Feature Film Company is rejoicing over the announcement of the first Fatty Arbuckle comedy being released April 23 for this field. It is entitled "The Butcher's Boy." In it, Mr. Arbuckle is ably supported by Al St. John and a mysterious leading woman whose name will not be revealed until the picture is shown.

The Kansas City Feature Film Co. is getting ready to move into its new building at 20th and Broadway. The new Paramount home will be finished soon and all departments moved by April 15.

Able Business Men Behind Lochren Film.

Minneapolis, Minn.—William A. Lochren, president, and Edward F. Seavolt, treasurer, whose likenesses are here reproduced, have worked hand in hand for almost a year to bring the Lochren Film Service of Minneapolis up to a standard few independent concerns in the West can equal. A year ago Mr. Lochren's biggest business was with "The Northwest Weekly," a news reel issued here but developed and printed by another concern. Today the Lochren Film Service occupies almost the entire top floor of the Film Exchange building, and is so busy in its own spacious laboratory, putting out commercial films of all sorts and slides, that it has temporarily forgotten "The Weekly." The firm now employs four cameramen and more than a score of laboratory and office assistants and also controls one of the largest theater advertising services in the country. Since January 1, 1917, the Lochren firm has taken over the Western Motion Picture advertising service, the Monogram Slide Co. and the Excel Slide

E. F. Seavolt.

Co. Animated cartoons are being turned out by the score for the firm's own service and otherwise, and the slide departments are giving Chicago and Kansas City firms unexpected opposition. The firm also has a booking department and controls territorial rights on a number of features and short-reel comedies. This is Mr. Lochren's third year in the film business, while Mr. Seavolt has been actively engaged in the industry since its infancy.

New Faces to Meet in Mill City

Exhibitors Coming to the Minneapolis Convention Will Need a Day to Meet the New Exchangemen—World Correspondent Sends a Guide to Who's Who—O. N. Davis at Head of Local Metro, Only Manager Left from Last Year.

By John L. Johnston, 704 Film Exchange Building, Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—And still the exchange managers of this city keep steadily changing. Exhibitors from Northwest towns who have not been in Minneapolis since the 1916 convention will have to devote one entire day to getting acquainted with new exchange managers of the city. Of the releasing exchanges here there is only one manager on the job today that officiated in the same capacity last year at this time. Otto N. Davies of the Metro exchange is the only manager who has not resigned, switched or left the city, and Mr. Davies' assisting force is also intact.

W. H. Lawrence is the newest film manager of the city. Mr. Lawrence last week succeeded Samuel Newton Robinson as manager of the Fox exchange and Mr. Robinson began work on his own state rights exchange. Mr. Lawrence came to Minneapolis several weeks ago from Cincinnati and was formerly employed for a year by the Fox corporation at various points, the Mutual at Chicago and the Eclair company at New York.

Minneapolis exchange managers "on the job" last April and still in the city but at different exchanges are: W. H. Stafford, formerly Mutual manager, now with Selznick exchange; Ralph Bradford, formerly Triangle manager, now managing Universal; E. A. Westcott, formerly Fox manager, now managing Westcott Film Corp., and Fred S. Meyer, former Universal manager, now special representative for General exchanges; C. W. At the Twin City Releasing Exchanges.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Manager Schwartzbine of the Pathe exchange was forced to wire New York headquarters for extra "Patria" prints on Saturday, March 31, in order to supply the big demand for their International serial.

St. Paul, Minn.—C. J. Rose, Twin City salesman for the Pathe exchange, staged a special showing of several episodes from "The Mystery of the Double Cross" at The Pantages theater, Minneapolis, Monday morning, April 2, for the benefit of Minneapolis exhibitors. Mr. Rose booked the serial in The New Palace, St. Paul, for first-run, to begin the latter part of April or the first of May.

Film Men Get Army Commissions.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Arthur Benack, formerly connected with the Mutual exchange here, has been appointed captain of Company A, First Minnesota Volunteers, by Colonel Schall. Mr. Benack was instrumental in getting the organization started and resigned his position at the Mutual to help enlist men for the regiment. Six members of the Lochren Film exchange are officers in the regiment.

State Rights Exchange Notes.

Minneapolis, Minn.—President Benjamin Friedman of the Friedman Enterprises, Inc., is walking about these days on his toes. Mr. Friedman has no intention of imitating Nijinsky or Mordkin, but when he comes home from work these spring evenings he must walk lightly; he might wake the baby. Little Miss Friedman smiled upon this world for the first time last week and Daddy and Mamma Friedman have been smiling ever since. Miss Friedman weighs 8½ pounds in her stocking feet and has already displayed rare ability as an emotional star.

J. L. Morrisey, a member of the board of directors of the Zenith Feature Film exchange here, spent several days last week with Manager P. H. Carey planning future activities for the exchange. The Zenith has secured rights on "The Conquest of Canaan" and has begun booking the same throughout its territory.

C. L. Hiller, of the Dick & Hiller exchange, has returned from a ten weeks' tour through Wisconsin and Minnesota with "It May Be Your Daughter." Mr. Hiller will confine his future work to headquarters and Minnesota towns, while Frank McCarthy will manage the Wisconsin "Daughter" company.

James V. Bryson has secured "Doc" Gardner, formerly with Elliott & Sherman, to manage his Wisconsin show of "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea." Mr. Bryson booked The Strand, St. Paul, for a week's extension of its run of the feature. Dan Wright is in charge of Mr. Bryson's Minnesota show, and Walter Murphy is looking after the Dakota company.

"HEROIC FRANCE"

OUR ALLIES IN ACTION

What the Critics say:

James S. McQuade in the Moving Picture World:

"I have pronounced these pictures remarkable, because I found them so. For nearly three hours I sat watching the screen, lost to my surroundings and actually living amid the scenes."

Rob Reel in the Chicago American:

"The most comprehensive war pictures yet shown in Chicago are at the Strand, under the heading 'Heroic France—Our Allies in Action.'"

Mae Tinee in the Chicago Tribune:

"The photography in these pictures is excellent, and, on the whole, one obtains a comprehensive idea of what is going on in France."

W. K. Hollander in the Chicago Daily News:

"Merl LaVoy, an intrepid American photographer, returned recently from the torn battlefields of France with many thousand feet of pictorial evidence of how the French make war and the methods and contrivances they adopt to defeat the enemy. Every phase of warfare came within the scope of the camera."

Photographed at the French front under the auspices of the American Relief Clearing House of Paris by

After a successful two-weeks' engagement at the Strand Theatre, Chicago, these pictures have been booked for an indefinite run and are now being shown to capacity business at the Band Box Theatre, at 25 cents admission.

The following is taken from an editorial in the Chicago Evening Post of March 29th, headed "A Message to Americans":

"From the Somme and Verdun fronts these moving photographs bring to the eyes of Americans the wonder work achieved by France and Great Britain in equipping themselves to meet the Kaiser's army. The retreat of Hindenberg's lines is the direct result of the scenes depicted on the screen."

THE LONE POINT FEUD (An episode of "A Daughter of Daring").—The cast: Helen (Helen Gibson); Squire Briggs (G. A. Williams); Grace, His Daughter (Gladys Blue); Benton (L. T. Whitlock).

Benton, the new superintendent of the railroad that employs Helen as operator at Lone Point, will not designate Lone Point as a regular stop for the Limited. Squire Briggs, in retaliation, gets a village ordinance passed requiring all trains to slow down to four miles per hour within the corporate limits. Patton, an engineer, is fined for disregarding the ordinance and the war is on. Benton's next move is an order closing Lone Point as an agency and curtailing the passenger service to one train—and that in the dead of night.

But Benton and Grace, the Squire's daughter, have planned an elopement. Helen assists the lovers to board the Limited that stops on orders to pick them up. Squire Briggs gets the news and shows up at the station with the sheriff. Engineer Patton is about to take his freight train out of the siding when he finds himself looking into the muzzle of the sheriff's revolver. Under compulsion he takes the Squire and Sheriff aboard and starts out to overtake the elopers. They pull out just as Helen gets word that a broken rail is sending the Limited back to Lone Point.

Helen goes in pursuit on her motorcycle and, by a daring leap from an overhead bridge, gives the warning just in time to avert a collision. Benton and the Squire, thankful for their lucky escape, bury the hatchet forever.

THE VULTURE OF SKULL MOUNTAIN (An episode of "The American Girl"—Two parts).—The cast: Madge King (Marin Sais); Roger King, her father (Frank Jonasson); Larry Kerwin (Edward Hearn); "The Vulture" (Ronald Bradbury); Hunchback Charley (Edward Clisbee); Wm. Darcey, a wealthy cattleman (Hart Hoxie).

Madge and Larry ride out to warn King, but her father's superintendent, when the two are startled by the sudden appearance in the corral of a foam-bedecked horse bearing the prostrate form of a man. The unconscious man gains his senses long enough to whisper "Skull mountain—daughter—hold-up——" then again lapses into unconsciousness.

In an outpost town Roger King negotiates a sale of colts and receives payment in a public barroom. Hunchback Charlie has seen the money and made a hasty exit. King calls his daughter on the telephone and says he is returning by a short cut across Skull mountain. He laughs at her suggestion of the unknown dangers on the mountain trail.

Madge and Larry ride out to warn Ping, but before they reach him he is held up by two bandits and carried into a depression in the hills with but a single defile leading out of it. King's wallet is not found on him and he is tied up under a five-ton boulder balanced on a plank over his head. His slightest move will pull it down.

Larry waits for Madge to return from an investigation of a rude shack they have spied in the valley. Becoming alarmed he starts across and encounters Hunchback Charlie. They fight. Larry's superior strength wins. A cry from King brings Larry to his side. Grabbing his employer up in his arms, he leaps quickly to one side. The boulder, crashing down, crushes out the life of Hunchback Charlie, who has been crawling toward them.

Meantime the "Vulture" surprises Madge. Thinking her insensible, he leaves her lying on the floor while he harnesses his saddle horse to a rig for a getaway with the girl he has been holding prisoner a day.

Madge regains her breath and starts an investigation of her own. A cry for help arouses her to renewed efforts to locate the "vulture's" secret torture chamber. By accidentally stepping on one of the andirons in the crude fireplace, Madge discovers that it has acted as a lever and opened an iron door up the chimney. A few seconds later she is consoling Darcey's hysterical daughter. The "vulture" returns, takes the girl and locks Madge in the secret room.

King and Larry enter the house and Madge is able to make them hear her instructions for opening the trap door. Then the three of them ride to overtake the "vulture." Riding up close behind the rig as it takes a corner on two wheels, Madge brings down her man and her father and Larry ride on and stop the rig bearing the helpless girl. There is a glad reunion that evening at the King ranch when the adventurers return. King's wallet is found in the side pocket of his saddle, and there is further cause for rejoicing.

LOVE AND BLAZES (Two parts—April 18).—The Cast: Fire Chief (Phil Dunham); Chief of Police (Charles Inslee); Mayor's Daughter (Lucille Hutton); his Stenographer (Merta Sterling).

The Fire Chief and the Chief of Police are rivals for the fair Lucille, daughter of the Mayor. They are preparing to deliver a knockout blow to her, at the annual exhibition of the Fire and Police Departments. Phil is conducting a drill at the fire station, in which his four men exhibit their preparedness.

At the police station the Chief is preparing his men. His men are troubled with insomnia, but the Chief explodes a bomb under their bench, which cures them eventually. The Mayor's fair daughter is the envy of Merta, his stenographer, who is a real "man-eater" by disposition. She sees Phil and at once succumbs to his manly charms.

The Chief of Police is holding a burglar drill, with the false front of a house, which he is sure will win the commendation of Lucille, while Phil has prepared a demonstration in response to a fire alarm which is sure to take the prize. At last the day comes, and the police and firemen parade. The Mayor makes a speech, and the police are called upon to drill first. They are applauded, and Phil is jealous. The Chief is directing them with blasts on his whistle. Phil blows his own, and upsets the whole drill. Even the cherished burglar drill is put on the blink.

Then comes Phil's turn. Unfortunately, he sets the fireworks going prematurely, and the fake fire turns into a real one. Phil saves the Mayor's daughter and drives off in a wagon with her. The Police Chief follows in a flivver. The horse balks and the Chief gets the girl. Phil then takes the horse's place, and, the flivver balking too, the Chief hitches the horse to the car, while Phil draws Lucille in the wagon. Up and down a steep hill they go, until they reach home. The Chief goes in with the girl, and Phil calls the police and tells them there is a dangerous criminal with Lucille. They throw a bag over his head and arrest him. Then he is recognized, and, returning, sets the house on fire in spite. Phil rushes for his trusty fire laddies. He saves Lucille while the house goes up in smoke.

PERILS OF THE SECRET SERVICE (Episode No. 7—"The International Spy"—Two Parts—April 20).—The cast: Yorke Norroy (Kingsley Benedict); Carson Huntley (Jay Belasco); Guy Sterner (M. K. Wilson); Beth Bohun (Violet Schramm); Senator Bohun (Seymour Hastings); The International Spy (Harry Mann); Gloria Steinmetz (Muriel Parker). Written and produced by George Bronson Howard.

Guy Sterner, a weakling, takes no risks himself, but selling the secrets of his country to get a little money, proposes to Beth Bohun, debutante daughter of the Senator, a man of high reputation, and is accepted. The Senator finds a Government appointment for his unwelcome son-in-law. Sterner uses his position to obtain information, which he then carries to Carl Ehricke, the international spy. Sterner needs the money to supply the needs of Gloria Steinmetz, a tool of Ehricke's, with whom he has long been in love.

The department discovers the leak of information, and the authorities send for Yorke Norroy to unravel the mystery. Norroy consults with Huntley, who informs him that Sterner is paying attention to Gloria, and that he certainly cannot afford to do so on his income. Norroy sends Huntley to Mrs. Sterner, who tells him that her husband has no resources but his salary. Norroy then directs the attention of the department chiefs to Sterner, but they demand more evidence before accusing the Senator's son-in-law. Norroy lays plans to trap him. He invites Sterner to dine with him at his club, but the man says that he has to go to Baltimore. He admires a curious ring which Norroy is wearing.

Norroy follows Sterner to Baltimore and sees him enter a certain house. He tells Huntley to go there and rent a room exactly opposite. They watch through the window shades, and see Ehricke, whom Norroy recognizes. The next day the rough notes of a treaty with South America are missing. Norroy goes to Ehricke's, and crawls upstairs, revolver in hand. Ehricke hears him, and, coming out on the landing, attacks him. They fight, and the spy is overpowered. Norroy quickly takes from the man's face the false beard and mustache he is wearing and transfers them to his own. He then lowers the lights and waits for Sterner. When the man appears, Norroy pretends to have a sore throat, to disguise his voice.

Sterner recognizes the ring, which Yorke has forgotten to remove. He pulls a gun and holds it to Norroy's head. Norroy, who has arranged the light so that it will go out at a blow on the table, strikes the table and grabs Sterner while it is dark. They fight, and Sterner fires. He hits the body of Ehricke. Norroy removes the false beard from his face and calls the police. They arrest Sterner for the murder of Ehricke, but he shoots himself. Later Norroy tells the broken-hearted wife that Sterner died in the prosecution of a dangerous mission for the government.

The inventor's son accidentally sets fire to the diagram with his cigarette. The ashes of the burned paper reveal the coveted secret.

GOLD SEAL.

FOR LACK OF EVIDENCE (Three Parts—April 17).—The cast: The Girl (Tina Marshall); The Reporter (George Mario); The "Big Fellow" (Ted Burton); The Woman (Adella Barker). Scenario by John C. Brownell. Produced by Edwin Stevens.

Martha Young, on trial for white slavery, is freed for "lack of evidence." Sitting in the court room is a girl who seems more than ordinarily interested in the trial.

A few days later the girl comes across Martha, apparently very ill. The girl offers to take her home. Martha accepts.

Philip Harding, a reporter, recognizes Martha. Only a day or two before he has seen her at the home of Peter Drayton, the "Big Fellow." Harding warns the girl, but is told to mind his own business. He hails a taxi and follows. He is astounded at reaching the home of Martha to see the girl bid her goodbye and leave. He discovers that the girl lives directly across the hall from him.

On the night following, he sees the landlady tidying up the room for the next occupant. He learns that the girl has left in order to "be with friends." He loses no time in getting to Martha's home. He sees Drayton and tracks him to Martha's door. He climbs the fire-escape and enters through the kitchen window. He listens at the sitting-room door and overhears Drayton say: "We must get her away from here." At that moment some one opens the hall door and he dives into a bedroom. Peeping out, he sees the girl go into the room where Drayton and Martha are talking, and again listens. He hears the girl accept Drayton's invitation to visit his country house in New Jersey, when again the hall door is opened and his escape is cut off. He rushes back into the bedroom and enters the closet, when the girl opens the bedroom door.

The closet is stuffy, and Harding is unsuccessful in stifling a sneeze. The girl hears it; she is amazed at seeing him and orders him out. Once more he begs her to believe him, but she again orders him to go.

Martha, Sadie and the girl leave for the country on the following morning, and that night Harding, locating the house in Eastwood, looks in through the window and sees the three in the big living room. He manages to climb the back porch and enters the house from a second-story window. He is hardly inside, however, when he is seized, bound and gagged by two men. The girl in the meantime has gone to her room on the first floor. Sadie and Martha hear the scuffle upstairs, and Sadie goes up to investigate. Peeping through the keyhole, she sees the two men sitting at the window, both wearing the badges of the secret service.

Descending swiftly to the hall, she meets Drayton, who has arrived with two henchmen, and gives the alarm. The two henchmen run swiftly up the stairs, burst in with guns drawn. The two secret service men, taken by surprise, surrender. Drayton then goes to the girl's bedroom door, forces an entrance, and locks himself and the girl in the room. Upstairs, when the lights go on, Harding is discovered and one of Drayton's men removes his gag. He tells them he is with the "big fellow" and commands them to get the keys from the officers and remove the handcuffs from his wrists. He is obeyed. He then commands them to tie the officers up while he keeps them covered. He is handed the guns and the henchmen start to bind the secret service men when Harding swings on them and covers them. Ordering the secret service men to take care of the now bewildered crooks, Harding goes to the rescue of the girl, who is battling with Drayton. A few seconds later Drayton and his "gang" are linked together and Harding learns that the girl is the famous Mary Lane of the Secret Service, who has been trying to trap Drayton and Martha for months.

visited by Buck Mahoney, a gang leader, a friend of Charley Sing's, who has come to get Hogan to have the Chinaman released, for he knows he is innocent. Hogan forces the Governor to pardon Charley Sing.

Samuel Savinsky, the keeper of a pawnshop, is thought much of by his wife and family, who never suspect his affair with Neva Sacon. He gives her money and jewels, and becomes jealous of Harvey Wilson, a reporter. Paul Rasnov, a sculptor and a dope fiend, pawns valuable trinkets at Savinsky's store to buy opium at the store of Ah Wong, the leader of the Three Brothers Tong. Tea Rose, Ah Wong's wife, consents to run away with Paul.

Buck meets Harvey and says he will show him secrets of Chinatown if Harvey will expose the Boss in his paper. Buck guides Harvey into the building of the Hop Sing Tong. Harvey is enthusiastic over a silver flower, and Buck, seeing no one is looking, tells him to keep it. That evening Harvey gives Neva Sacon, the cafe dancer, the poppy—the Flower of Doom.

The next day Harvey and Neva go to Chinatown and stop at Ah Wong's store to eat. The proprietor sees Neva and makes plans to kidnap her. While Harvey is in another room, a panel opens behind her and she is pulled through the opening. When the reporter returns a servant tells him that the lady has just left. He hurries to tell Buck about the strange disappearance.

The Chinamen leave Neva in a small room. Left alone with a Chinaman at one time, the girl offers him a curious ring which Savinsky has given her, if he will deliver a message to Harvey at the newspaper office. The Chinaman is informed that the reporter is not in, and, thus satisfied, the Chink goes to Savinsky's pawnshop to get rid of the ring. The pawnbroker recognizes the ring and forces the Chinaman to tell how he got it. With a policeman Savinsky starts for Ah Wong's, but when the officer threatens to break down a door, Savinsky is frightened, and hurriedly leaves the place.

Buck appeals to Charley Sing to find Neva, and following Charley's suggestion, Tea Rose is kidnapped while a letter written in Chinese is sent to Ah Wong telling him of Tea Rose and offering her in exchange for Neva. Ah Wong consents, and that evening Neva is restored to her people and Tea Rose to her husband.

Savinsky, seeing Neva again in the company of Harvey, realizes he has lost and goes to her to demand the jewels he has given her. Harvey returns with Neva, and when Savinsky begins to quarrel about his rights, the reporter throws him out. Harvey proposes to Neva who accepts his offer.

Warned by a spying Chink that Tea Rose and Rasnov are going to run away that evening, Ah Wong plans to spoil their party. He hides in the place where the girl is expecting to meet Rasnov, and springing on her drags her into a room and strangles her. Rasnov waits for Tea Rose, and Ah Wong rushes in at him. They fight, and the Chinaman lifts Rasnov up to hurl him against the wall when his foot slips and his skull is crushed against the stone steps of the grating. Having lost Tea Rose, Rasnov consoles himself with opium.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURES.

A CORRECTION.

A synopsis of the fifteenth episode of "The Purple Mask" was published on page 154 of the April 7th issue under the title of "The Rescue." This is not the correct title, it should have been "The Floating Signal." Exhibitors will please note this in using this story.

THE PURPLE MASK (Episode 16, "The Prisoner of Love"—Two Parts—April 15).—The cast: Patria Montez (Grace Cunard); Detective Kelly (Francis Ford); His Assistants (Pete Gerald, Jerry Ash); Pat's Aunt (Jean Hathaway). Written and produced by Grace Cunard and Francis Ford.

When the excitement subsided the officials placed Pat in an ambulance from a hospital. Some of the anarchists remained to complete a further purpose they had hurriedly planned. The Chief of the Secret Service, still insensible, was placed in the ambulance along with Pat.

Upon arriving at a spot favorable for the anarchists' purpose, the ambulance was waylaid and Pat was kidnapped and carried to a hut on the end of a lonely pier.

Meanwhile, Phil Kelly, back from Washington with word that Pat was to be released, was told of her adventure at the Frenchman's hut. When he hastened to the hospital he found the ambulance had not returned. He believed the anarchists would go to the waterfront, and followed there.

Pat discovered a life-preserver in the room under the dock. On this she wrote a message for help. Then she dropped the life-preserver through a trap door in the floor.

Kelly discovered the life-preserver, and hurried to Pat's relief. He found a ladder that led from the water up to the trap door in the planking above. When he left his skiff he forgot to tie it, and the boat drifted away. Pat's captors had tied her in a canvas bag. It was their purpose, she had heard them say, to row her to a freight boat anchored some distance down the bay, and then take her out to sea.

Kelly prepared a surprise by having Pat bind him in the canvas bag. Then Pat climbed down the ladder and plunged into the sea. While she swam along near the docks she was rescued by the crew of a tug. The boatmen decided to watch. They discovered four men rowing out from under the pier. The anarchists rowed Kelly to the freight boat and, once on board, he pulled the strings loose, as Pat had tied them for his convenience.

Kelly put up a stiff fight, but would soon have been overpowered if he had not climbed the shrouds and jumped into the sea. The tugboat captain pulled "The Sphinx" out of the water and hurried ashore with his two passengers. Kelly told Pat that she must abandon her practices and her adventures or the Government would imprison her. To this she consented.

And in the years that followed Pat became confidential adviser in the detective agency of "The Sphinx," and as Mrs. Phil Kelly she was in full partnership.

VICTOR.

IT HAPPENED IN ROOM SEVEN (April 17).—The cast: Phil Foster (Al McKinnon); Violet (Violet Lind); Attorney (Eugene Walsh). Written and produced by Capt. Peacocke.

He travels in Europe and has a gay time, while Violet is eking out a meager existence in one of the large cities. Phil hires a lawyer when he returns and the attorney gives him his wife's address on a card.

Later he meets the maid and she gives him an address similar to Violet's. Phil leaves the card on the table. The next day he goes to Violet's address by mistake. He goes to sleep while waiting. She sees a fat bill book protruding from his pocket and takes it, leaving him a receipt for the alimony.

TIT FOR TAT (April 20).—The cast: The Girl (Ethel Grandin); The Boy (Hobart Henley); The Mother (Mrs. Robinson); The Doctor (Charles Eldridge).

Ethel is a spoiled, high-spirited society girl with a fiery temper. She is wooed and wed by Horace Gray, a wealthy young fellow. After marriage she leads him a merry dance, and he finds it impossible to curb her temper. He tries by kindly methods without avail. At last he consults a specialist, who advises him to treat his young wife with the same tactics that she has been pursuing. He does so. Ethel is alarmed, and in her turn consults the specialist regarding Horace. The specialist tells her that Horace must never be thwarted in any way. Ethel becomes a devoted wife, lending every effort to satisfy the whims of her stricken husband. Horace, under this care, gets rid of his ailment.

THE TOPSY TURVY TWINS (Two Parts—April 19).—The cast: Alberforce Jones and William Jones (Carter De Haven); Aunt No. 1 (Margaret Whistler); Aunt No. 2 (Jane Bernoudy); Grandma (Mrs. Emmons); Mattie (Vola Smith); Marianne De Voe (Lucille Young). Scenario by Bess Meredyth. Produced by Richard Stanton.

William Jones, raised by his Uncle Frank in the city, was a rounder, while his twin brother, Alberforce, raised in the country by his grandmother and two aunts, was just the opposite. Grandma had picked out Mattie, the little daughter of a neighbor, for Alberforce's wife, so that she could have him always under her eye. But Alberforce had longings for the Great White Way. When a letter arrived from Frank, saying that legal business required his signature, Alberforce was delighted. The three women decided to let him go. He arrived in the city and was met by his uncle.

Their father's will decreed that if either of the boys gambled, drank, played wtih chorus girls, or compromised himself in any shady affair, his share of the money was to go to charity. The lawyer had already satisfied himself as to Alberforce, but he insisted upon seeing William for himself. It was the birthday of the twins, and William, in spite of the coming visit of the lawyer, was determined to have the party he had planned. They were all assembled and making a great noise when Uncle Frank arrived with Alberforce. The two brothers met, and William lent the other a dress suit and told him to comb back his neatly parted hair in city style. Then, when Alberforce appeared in the dining room, they all took him for his brother. This was fortunate, as the lawyer had arrived and was at that moment with Uncle Frank, who had done all he could to make the party keep quiet. The lawyer insisted upon seeing William, and Frank brought in Alberforce by mistake. Of course he answered all the lawyer's searching questions about chorus girls and cocktails in the negative, and the lawyer was satisfied.

Marianne De Voe, an actress who thought herself engaged to William, now appeared, and also mistook Alberforce for his brother. She declared that if he refused to marry her she would sue him. In the meantime, Grandma and the aunts repented of their rashness in letting Alberforce to go the city alone, and followed him. They arrived and met William, who was much taken with Mattie. His party was sent home, and he sat on the sofa with the four country women. Uncle Frank entered and found them. William begged Grandma to take him back to the country, and as Alberforce was only too delighted to stay with Uncle Frank, the arrangement was made. William rejuvenates the three women, and we see them, at the end, on their way to a card party.

BISON.

THE TELLTALE CLUE (Two Parts—April 21).—The cast: Richard Foster (Jack Nelson); Molly (Molly Malone); Godfrey Livingston (Burton Law); Mrs. Livingston (Helen Galvin). Scenario by Calder Johnstone. Produced by Geo. Cochrane.

Molly lives with her grandfather, and rules him, as well as the lumbermen of the camp, with an iron hand. She roams the woods, gathering herbs, and grateful are the lumbermen, for she makes the herbs into lotions to heal all their ailments. Richard Foster comes to the mountains for a rest. He makes Molly's acquaintance, and soon they are inseparable companions.

Godfrey Livingston and his wife come for a visit to the mountains and discover that they know Richard slightly, and so renew the acquaintance. The wife, a vampire type, lays siege to Richard's heart, and this causes her husband to become jealous. Molly sees the two together, and thinks that he loves the pretty woman.

But Richard is missing Molly's companionship and will not succumb to the wiles of Mrs. Livingston, until she, desperate, purposely slips into the water and when he has his arms about her kisses him. The husband happens to see this, and shoots Richard. The two think he is dead, and, at her suggestion, return to their camp and prepare to leave. Molly comes upon the still form of Richard. She runs to the camp for aid, and some of the men go back and fetch Richard to her cabin, where she cares for him.

Near Richard's body Molly finds the heelplate of a man's boot. Richard raves continuously about the Livingtsons, so she goes to their camp and finds that the plate belongs to Livingston's boot. She tells her grandfather and the lumbermen, and they overtake the Livingstons on their way to the train. The men start to string him up, when Richard, regaining consciousness, stops them, telling the men that it was an accident. So the Livingstons are allowed to continue on their way, and Molly finds happiness with her lover.

THE PACE THAT KILLS (April 19).—The cast: Husband (Malcolm Blevins); Other Man (Jay Belasco); The Woman (Claire McDowell). Written and produced by Raymond B. Wells.

Out in No Man's Land there came a husband and his wife, and the other man. The inevitable happened. While the husband is absent from the camp to obtain provisions, the other man is making love to his wife. She encourages him and submits, weakling that she is. So absorbed are they in each other that they do not notice the return of the hunsband until after he makes his presence known.

Then the two men silently, taking their guns and a shovel, leave the camp. In a sequestered spot they pace off a few feet, and then shoot. The other man is killed, and the husband buries him. Then he returns to the woman for whom he had killed one of God's creatures.

HER GREAT MISTAKE (Two Parts—April 22).—Mary Dirke, daughter of John Dirke, a South African hunter, has a love for wild animals. Paul, who is in love with Mary, asks for her hand. Mary consents, and Paul hastens away to inform his parents.

Paul is startled by the appearance of strangers who have come into the country for the purpose of capturing and killing wild animals. John Dirke extends his welcome to Mr. Sellsman, the leader of the party, and puts them up at his home. Sellsman meets Mary, and soon learns of the private menagerie she maintains. He becomes interested and requests to be shown the effects of her training.

Paul is jealous of Sellsman. One of Mary's leopards escapes, and the party start out to recapture it. The leopard is seen running into a hollow tree. Paul attempts to shoot it, but Mary's father interferes. Nets are set about the hole in different directions to await the return. Mary is dashing from the party when her head stubs the limb of a tree and she is thrown to the ground unconscious. Dirke and the hunters, unable to find the leopard, return to the net to discover that a lion has been there and escaped. This worries Paul, who believes the beast has attacked Mary.

For a time the English sportsman is accused by Mary's father of having deserted her when she was in danger from the jaguars and tigers, who pursued her into a deserted cabin, but later Mary relieves him from this charge of cowardice.

GAUMONT.

TOURS AROUND THE WORLD, No. 24 (April 17).—The timely interest which the editorial staff of the Gaumont Company imparts to all its single-reels is well borne out by pictures of the Mountains of the Caucasus with its primitive people, the vast hinterland of southern Russia in Europe, shown in this issue, "Tours Around the World." The mountains extend from the Black to the Caspian sea. Particular attention is paid to Mount Elbruz, a mountain 18,526 feet high. Here is the source of the River Laba which flows into the Black sea. The life of the natives with its primitive industries forms a series of interesting pictures, carding, spinning and weaving wool and harvesting grain.

Copenhagen, the capital of Denmark, forms an interesting section. There are typical views of the water front, parks, streets and markets. Among the buildings of architectural or historical importance are the Thorwaldsen Museum, containing the works of the great sculptor, St. Nicholas Church, the Royal Palace, the Royal theater, and the four uniform palaces about Amalienborg Place.

Salzburg, an ancient town of western Austria, concludes this travel reel. The composer, Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, was born here in 1756, and a statue to his memory is shown in the pictures. The town is well defended by mountains, and this probably is responsible for its location here. In St. Peter's Cemetery, tombs are shown which were carved in the rock in the year 430. A citadel built in the ninth century crowns the Monchsberg.

REEL LIFE No. 51 (April 19).—The curiosity of mankind to know how a thing is made is satisned in several instances for those who see Gaumont's "Reel Life" No. 51. This release opens with a visit to a factory where wooden legs are made for soldiers. Every process is seen from the arrival of the willow logs until the proud possessor of the artificial limb walks out of the picture upon his new leg.

Millions of people have doubtless wondered how iron pipe is made. A cursory and instructive view of the industry is given upon this reel. The wonderful machinery that handles the hot iron billets and rolls them into proper shape are seen at work. The picture is highly spectacular because so much molten metal is handled.

A valuable bit of information is imparted through pictures describing a vest pocket sterlizer. By the use of a contrivance attached to a pocket flashlight, a current can be sent turough a cup of water in such a way that all the germs in the liquid are destroyed.

Jack Frost does not daunt northern fishermen who supply market demands. They fish through the ice. Pictures of the method employed form an interesting section of this reel. The long hoop nets are let down through holes in the ice.

From Key West come two unusual pictures: A traveling dairy is one of the city's sights, a cow milked at the door of the customer; the other picture is of an aged woman who enjoys smoking cigars. The reel is completed by a picture of a mock bullfight by boys of Guatemala City.

ENVIRONMENT (American—Five Parts—April 16).—The cast: Liz (Mary Miles Minter); Henry Pennfield (George Fisher); John Simpkins (Harvey Clark); David Holcombe (George Periolat); Mrs. Holcombe (Emma Klug); Mildred Holcombe (Margaret Shelby); Arthur Holcombe (Arthur Howard); Arnold Brice (Al Vosburgh); Mrs. Bloom (Lucille Ward); Reuben (Jack Vosburgh). Written and directed by James Kirkwood.

Seventeen-year old Elizabeth Simpkins, known as Liz, is the daughter of Bill Simpkins, the "Town Drunk." Liz by saving has managed to go through the village high school, from which she has just graduated. Standing in the vestibule of the church talking to the new minister, Mr. Pennfield, who is attracted to her, she sees the staggering figure of her father fall opposite the church steps. Liz, though distressed, pushes her way through the crowd to his side. Arthur Holcombe, son of the "rich man" of the town, and brother to Mildred, a scornful young beauty, hurries to help Liz assist her father.

Arnold Brice, a young artist selling fake old masters, arrives. Mildred becomes attached to him. He establishes his studio at the hotel. Pennfield, unable to forget the little scene enacted before him, calls at the Simpkins house. He finds Liz washing clothes. Liz, ashamed to tell the minister her father is inside drunk and playing cards with several of his friends, tells him no one is home, when a drunken guffaw is heard. He goes in and Liz disappears. Mildred becomes more and more attached to Arnold Brice in spite of the protestations of her father and brother. Pennfield is more than ever impressed with Liz Simpkins, who in turn falls in love with him.

One day Liz, happening to hear that Mildred has been seen going into Arnold's studio and realizing that there will be trouble if Arthur finds her there, hurries to tell Mildred, who leaves by the back door. Liz, however, is locked in by Arnold, who is intoxicated. Arthur Holcombe arrives at this time. Liz runs and hides in the bedroom, where she is discovered. Liz is unable to explain her presence there, as she will not divulge Mildred's secret. Mr. Holcombe is shocked and declares he will call a meeting of the deacons to discuss Liz's delinquency and decide what is to be done with her.

Simpkins' periods of intoxication become more frequent, and he is finally locked up in jail, but through the influences of the minister is transferred to the hospital for treatment, where he dies. At the meeting of the deacons at the minister's home it is decided to send Liz to an institution. After the funeral Mildred calls to see Liz and begs her not to tell the truth about her visit to Arnold's studio, and although Liz pleads with her to clear her name so she will not have to go to an institution, she refuses. The minister, however, overhears all and also hears Liz confess she loves him. It is Sunday and Pennfield goes direct to church where from the pulpit after the sermon he resigns his pastorship and anounces he is to marry Miss Elizabeth Simpkins, much to the consternation of the parishioners. He also tells Brice, Holcombe and Mildred that he knows the truth about Mildred's visit to the artist's studio. Arnold leaves town about this time. The minister goes to Liz's home, where he finds her in tears, which are soon turned into joy when she learns that Pennfield loves her.

MUTUAL STAR PRODUCTION.

THE SINGLE CODE (Horsley—Five Parts—April 16).—The cast: Lorrie Stuart (Florence Printy); Malcolm Stuart (F. A. Johnston); Doctor Allen (Harrish Ingraham); Margaret Winfield (Nan Christy); Dick Baxter (John Oaker); Olga Kilday (Olive Stokes); Rodman Wray (Ernesto Garcia); Hugh Carrington (Crane Wilbur).

After he leaves college Hugh Carrington falls into the toils of Olga Kilday, an adventuress, but after a month of her his manhood awakens, and he offers to marry her. She tells him she cannot as she is already married. Hugh starts to leave her, but she threatens him with imprisonment if he carries out his plan, declaring that his act of paying her transportation across the state line constituted an offense against the Mann act. Hugh calls upon his attorney, who with Hugh's consent, arranges a money settlement.

Believing this episode in his life now a matter of the past, Hugh starts out anew and becomes editor of the Purist Magazine. He advocates a single code of morals. Lorrie Stuart starts from her country home for school. Dr. Allen, a friend of Malcolm Stuart, an aged scientist and Lorrie's father, loves her and asks her to become his wife. But she does not love him, she explains, and cannot agree.

In the school town Lorrie meets Dick Baxter, whom Margaret Winfield, Lorrie's chum, admires. Dick is infatuated with Lorrie and disregards Margaret altogether. As he promises to marry her, Lorrie trusts Baxter, but he betrays this trust and then leaves town. Lorrie goes to Margaret for aid and comfort but is shunned. Dr. Allen visits Lorrie and learns her secret and then remains to help her until after her child is laid to rest on the hill. After this experience Lorrie goes to live with her aunt, her father having died. There she meets Hugh. She offers to help him in carrying out his preachments. The two become friends and their friendship finally ripens into love and they are married.

Olga reads of the marriage, as does Margaret. Olga demands blackmail and to keep her silent Hugh submits. He then consults his attorney, Rodman Wray, who, instead of serving his client, enters into a pact with Olga to extort more money for her from Hugh while he sets his ground to lure Lorrie away from her husband. Olga and Wray play their hands when Hugh is called away one evening on business. But Hugh misses his train and returns to his home to find his wife struggling in Wray's arms. He denounces Wray, who informs Lorrie that Olga was Hugh's mistress. Hugh turns them out of the house, then sadly turns to Lorrie for forgiveness, which she readily gives.

Margaret comes to visit Lorrie and, ever remembering that it was Lorrie who stole Dick Baxter from her, taunts her of this frightening part of her life. Lorrie leaves the room and Margaret follows. Lorrie berates her guest, an argument follows and Hugh overhears the worst. He demands the truth from Lorrie, who tells her story. But unlike the woman, he could not forgive. In a rage he left his home and Lorrie.

Days passed before the meaning of his action dawned upon Hugh. Guided by Dr. Allen, he returned to Lorrie, again to be forgiven, thus gaining a victory for the single code.

She is the guilty party and secretly liberates Shorty, who finds the camp of the revolutionists, recovers the plans, and arrives back at the American camp in time to warn them of the Filipino uprising. There is a fight in which Shorty kills the leader with the same spear that caused Anita's death.

THE LIVING BOOK OF NATURE (By Raymond L. Ditmars—"The Elephants"—April 2).—The picture shows views of these great beasts as they live and play. The scenes are impressive and contain much humor. The little-known—but great— difference between the African and Indian species is shown. Here are seen the African elephant with its enormous and flappy ears and curiously wrinkled trunk, compared with the small-eared Indian species. Scenes explaining the summer life show the big beasts playing with a hose. Their actions indicate definite thought and point to queer habits. All of them prefer to drink by thrusting the hose into the mouth like the hot-weather custom of the human of drinking through a straw. They are also fond of standing before the "bombardment" of a firehose. Scenes in the autumn show their lively gambols when turned out for exercise during crisp weather. Finally the scenes of a three-ton animal engaged in what appears like a game of football shows that these great creatures play with the same zest as a dog or a kitten.

Jack has little except a large heart, full of love for Maida, who lives across the hall with Ethel, and is wedded to her art studies. Jack, to loosen uncle's purse-strings, has told him that he, Jack, is married and a happy father. Uncle drops in suddenly and Jack prevails upon Maida to impersonate his wife, while a baby is borrowed from a neighbor, Stella. Uncle is completely fooled and decides to spend the night with Jack and his "wife," sleeping on the couch in the front room. As a way out, Jack proposes marrying Maida at once, and she has to consent. Jack brings an unwilling minister up the fire-escape. A witness is needed and Ethel has to come up the fire-escape, but gets in the front room with uncle.

An officer, chasing a burglar, comes in uncle's room, and uncle, to save Ethel, tells the policeman that she is his wife. Meanwhile the burglar is acting as witness for Jack and Maida, and Stella is trying to recover her baby. The policeman leaves, threatening to return for proof of uncle's proper relations with Ethel. The minister, passing uncle's window, is again

THE WEB OF LIFE (Five parts—April).—The story tells of a wayward boy who thought he loved dissipation and evil ways better than a life of decency and clean living. He really did not intend to marry the girl and thought for a time his life was ruined because her childhood sweetheart, still devoted, became her protector, and saw to it that every formality prescribed by society was carefully followed.

But instead of ruining his life, it ultimately made him a real man and brought out the good there was in him.

The girl did not know how to win her husband back to her when his evil associates began to appeal to him again after the marriage and the birth of the child, and the appeal she was forced to make to her former sweetheart and her only friend brought on a terrible misunderstanding and tragedy which cost her friend his life in a noble sacrifice and nearly lost for her all chance of a loving reunion with her husband.

However the purity of her devotion and her trustful innocence were strong enough to endure against suspicion and much abuse, so that at the end we see the repentant husband chastened by the trouble and anguish he has caused and fully determined to devote himself to honorable living and the care and companionship of his reunited family.

WORLD PICTURES.

FORGET-ME-NOT (Peerless—Five Parts—April 16).—The cast: Stefanie Paoli (Kitty Gordon); Gabriel Barrato and Benedetto Barrato (Montagu Love); Marquis de Mohrivart (Alec B. Francis); Sir Horace Welby (George MacQuarrie); Sir Donald Verney (James Furey); Rose Verney (Norma Phillips); Alice Verney (Lillian Herbert); Mrs. Foley (Henrietta Simpson). Directed by Emile Chautard.

Stefanie Paoli, a Corsican mender of nets, is loved by Gabriel Barrato, a fisherman. While Gabriel is away on a fishing cruise, the Marquis de Mohrivart, a French profligate, induces Stefanie to marry him. During the wedding festivities, Gabriel returns, and after a denunciation, hurls himself from the top of a cliff, meeting instant death. Benedetto Barrato, Gabriel's brother, on his annual visit to his mother, learns of Stefanie's perfidy and vows to avenge his brother's death.

In Paris, six years later, the Marquise Stefanie de Mohrivart sends her son to England to be educated. She is now the mistress of the private gambling house which her husband has fitted up in the chateau in order to recoup his dissipated fortune. Sir Horace Welby, an Englishman, is a patron, and an ardent admirer of Stefanie. After heavy loses at the gaming tables, he returns to England, bidding Stefanie an affectionate farewell.

After twenty years of toil and saving, Benedetto Barrato arrives in Paris to seek vengeance for his brother's death. Sir Welby returns to the Mohrivart chateau after an absence of fifteen years, but when Stefanie broaches the subject of their former love, he tells her that he is now engaged to the daughter of a respectable English family. She is incensed at this news.

In England, Charles de Mohrivart, ignorant of his parents' mode of living, never having seen them since childhood, marries Rose Verney, the elder sister of Alice Verney, who is the fiancee of Sir Horace Welby. When Stefanie receives the announcement of her son's marriage, she speaks of paying him a visit after his honeymoon.

In Paris, ignorant of her identity, Benedetto saves Stefanie from a runaway team of horses, and becomes infatuated with her. By chance he visits the gaming tables in the Mohrivart chateau, and is astounded to learn that the stranger whom he saved is the woman upon whom he seeks to wreak his vengeance. Still under the spell of her beauty, he gambles away the savings of twenty years. He attempts Stefanie's life, and when her husband interferes, Benedetto kills him. Attempting to again attack Stefanie, he is arrested and sentenced to life imprisonment.

Sir Horace writes Stefanie, informing her that her son, Charles, is dying, prostrated by the shock of his father's death. She visits the Verney family in England, where she learns that she is an unwelcome guest. After Charles dies, Alice and Rose, his wife, move to Rome, accompanied by their chaperone and Sir Horace Welby.

Here Stefanie comes for an indefinite stay, demanding that they sponsor her in society. When they refuse, she refuses to recognize the legality of her son's marriage, taking advantage of an old law, under which a boy under 25 and a girl under 21 cannot contract marriage without the consent of the parents. Fearful of bearing a child which the world would call illegitimate, Rose reluctantly agrees to do as Stefanie desires.

Several evenings later, a reception is given in Stefanie's honor, at her request. Sir Horace Welby tells her that Benedetto Barratto has been freed, and is looking for her. As she protests that his story is only a ruse to be rid of her, a flash of lightning reveals Benedetto on the veranda, awaiting Sir Welby's signal. Fearful of the Corsican's vengeance, Stefanie agrees to leave the house, never to return. Sir Welby compels her to sign a recognition of her son's marriage. When she has done so, she leaves, and he summons the man outside, pays him a sum of money and says: "Your remarkable resemblance to a Corsican has proved of great service to me." To the guests at the reception, Alice announces that the Marquise Stefanie de Mohrivart has been unexpectedly summoned to Paris, and has left, never to return.

A JEWEL IN PAWN (Five Parts—April 16).—The cast: Nora Martin (Ella Hall); Mrs. Martin (Mrs. Maie Hall); Jimmy (Antrim Short); Aaron Levovitch (Walter Belasco); Bob Hendricks (Jack Connolly); John Dane (George Pearce); the Bully (Marshall Mackaye). Scenario written by Male Havey. Directed by Jack Conway.

Nora Martin is the seventeen-year-old sunbeam of the tenements. She teaches the little youngsters how to spell and read, and helps Aaron Levovitch in his pawnshop. When Mrs. Martin, determined to remove her daughter from the slums, she goes to Levovitch with all her earthly possessions—but there is not enough on which she can raise the money she needs to take her daughter to her grandfather's home in the country.

Mrs. Martin had married against her father's will, and when her husband died she was left impoverished. Determined now to attempt a reconciliation with her parents, Mrs. Martin pawns her possessions for railroad fare. When Aaron suggests that she pawn her daughter, Mrs. Martin reluctantly consents, and goes alone to seek parental forgiveness. Arriving at her father's country estate, Mrs. Martin finds that he is living at his home in the city.

Mrs. Martin is taken into the house, where she dies. The father, telegraphed for, arrives too late to see his daughter alive. His servants tell him that Mrs. Martin in her final delirium has begged them to "redeem her jewel in pawn."

Meanwhile, in Aaron Levovitch's pawnshop, Nora is daily endearing herself to the kindly old Hebrew, who gives her every care and comfort his lowly quarters afford. Newsboy Jimmy has always been Nora's defender and reliance in her contest with "the Bully" and other children, and when Jimmy is falsely accused of theft, the Judge of the Juvenile Court paroles him in Nora's care. Thus he also comes to live with Levovitch. The two children look upon Aaron as their father.

During Jimmie's day in court, Bob Hendricks, a newspaper reporter, senses his opportunity and prints a "heart interest" narrative about "the jewel in pawn." This story comes under the eye of Nora's grandfather, John Dane, and the wealthy old widower goes at once to Aaron's pawnshop and claims his relative.

Three years in preparatory school turns Nora out a beautiful young lady, and Percival Van Dyke, a snobbish Englishman, sets his cap for her. On a day when Nora is giving a tea to her schoolmates, Jimmie and Aaron, in response to Nora's invitation, call. When Nora takes them into the garden for a chat, Jimmie makes bold to tell his abiding love and Nora is quick to prove that she reciprocates.

Percival sees the three in conversation with Jimmie and Nora in a most loving embrace, and calls Nora's grandfather to gaze upon the scene. The old man orders Jimmie and Aaron from the grounds. Nora loses little time in changing her clothes, to the dress she had brought from her humble station in life, and is soon back again in Aaron's pawnshop.

THE INEVITABLE (Erbograph Company—Five Parts—April 12).—Donald Grey is accused by his partner of dishonesty. The shock of the accusation kills him, and as his innocence cannot be proven, his daughter takes it upon herself to avenge the insult. Meeting Alan Burnham, only son of the partner, she determines to wreck his career.

She succeeds in making him give up everything else for her, and in doing so becomes a notorious siren known as "The Dragonfly." Alan's father begs him to leave the woman. The two quarrel, and in a moment of passion, Alan strikes his father down. At the same time Burr, an employee, who is really guilty of the crime for which Grey suffered, has entered the house for dishonest purposes, and, concealed, he sees the quarrel. When Alan leaves he comes out and is seen by the elder Burnham, who tries to restrain him. Burr kills Burnham.

Alan goes meanwhile to Florence and tells her of the quarrel. She is broken-hearted at this, and tells Alan to leave her, although she loves him. This leaves Alan in despair, and he returns to tell his father that he was right in condemning the girl. He finds him dead, and thinks he has killed him.

While Alan has been away, Burr has come to Florence's apartment to beg her to go away with him. She gets him drunk, and in this state he confesses that he has killed old Burnham, and that he is also guilty of the crime of which Florence's father was accused. At this point Alan returns. She quickly hides Burr in another room and admits Alan.

He tells her he has killed his father, and denounces her as the real cause of the tragedy. She tells him she loves him. He is about to believe her, when he discovers Burr. With a sneer he accuses her of being Burr's lover.

Florence tells him the truth of the murder, and explains she is holding Burr for the police. Thus cleared of the murder, and realizing Florence's love for him, he repents of his attitude toward her, and takes her in his arms.

THE GREAT BRADLEY MYSTERY (Apollo—Five Parts—April 12).—Two business partners, Bradley and Collier, are in love with Mary. Bradley gives Collier to understand that he is engaged to her, and it is this only that prevents Collier declaring his love.

Lola, a young Italian girl whom Bradley has betrayed, comes to the office to beg him to marry her. Mary hears the girl's plea, and comes into the office. Here she sees Collier talking to the girl. He has come, not knowing the situation, and Bradley has slipped out another door. Mary believes that Collier is the guilty man, and refuses to speak to him.

Bradley encourages her in this idea and begs her to marry him. Collier, heart-broken, has left for the West, in order to recover his lost spirits. Bradley has a fake telegram sent to him announcing Collier's death, for he knows that he has no chance with Mary as long as his rival is alive.

After some time Mary marries him. But almost immediately afterward she meets Lola, who is dying in a hospital. Lola begs her to care for Bradley's child, and she learns too late that her husband deceived her. She returns and denounces him. He, knowing that the scandal is sure to get out, orders her to prepare for a trip to Europe. He sells his, as well as Collier's, share in the company.

Lola's father, crazed by his daughter's death, comes to Bradley's office and sneaks in through the basement window. The next day Bradley is found dead. Tony is arrested. Collier returns and meets Mary. Together they go to the police and ask for the release of Tony. Collier tells of his arrival the night before and his knowledge of the sale of the company. He went to confront Bradley, and they struggled. Bradley drew a revolver, which went off in his hand, killing him.

Collier had tried to make the case look like suicide, until he learned that Tony was being held. The police assure Collier that his innocence will be easily established, and he and Mary face the future with the knowledge that a long-deferred happiness will be theirs.

THE GREAT SECRET (Chapter 15—"The Test of Death"—Two Parts—April 16).—Strong shadows Whalen to Zulph's office, and then reports to Sears. The detective relieves him, telling him that he has arranged with Miss Sampson, Zulph's secretary, to report all the conversation and action. He has instructed her to use a dictaphone. Sears has had an instructive talk with Jane Warren, but her important confession is yet to be made to him.

Strong's first act when relieved by Sears is to hasten to Beverly's home, where he finds her much perturbed over an anonymous letter telling her to ask Strong about his parentage and his past life. She shows it to him and he reassures her by telling her that he will not rest until his early life and parentage have been cleared up, and will not marry her until he can answer all the questions in the letter.

As they are speaking, Detective Sears enters and hands Strong a letter he has been given by the Great Master. The letter states that if Strong will call on the writer he will learn of "facts concerning yourself that are now unknown to you." Strong and Sears at once visit the Great Master.

The latter unfolds a plan by which Strong will learn of his past and Dr. Zulph's career of crime be ended. He tells them that the only way he can accomplish this is to pretend to play into Zulph's hand. He shows them a phial containing a drug that he intends taking and which will put him in a state of suspended animation. Then he shows them another phial containing a drug that will restore consciousness, but it must be administered not one moment too late, for then death would ensue. The compact is made and Strong takes the phial that will awaken the Great Master when the proper time comes. The Great Master swallows the drug and becomes unconscious. The simulation of death is so real that Strong believes he is dead and has cheated the law. But Sears assures him and asks him to call a doctor so that a death certificate may be made out. Strong is in favor of calling in his own physician, but Sears vetoes this and decides to call in Dr. Zulph, as this was part of the plan of the Great Master. He is anxious to know what action he will take when he believes the Great Master is dead.

Just then Wee See enters and announces that Jane Warren has been run over by an automobile and is now in a hospital dangerously injured. This news proves unpleasant, for it was upon Jane Warren that Sears relied for information as to Zulph. Strong and Sears decide to visit the hospital. The situation is serious for Jane Warren and the Great Master holds the key to Strong's past life and future happiness, and both are now unconscious with Zulph apparently triumphing in his plans.

A MAGDALENE OF THE HILLS (Rolfe Photoplays, Inc.—Five Parts—April 16).—The cast: Renie Mathis (Mabel Talliaferro); Eric Southard (William Garwood); Old Mathis (Frank Montgomery); Bud Weaver (William B. Davidson); Herbert Grayson (William Black); Len Mathis (Charles Brown). Scenario written by June Mathis. Directed by John W. Noble.

Herbert Grayson has timber holdings in a Southern state. One of his mills is burned, and he accuses Len Mathis, a young mountaineer. In trying to avoid arrest Len is killed, and old John Mathis, his father, swears to shoot Grayson or any member of his family on sight. His young daughter, Renie, makes the same vow.

Grayson is anxious to gain control of lands owned by Mathie, Grayson's nephew, Eric Southard, volunteers to effect the purchase. On his arrival, he telegraphs his uncle, disclosing his identity to the station-agent, who loses no time in telling the bystanders. Eric starts for the home of Peets, his uncle's foreman, in the village "jitney," as Renie, rifle in hand, is walking across the hills to Hibbitsville to get cartridges.

One of the tires of the automobile bursts, and Renie, thinking the noise that of a gun, creeps behind Eric and the chauffeur, who are mending the tire, and makes them throw up their hands. When they explain that the tires contain wind, she shoots one in order to prove it, and while the chauffeur is repairing the damage she and Eric sit by the roadside. She learns in the village that Eric is Grayson's nephew, and goes to Peets' cabin to avenge her brother. Trying to shoot through the window, she misses Eric, who returns her fire, and slightly wounds her. He carries Renie home, and she tells her father she has been wounded by dropping her own gun.

Eric and Renie fall in love. John Mathis has promised Renie's hand in marriage to Bud Weaver, as soon as he earns the necessary $100 with which to set up housekeeping. Eric writes to his uncle, refusing to further his schemes in the mountains.

Eric is summoned to the Mexican border with the National Guard. He promises Renie to return for her. Bud Weaver demands his bride, and old John, true to his promise, sets a date for the wedding. Eric, stricken with typhoid fever, has been sent back to New York to recuperate, but Renie, unable to read or write, cannot communicate with him.

The night before the wedding Renie tries to run away, and, discovered by her father, has to tell him the reason. Old John gives her her rifle and shows her the door. Renie goes to Peets' cabin to try to learn news of Eric, and Peets takes advantage of her loneliness. In the ensuing struggle, Renie's gun is fired, and Peets is killed. Some men who are passing break into the cabin and Renie is arrested charged with murder.

In a New York hospital Eric is convalescent. He learns that Renie has shot Peets and that her trial will be held in a few days. Eric hurries to Hibbitsville and plans her defense. At the trial, the feud between the Grayson and the Mathis factions is brought out, making the case against Renie look serious, but Eric appeals to the sympathies of the mountaineers in her behalf, and the jury returns a verdict of "not guilty." Eric and Renie are married, and Grayson, having come to a realization of the needs of the mountaineers, begins a new regime of helpfulness among the hills.

secretly transfer the documents to Paddy, who leave Tarozza disguised in the uniform of Captain Raoul.

Although the spies are hot on his trail, Paddy reaches a castle perched high on the cliffs of Darbaya. The castle is deserted, as its men folk are fighting in the valley and its women have been sent away to a place of safety. One inmate alone is left—the Lady Maryska, the girl of his dreams. Maryska sees in Paddy an intruder in the hated uniform of Ideria and treats him with scorn. At the time of the meeting the Iderians are sweeping all before them, and Colonel Ivan retreats to the castle. The Colonel's one anxiety is to get his niece away from the danger zone. As the castle is about to fall into the hands of the enemy, the only way to escape is to place her in the care of Paddy. By a slight alteration, the passport is made to read Patrick O'Hara and wife. Circumstances make it imperative for Paddy to go through the marriage ceremony with Maryska, who only consents on the condition that she is to be freed from the marital yoke as soon as they reach safety.

Passing through innumerable adventures and hardships the couple at last gain the frontier. Paddy sends his dispatch to the Blade and while dictating to the operator leaves Maryska asleep under shelter. The message sent, he returns just in time to see Maryska seized and borne away in an aeroplane by emissaries of the enemy. Paddy returns to London. When all hope is lost, he receives a summons to a foreign embassy, where a proposition is made to him to relinquish his wife in order that she may wed a great personage. He is assured that a divorce can easily be arranged and is offered a handsome monetary bribe and other considerations.

O'Hara refuses the proposition, and his refusal is overheard by Maryska, who is hiding in the council chamber. Maryska has learned to love the gallant Irishman during the stormy days of battle and flight, and convinces him that the hurried wedding in the Balkans will stand good for all time.

AN OLD-FASHIONED YOUNG MAN (Fine Arts—Five Parts—April 15).—The cast: Frank Trent (Robert Harron); James Trent (James D. Burke) (Sam De Grasse); Mrs. James D. Burke, Frank's mother (Loyola O'Connor); Margaret, her adopted daughter (Colleen Moore); Nina Marquise, a lady of leisure (Adele Clifton); Charles Murdock, the incumbent mayor (Charles Lee); Patrick McCloskey, his political supporter (Wilbur Higby); Morton, his chief henchman (Bert Hadley).

In a Western town Frank Trent and his father are living under an assumed name. Beginning to feel the stirrings of ambition, he announces his intention of going to a nearby city in search of work and an opportunity to make a name for himself. His father gives him a letter to Lawyer Briggs, an old friend.

Frank excites the mirth of several boys, including the office boy in Lawyer Briggs' office, by his old-fashioned clothes. He gives the office boy the beating of his life, and the noise reaches the ears of the lawyer and Mrs. Burke, in the inner office. They come out, accompanied by Margaret, Mrs. Burke's foster daughter. Unknown to either of them, Mrs. Burke is really Frank's mother. Frank is impressed by the girl and accepts an invitation to dinner at the Burke home later. Mr. Briggs secures a position for the boy with McCloskey, a powerful politician, just then engaged in "arranging" the re-election of the mayor.

Frank takes up his duties in the new position, but has misgivings when he learns of the motives of the men he is working for. Mrs. Burke is asked to accept the candidacy for mayor in opposition to the incumbent. She accepts. McCloskey is worried and sends for Mrs. McCloskey's butler, a henchman of his, and quizzes him to learn of anything in Mrs. Burke's past that could be used against her in the campaign. The butler remembers an old scandal, which accused Mrs. Burke of being the mother of Margaret, her supposed foster daughter. McCloskey is delighted. Frank hears this conversation and decides to join Mrs. Burke's forces and tells McCloskey of his decision. He goes to Mrs. Burke and tells her of the scheme to ruin her character. She pleads with McCloskey to withhold the story. This the politician refuses to do, and the next morning's papers are filled with the scandal.

Frank offers his services to Mrs. Burke and she accepts them. She tells him that she adopted Margaret when the mother was killed in a train wreck, and that a doctor in New Orleans was present at the birth of the child. Frank decides to go to New Orleans and secure an affidavit proving Mrs. Burke's innocence. McCloskey, through the butler, learns of the plan and employs gangsters to waylay Frank. The boy writes to his father, telling of the mission. Realizing that the boy is shielding his own mother, the father goes to the city.

Several attempts are made by the McCloskey emissaries to prevent Frank from reaching New Orleans. But the boy foils them and arrives in the Southern city only to find that the doctor, who can provide the affidavit, has moved to New York. Frank returns to the city, encountering trouble with his pursuers. Upon arriving in the metropolis, he learns that the doctor is dead, but his widow shows Frank the diary. Unfortunately one of McCloskey's band has already removed the important pages. Frank recovers them after giving the thief a thorough beating.

With this evidence in his possession Frank returns to the Western city, where he finds that he not only has saved his sweetheart's name from disgrace, but has also been the means of reuniting his mother and father, who had been separated on account of the scandal.

MID-WINTER SPORTS IN QUEBEC (Burton Holmes—April 2).—Quebec stands 200 feet above the lower town, dominating the entire landscape. Along Duffern Terrace there runs the toboggan slide, which at night is brilliantly illuminated. Also there are ski-jumping contests that will give thrills of pleasure. Snow-shoe hiking is popular with those who prefer it, and many a cross-country hike is taken on snow five feet deep or more. Then, too, there are dog sled races, curling-club matches, coasting and tea dances. The pictures of these sports were taken while the thermometer registered from ten to thirty degrees below zero. Besides sports there are many historical points of interest in Quebec. The Chauteau Frontenac, overlooking the Duffern Terrace, the lower city and ice-choked St. Lawrence river, stands on the site of the historic Fort Louis, former stronghold of the French and English governors of the Province of Quebec. The famous battlefield where the English general, Wolfe, died is a particular point of interest.

He lives with three cronies in a French boarding house in the New York Latin quarter. The impending war sends Jacques home from Paris, and as he is about to leave Raoul Vaux, a crooked art dealer, induces him to bring some cleverly disguised paintings with him, knowing that the art student's work will be passed at the custom house with but a glance from the customs officers.

The secret service suspects Jacques of being Vaux, and Ellen Ingram, a clever girl operative, is put on his trail, and she moves to the same boarding house where Jacques and his father live. The father, proud of his son, tries to keep his financial condition concealed, and secures a position as night watchman in an art gallery.

Vaux, who has come to America, plans to steal a picture, and gains admission to the gallery, cuts a fine portrait from its frame and escapes unrecognized. Jacques, hearing that his father is in the art gallery, goes there, but his father sends him home. Later Duval finds the painting missing and notifies the police. He is arrested, but freed. Jacques meets Vaux, who gives him a canvas on which to paint a water color. By accident, Jacques finds the stolen painting hidden beneath. While he runs to trap Vaux the police catch Duval looking at the painting and he is arrested.

Ellen Ingram, the girl detective, sends operatives to help Jacques and Vaux is captured. The old man, who suspects his son of stealing the painting, pleads guilty himself, and they all go to the police station, where affairs are straightened out, and the old father takes his son into his arms. An affection has sprung up between Jacques and Ellen and they are married—an event made possible by the reward received by Jacques from the French government for the arrest of Vaux.

A SCHOOL FOR HUSBANDS (Lasky—Five Parts—April 5).—The cast includes: Fannie Ward, Jack Dean, Frank Elliott, Mabel Van Buren, Edythe Chapman, James Neil, Frank Borzage, Irene Aldwyn.

Betty Manners is the plain, economical wife of the frivolous John Manners. John is fond of races and spends most of his time, when he should be at his broker's office, playing the horses. His wife being such a plain dresser causes John to dislike taking her out, and he consequently pays a lot of attention to Mrs. Airlie, who is vivacious and stylish. This arouses Betty's jealousy, and she decides to buy some stylish and expensive clothes just as the stock market goes wrong with John. An old friend of Betty's arrives and brings her news of a vast fortune left her and that she is now Lady Betty Manners. Betty keeps the news a secret and proceeds to spend the money on gowns, hats, automobiles, etc. John soon finds that the only thing left of his wealth is their estate in the West, and he goes there to sell it. When Betty hears of this she organizes a party, secures a private car, and leaves for California.

Betty and her party arrive there first. As John and Mrs. Airlie stroll through the park they are confronted by Betty and Sir Harry, who seem to be quite fond of each other. Unknown to John, Sir Harry buys the estate for Betty. John, by this time insanely jealous, calls upon Sir Harry at his hotel, where a struggle ensues. John fires, and believes he has killed Sir Harry. Terrorized, he returns home in a pouring rainstorm and Betty hides him on an open porch. The police enter, as does Sir Harry, and John is brought to the realization of how foolish he has been. He is forgiven all around and all is well.

THE COST OF HATRED (Lasky—Five Parts—April 9).—The cast: Elsie Graves and Sarita Graves (Kathlyn Williams); Justus Graves (Theodore Roberts); Ned Amory (Tom Forman); Robert Amory (J. W. Johnston); Huertez (Jack Holt); McCabe (Charles Ogle); Jefe Politico (Walter Long); Ramon (Horace B. Carpenter); Elsie's companions (Mayme Kelso); Little Sarita (Louise Mineugh).

Elsie Graves is the young wife of the stern, cruel Justus Graves. Graves shows no affection to anyone excepting his little daughter, Sarita. As Graves is continually away on business trips, Elsie, left alone, falls in love with Robert Amory, a widower, who with his young son, Ned, lives next door. Returning home unexpectedly, Graves finds Elsie in Amory's arms. He shoots Amory and is about to shoot his wife when he hears his daughter crying. He takes his daughter and flees to a little Mexican settlement. Amory recovers and he and Elsie marry.

Years later Sarita, grown into a beautiful young woman, is the queen of Graves' estate in Mexico. Elsie has died in the meantime, leaving Ned, a fine young man, who secures a diplomatic position in Mexico City. He starts for that city, misses a train in a little Mexican settlement, is set upon and robbed and thrown into jail.

Graves happens to discover Ned's identity and still filled with hatred for the man who stole his wife, has the local politico sentence Ned to a year's hard labor, and sell his services to Graves. Graves takes Ned home and tries to break him, body and soul.

Ned is beaten and whipped and forced to do the most menial labor around the house. This arouses Sarita's pity and then her love. She effects Ned's escape and flees to the United States with him. The father pursues, only to find the couple married and safe across the Rio Grande. The father begs for the daughter to return to him, but she refuses, and the lovers go away together, leaving the old man to realize the terrible cost of his hatred.

EAST OF SUEZ (Burton Holmes Travelogue—April 9).—As you loll comfortably on the deck, your steamer approaches the Suez canal and you enter this interesting stretch of water at Port Said. You land at Aden, the British Gibraltar in Arabia. Here and there queer specimens of humanity are moping along, seemingly unaware of their very existence. Next there is a parade given by the British Tommies.

In India you reach Bombay; Bombay is a busy place. There are over a million natives there, curiously clad, under the beneficent rule of England, as represented by such men as an Irish major. The major is attended by seven servants, who cost a total monthly payroll of seven dollars.

THE TIDES OF BARNEGAT (Lasky—Five Parts—April 12). The cast: Blanche Sweet, Elliott Dexter, Tom Forman, Harrison Ford, Lillian Leighton, Norman Nichols, Walter Rogers and Billy Jacob.

Jane Cogden and her sister Lucy live together. Jane has two admirers, John Cavendish, the village doctor, and Bart Holt, son of an old sea captain. Jane fails to respond to Bart's attentions and he turns to Lucy. These two become separated from the others while on a sailing party and are marooned on an island. When they return in the morning Bart is met with the news that he must sail on a three months' cruise. Lucy, on hearing this, becomes frightened and tells her sister the story. Jane the next day goes to demand at once of Bart's father the marriage of Lucy and Bart. She finds the old man heartbroken by the news of the death of his son at sea.

Jane takes Lucy to Paris, keeping her ignorant of the death of Bart, and here she proves to be the same as before, frivolous and thoughtless. One day Sydney Gray, an old friend of John Cavendish, calls on the girls. Lucy tells him that the child which Jane is forced to take care of belongs to Jane through secret marriage.

Not long after, Jane receives a visit from Lucy and Sydney, now her husband. Jane demands that Lucy make known the facts concerning the child, whom she has taken back to America with her, to Sydney at once. She promises to do so the next morning. On the following day little Archie, while playing in a boat, is caught in the tide and carried out to sea. He is rescued by Jane's old admirer, who nearly loses his life in the attempt. Carried to shore by an old sea captain, the little fellow is revived, and here Bart's father reveals the identity of the child, accusing Lucy of being the mother. Through the pleading of Jane, Lucy is forgiven by Sydney and Jane goes to John, who is waiting for her.

THE WISHBONE. (Black Diamond—April 16).—Box Car Bill and Journeying Jim roll into a town in a box car on a cold winter's day. They see a chicken yard in the distance, and appropriate a big fat hen. The farmer gives chase with a gun. Bill and Jim make their escape still holding on to the chicken. When out of range of the farmer they build a fire, proceed to roast the chicken, and enjoy a hearty meal.

After the meal they fall asleep and his majesty appears from a cloud of smoke coming up from the ground and says, "You fellows have had hell enough on this earth, with the wishbone of that chicken in your possession your every wish shall be granted."

Next scene finds Bill and Jim in their dream in front of a fashionable restaurant. They enter, the waiter hands them a bill of fare, they wave the magic wishbone over the bill and everything on the bill appears on the table before them. The waiter in fright leaps out of the window and Bill and Jim proceed with the meal.

After they leave the restaurant their natural enemy, the policeman, sees them coming out and attempts to arrest them. With the aid of the wishbone they make their escape, and when they see two old maids coming down the street they again resort to the use of the wishbone while wishing that the two old maids were "chickens." The two old maids are transformed into beautiful girls and greet Bill affectionately. The policeman now appears on the scene, handcuffs them and carries them off to jail.

He guards them outside the cell, but they simply wave their wishbone, wish they were free and fade out through the stone walls and are again outside in the snow. The weather is bitter cold, the ground is covered with snow, they wish the snow were gone, so they again wave the wishbone.

The scene is transformed into beautiful weather. They take off their coats to enjoy the bright sunlight and wish for an auto. It appears instantly, but they do not proceed far until they crash into a street car and the auto is badly wrecked. They decide that the auto is no good and wish that a dump cart were transformed into a car.

Their wish is granted and they drive down to the railroad yards, find all their brother hoboes and invite them out for a ride. They have a hilarious time until the auto crashes into a telegraph pole and they are blown up into the air. The scene then fades back to where they both fell asleep. They wake up, frightened, throw the wishbone away, deciding that it is no good.

"NEWMAN" BRASS FRAMES AND RAILS

DO YOU KNOW?

that 90% of all the brass frames used in the moving picture houses throughout the country are "NEWMAN'S"?

WHY?

Because we steadily have refused to cheapen or lower the quality of our goods, even though others have sought to undermine our prestige by underselling with cheapened products. That is one of the reasons why nine out of every ten frames sold bear the name "NEWMAN." Insist on that name and save money.

TWO SENSATIONAL SUCCESSES

The Universal's Greatest Serial and Its Seven Part Series Prove Big Box Office Attractions

Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber in "The Voice on the Wire" Serial.

"TWO at a time is good fishing," as the kids say, but you wise Exhibitors don't have to fish for these two wonderful prizes released by the Universal for your benefit. "The Voice on the Wire," the Universal's latest and greatest serial, has captured the fans of the country. It is going big in thousands of theatres, and getting increased attendance at each episode. Based on the popular novel of the same name by Eustace Hale Ball, author of "Traffic in Souls" and many other huge successes, its picturization is eagerly seen by the multitude who read that absorbing story in book form. In every section of the country the episodes are being published in story form in local newspapers and the result has driven crowds of fans to the theatres showing this Universal triumph. Ben Wilson, the popular Universal star, is supported by beautiful Neva Gerber, Joe Girard and a huge and brilliant cast. The lavish production, the baffling mystery, the tense situations that bring the people to each succeeding episode are produced under the masterly direction of Stuart Paton, who directed the Universal's stupendous spectacular drama, "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," which fact alone assures a production far beyond the average. Now is the golden time, the assured opportunity to book this huge success and get in on the big money it is coining for Exhibitors wherever shown. Wire or write to your nearest Universal Exchange or communicate with the home office of the Universal, 1600 Broadway, New York.

"Something just as good" in this instance does not mean an inferior substitute. It means that in "The Perils of the Secret Service" there is a marvelous opportunity for those Exhibitors who appreciate continuous business, but who for any reason, do not care to book or show a serial photoplay. This novel series consists of seven dramatic two reelers, EACH COMPLETE IN ITSELF, in all of which Kingsley Benedict, the favorite Universal player, plays the lead, supported by a different leading woman in each part. The stories are founded on the famous "Yorke Norroy" series by George Bronson Howard, author of the literary sensation, "God's Man." They achieved a truly marvelous popularity when published in one of America's biggest fiction magazines recently. Mr. Howard, who has written many successful plays as well as novels, personally directed the picture, and every detail of the inner workings of the Secret Service are faithfully shown.

Kingsley Benedict in "The Perils of the Secret Service."

The plots are heroic, dramatic and unusual, and in these days of spies, bomb plots and the like they pull the crowds as molasses draws flies. Get in touch with your nearest Universal Exchange immediately if you wish to cash in on the tremendous popularity of this unique series.

TREMENDOUS POPULARITY

Universal Screen Magazine Breaks All Booking Records

EXCHANGE managers in every one of the Universal's 73 distributing offices report record bookings on this marvelous "one reel feature that made good in a day." There is nothing like it on the market; you can't duplicate its pulling power with any of the numerous imitations; you can't get the variety of subjects of such wide popular appeal; you can't get the fans clamoring for any other one-reeler as they have done for the Universal Screen Magazine. It was the demand of the fans that caused its release every week, although it was originally planned for twice a month only. That is the sort of popularity that shows up in NET profits, Mr. Exhibitor, and now in the sixteenth week of unprecedented success is a pretty good time for you to get full particulars regarding this genuine attraction. Send to your nearest Universal Exchange for copy of FREE booklet that will tell you all about the Universal Screen Magazine.

The GREATER Program

The Mighty Universal Service Alone Meets Every Exhibitor's Needs

IT is not necessary to say the greatest Program on earth, because the Universal Program is GREATER in quantity and quality than all competitive services combined. When you see listed the releases on the regular Universal Program you are seeing the cream of the film world, not only in short subjects but in varied interests, and in that scientific balance that keeps up the interest throughout the week, getting more repeat admissions than any other form of entertainment now available anywhere. For convenience in booking an "open" program the regular program is divided into "specials" and "regular" releases. Read below.

Special Releases

On the Universal Program for the Week of May 7

BECAUSE these specials are the pick of the program's bunch of novelties, they lend themselves readily to the needs of every Exhibitor who wants to bolster up a weak program; help out a weak feature performance, or strengthen his entertainment generally. And because they are such "specials" in the truest sense of the word they cost you a slight advance. They are worth it. With them you can get the crowds, no matter what competition you have.

BUTTERFLY—"ETERNAL LOVE" (Five-Reel Drama)—Ruth Clifford and Douglas Gerrard.
NESTOR—"THE LOST APPETITE" (One-Reel Comedy)—Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts.
GOLD SEAL—"THE GRIP OF LOVE" (Three-Reel Drama)—Allen Holubar and Louise Lovely.
L-KO—"TOM'S TRAMPING TROUPE" (Two-Reel Comedy)—Phil Dunham, Lucille Hutton, Chas. Inslee and Merta Sterling.
UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY—No. 71.
UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE—Issue No. 18.

Regular Releases

On the Universal Program for the Week of May 7

THE regular releases include those sterling one, two and three-reel dramatic and comedy subjects which constitute the backbone of the mighty Universal Program, and which have given it the reputation of setting the standard for all competitors. Look them over and remember that—like the "specials"—they can be booked separately, if desired.

VICTOR—"BASEBALL MADNESS" (One-Reel Comedy)—Billy Mason and Gloria Swanson.
VICTOR—"SWEARING OFF" (One-Reel Comedy)—Eileen Sedgwick.
IMP—"FLAMES OF TREACHERY" (One-Reel Drama)—Lois Wilson and Lee Hill.
IMP—"THE GIRL IN THE GARRET" (Two-Reel Drama)—Jack Nelson and Molly Malone.
BISON—"ONE WILD NIGHT" (Two-Reel Drama)—Gypsy Hart and Kingsley Benedict.
LAEMMLE—"THE DOCTOR'S DECEPTION" (One-Reel Drama).
BIG U—"CAPTAIN MARJORIE'S ADVENTURE" (Two-Reel Indian Drama).

The two lists above comprise the complete Universal Program of twenty-nine reels a week. Constantly growing in popularity, the Universal Program is bringing success to thousands of Exhibitors throughout the country, many of whom it has saved from feature failure. Wire or write your nearest Universal Exchange today for full particulars, or address the home office of the Universal as above.

Near Riot at Rialto

Universal Animated Weekly Patriotic Number Enthuses Big Broadway Audience

THE current showing of the Universal Animated Weekly at the Rialto, Broadway's newest and finest moving picture palace, was marked by a riot of enthusiasm. True to its reputation, the U. A. W. scored another beat by showing the President in the act of signing the War Message. With two machines, Mgr. Rothapfel caused this picture and the telegraphic message announcing the event to be shown simultaneously; then the orchestra played the national anthem, and the thousands of people present went wild with enthusiasm. The release was patriotic from end to end. Soldiers, sailors, battleship practice; the latest U. S. Submarine preparedness activities all over the country (shown by permission of the National Publicity Committee) brought forth round after round of applause. This is what the U. A. W. will do for you, Mr. Exhibitor. It will get business when nothing else will. Book through your nearest Universal Exchange, or the UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY, 1600 Broadway, New York.

New Mark Set in Comedy

"20,000 Laughs Under the Sea" Cleverest Burlesque Ever Filmed

TWENTY thousand laughs is all wrong—it is one great, big laugh from start to finish with barely a chance for the fans to catch their breaths. Here is the highest standard of comedy ever released. It is a frank and free burlesque of the Universal's tremendous "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," and in the hands of the Joker Comedians it proves to be a riot of laughter. If you are lucky enough to get this marvelous two-reel comedy, you can boost it harder than any comedy you have ever booked. It will stand all you can give it, and then some.

"20,000 LEAGUES UNDER THE SEA"

—is making a smashing clean up for hundreds of Exhibitors. In Brooklyn, N. Y., in the Marcus Loew Houses in which matinees on "20,000 LEAGUES UNDER THE SEA" were advertised for 2 P. M. they had to begin the performances at 11 A. M. to avert a riot.

No film spectacle in the history of the industry can show the tremendous smashing record for crowds and profits to Exhibitors as "20,000 LEAGUES." Film men admit it's the knock-out of the year. No production can touch it. It's got them all beaten by miles. Our Victory Saves The biggest Thing

(No. 173 Straight from the Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Mfg. Co.)

(Written April 10th, 1917)

Yesterday the Supreme Court of the United States put the finishing touch on the most important law-suit in the history of the moving picture business when it decided in favor of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and against the Motion Picture Patents Company in the famous "Latham Loop" case.

This is the biggest and best thing that has happened to the exhibitors of the United States in ten years, and it is a matter of supreme pride for me to announce that THE UNIVERSAL ALONE fought the fight which insures freedom to the exhibitors of this country!

The Universal financed the fight year after year and through court after court without a dollar's worth of help from any other producing company, any other exchange or any exhibitor on earth! At one time we issued a general appeal to all other producers to chip in and help stand the terrific expenses, BUT NOT A DOLLAR WAS FORTHCOMING.

If the Universal had not defended the case with all the power at its command, if we had been caught off our guard at any time, if the Patents company had won, you and every other exhibitor in the country might now BE USING ONLY SUCH PICTURES AS THE PATENTS COMPANY PERMITTED YOU TO USE! You might be the body-and-soul slave of the tightest monopoly that ever monopped in the land of the free and the home of the brave!

At one time during the long court fight it was suggested to us by a trickster that we purposely let the Patents company win the case if we could arrange with that company to let us in on their monopoly! While this never interested us for a minute, we might have made dishonest millions by doing it, and we could now be telling you where to get off, what kind of pajamas to wear, and how to part your hair! We would have NO COMPETITION WHATEVER and you would either take the films we offered you at the price we demanded or you'd have to quit the theatre business!

We had not a dollar to gain by spending our money in fighting the Patents company. All we had to gain was the glory of insuring freedom for the exhibitors and for ourselves.

If we had formed a legal combination with the Patents company, not a single producing company now doing business would be able to market a dollar's worth of film without paying tribute to us!

You from Slavery in Film History

We had the choice of making millions of dollars in profit with dishonor, or paying thousands upon thousands out of our pockets in court and attorney's fees —with honor! We chose the latter course and now some of our film acquaintances grin at us and say, "Now that you've won, what has it GOT you?"

It has GOT us just this:

First, it has got us the joy that comes from a clean fight, cleanly fought and cleanly won!

Second, it has got us the clear conscience which results from doing the right thing, THE AMERICAN THING, in the right way, REGARDLESS OF COST.

Third, it has not got us a dollar of profit but has got us into a great wad of expense—but, thank God, dollars are not the only thing that constitute the joy of living or the reward of work!

Fourth, it has got us the fun of telling you what regular humdingers we are; and it has given us this new opportunity to toot the very gizzard out of our own horn!

Do you remember that about two years ago you received notice from the Patents company telling you that you must not use any but licensed films in your projection machines? And do you remember that thousands of you came running to our exchanges in a panic and asking what to do? And do you remember that THE UNIVERSAL told you not to worry but to go home and go to sleep and forget it because WE WOULD PROTECTYOU? Well, we've done it—and you can go back to sleep again if you like.

Gentlemen, you are now free to run your own business as you please, and if any attempt is made in the future to enslave you in one way or another, you can rest assured that the Universal will still be on the job to fight your fight and win it!

MUTUAL RELEASE "THE WILDCAT," FEATURES JACKIE SAUNDERS

JACKIE SAUNDERS makes her second appearance in Mutual Pictures the week of April 23. The second of the Jackie Saunders series of features is entitled "The Wildcat." It was produced by E. D. Horkheimer. It is in five acts.

The Taming of a Hoyden.

The story of "The Wildcat" is from the pen of Daniel Whitcomb. It depicts the reformation of a typical little tomboy, a reckless, harum-scarum sort of girl who delights in having her own way upon every occasion. Before the story ends she has developed into a beautiful, charming and wholly lovable young lady. The taming of the hoyden is accomplished by a young man who resorts to kidnaping before he succeeds in his purpose. At a lonely cabin, far up in the mountains—miles from civilization—the spoiled, ill-tempered child is transformed and returns to the city later on as the wife of the man who tames her.

Splendidly Produced.

"The Wildcat" has been splendidly produced by Director MacDonald. Its scenes were chosen with care and have been perfectly photographed by William Beckway. Miss Saunders is supported by an excellently balanced cast. Arthur Shirley has the male lead opposite the star. As a comedy-drama of the highest class, exhibitors will find "The Wildcat" hard to equal. Bookings can be arranged now at any Mutual Exchange for both "The Wildcat" and "Sunny Jane," which was the first of the Jackie Saunders series.

Fred Jackson Story for Mary Miles Minter

As the next offering in the Mary Miles Minter series of Mutual Pictures, a most unusual story has been selected. President Hutchinson of the American Film Company, Inc., has chosen Fred Jackson's famous story—"Annie-For-Spite." Director James Kirkwood believes this will give Miss Minter one of the most delightful plays in which she has ever appeared. Jackson's stories are famous everywhere and thousands will be attracted by the author's name alone. Bookings on "Annie-For-Spite" can be made now at any Mutual Exchange. Its release date will be announced shortly.

MISS MARIE CAHILL

Vaudeville Favorite and Popular Comedienne

IN NEW FEATURETTES

Mutual Film Corporation announces a series of three Mutual Featurettes starring Marie Cahill. The first is released on Monday, April 30. It is entitled "Gladys' Day Dream." The other two will follow at bi-weekly intervals. "When Betty Bets" is the title of the second. It is released May 14. "Patsy's Partner," the third Cahill Featurette, will be released on May 28. Miss Cahill is one of America's best known comediennes. She has been a "top line" vaudeville star for years. She has been the featured star of several musical comedies. She is known and admired everywhere. Now, in Mutual Featurettes, she will be seen by an even greater audience. Exhibitors are thus given an opportunity of offering a big star—a star of national note—in subjects of shorter length than five or six reel features. This serves to illustrate the Mutual Film Corporation's recent announcement that the "Big Stars Only" policy applies equally to short and long subjects. Bookings on the Marie Cahill Featurettes can be made now at all Mutual Exchanges.

Exhibitors Offered Wide Variety of Film Subjects

Variety of the widest sort is offered exhibitors in the Featurettes now available at all Mutual Exchanges. Comedies of widely different character will be found in Vogue Featurettes and Strand Featurettes. Cub Featurettes are of still a different sort. Romance and adventure run riot in the Jimmie Dale Featurettes and the Shorty Hamilton Featurettes. Topical and educational subjects include Reel Life Featurettes and Mutual Weekly.

MARJORIE RAMBEAU IN "THE DEBT" SCORES DRAMATIC TRIUMPH

"THE DEBT" is the third of the Marjorie Rambeau series of Mutual Pictures. It is released the week of April 23. Frank Powell directed it. The story was adapted from a famous European stage success. Miss Rambeau scores a real dramatic triumph in the role of the Countess.

A Heart Interest Story.

Heart interest predominates throughout the story. The scenes are laid abroad and in New York City. Ann, the Countess, is the daughter of a nobleman who invests all his capital in a mining proposition. She is loved by Baron Moreno, who hopes to profit by her wealth, and by John Slater, a man of the people, who loves her for herself alone. When the mine, in which hundreds of the villagers had invested their savings, proves worthless, Anne's father commits suicide, the Baron breaks off his engagement, and John Slater and Ann voluntarily agree to assume the debt incurred by the failure of the mine. After Ann's marriage to Slater the two go to America, accompanied by Slater's mother, a woman who resents her son's love for another. Through years of humble toil the Slaters accumulate a little hoard with which to repay the debt. Just as this fund is completed Moreno appears on the scene and compromises Ann in such a way that Slater casts her off. Months later when Ann's little daughter is dying, Slater revenges himself upon Moreno and, dying, bids his wife return to her child, and complete the payment of the debt. Upon her return to Europe Ann carries out the plan agreed upon, makes good the losses of the peasants and eventually marries the minister who has long loved her.

Released Week April 23.

"The Debt" is released the week of April 23. It is unquestionably one of the most dramatic and powerful of the Rambeau subjects . Bookings on this, "The Greater Woman" and "Motherhood" can be made now at any Mutual Exchange.

"Railroad Raiders" An Instant Success

Monday, April 9, was a red-letter day for every theatre that began showing the new Helen Holmes success—"The Railroad Raiders." The public instantly voted it a success. It was proclaimed a worthy successor to such previous successes as "The Girl and the Game" and "A Lass of the Lumberlands. Exhibitors who have not already arranged to show "The Railroad Raiders" can secure bookings at their nearest Mutual Exchange.

HELEN HOLMES

IN the dazzling days of the Italian Renaissance a mighty cathedral was to be built in a city of Northern Italy. In our phrase we would call the word which went through the grand peninsula an invitation for bids; accordingly, architects whose renown is still bright though they have slumbered many hundreds of years, contributed wonderful plans and drawings. All save one especially prominent builder. He submitted nothing, where he was expected to contribute a most interesting pencil projection. The [illegible] to discover the reason. The architect expressed some well-feigned surprise, and called for a sheet of paper, or parchment, or whatever they used before the pulp days. Then, taking a piece of black chalk, with a single easy, free-hand movement, he drew a perfect circle.

"Take this to your masters," he said "and tell them that you saw me do it."

Do we need to conclude our parable? Of course the wizard who could draw a perfect circle built the cathedral!

A perfect reproduction of life, or any phase of life, is so rare in the arts that whatever the subject, it commands instant attention.

I recommend to the photodrama lover and to the professor who are strangers to their timid eyes to find a bit of art on the screen, and to Vaudeville [illegible] lovers of red blood narrative [illegible] American humor, and to the [illegible] fatigue, and to [illegible] first installment of J. P. McGowan's new serial, "The Railroad Raiders." It is indeed a far cry from Italian perspective to cylinder oil, but the principal of comparison remains; a railroad melodrama may be a small thing against the bulk of American photoplays, but a perfectly lifelike railroad play against an avalanche of general mediocrity stands out like the great architect's perfect circle against reams of lazy edifices imperfectly drawn. To do one thing as no one else can do it is to be individual, and a success. McGowan has stuck to the rails for years, and no one can challenge him on his own right-of-way.

A complaint is brought to the general offices of the K. & W. railroad that stealing is going on at Garden City. It's the fourth complaint inside a month. Really, the thief is the station agent, Steve Arnold, who does a thriving business in Indian baskets, blankets and pottery by tapping cars of canned goods and swapping tomatoes and [illegible] for barbaric utensils. Confronting a specific instance, we see the general manager's private car bearing down on Garden City, while Arnold, revealing a rubber face, lets it drift out of the [illegible] track. The general manager, signaled by the demented [illegible] car, and [illegible] way, [illegible] proof [illegible]

Steve is given into the custody of his old friend, the town constable. But does he remain in durance? Not he. Making a getaway he flips an outbound freight, and, when discovered, is thrown off by a crew who fears his tainted presence as a menace to their own reputations. He lands almost upon a trio of "jewelry" salesmen, lunching in a gully after bilking a village community by proclaiming "only eight bucks—a seventeen jeweled movement with a twenty year case." And they are as ready to rob Steve as the mountaineers. In fact, they try it, but he threshes the outfit, and becomes Shek of the [illegible] caravan. Then—

A complete recital of Mr. McGowan's plot wouldn't be so very interesting. See this picture, and you'll realize the amount of genuine art that can be clothed in a hard tale of the iron trail. His illuminated title with its [illegible] legends and its slow-moving train filling the background, is one of the happiest conceits since [illegible] pictured title pages became the vogue. In the sub-titles people say just the things they would say under similar circumstances. In spite of his adroit feeling for the essentials of human nature, Mr. McGowan rival, Charley Van Loan, [illegible] thus, the ancient constable, [illegible] to intern a man he has always considered some power in the community, begins the primitive process by shaking hands with him. Outwitted even [illegible] curvature to the bastile, his single track bon esty makes him tramp back to report. "That feller o' yourn give me the slip." And as the concluding touch to his [illegible] ciency he turns to add "If you want me azim, telephone."

Mr. McGowan keeps his wife—Helen Holmes, well known Venus of the valves—out of the first chapter until its dramatic finale. Yet it is a stellar vehicle for her; [illegible] admirable selection in fit the star to [illegible] instead of [illegible] Mr. McGowan hasn't patented the process.

An Announcement

Transcending in Importance Any Previously Made by the Williamson Brothers :: :: ::

IT is extremely gratifying to us to be able to announce at this time the completion of our latest and (we confidently believe) our greatest success in the exclusive field of submarine photoplays.

FREED of all alliances, we have independently produced and will very shortly offer for the approval of the public an undersea drama of such amazing originality, power and beauty, that it will create a furore.

Our first independent attraction—

THE SUBMARINE EYE

Introduces a wonderful invention of the great world-war—the inverted periscope. Actually shown locating sunken treasure, sea marauders, deadly mines and other dangers of the Deep.

The vast army of Motion Picture Fans that enjoyed the "Williamson Expedition Submarine Motion Pictures" and the under-sea portions of "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," will hail with delight this latest and greatest masterpiece of the Williamson Brothers.

It should be borne in mind that Sheldon Lewis, who starred in the Iron Claw; Walter Hampden, who starred in the Servant in the House; Charlotte Ives, now starring in the Morosco Broadway hit, The Brat; Marie Shotwell, appearing in Enlighten Thy Daughter; Harry Benham, of the Million Dollar Mystery, and Theodore Friebus, for years the idol at the Castle Square Theatre, Boston; appear in

Goldwyn Pictures

Goldwyn's Decision Is: "Open Bookings"

THE REASONS behind Goldwyn's adoption of this policy are:

1. Thousands of the nation's exhibitors have advised it.

2. Each Goldwyn production will be strong enough to stand on its own merits, without leaning on the picture behind or the picture ahead.

3. Exhibitors should have the right to rent the group of pictures they want without being forced to take other pictures they do not want.

And—

Goldwyn considers it wisest to let exhibitors use their own brains in deciding what pictures are best for their theatres and their communities.

"One of the Greatest Photo Dramas ever Produced"

"The Greatest Film for Women as yet produced"

"An attraction for any audience anywhere"

"A great gift to the Industry"

George Loane Tucker's production of

"The Manx-Man"

By HALL CAINE

Mr. Tucker has been personally overwhelmed with congratulations from the most astute judges in the Trade. The huge audience at the Lyric Theatre was extraordinarily representative of the best in the Trade. During a continuous two hour run the audience either chuckled with laughter, gulped down sobs, furtively wiped their eyes, or, broke into gales of applause at the splendid and unusual effects when not watching with intense and impressive silence this wonderfully gripping heart-interest story.

"WID" . . . . "Most perfect adaptation of a big novel ever screened—absorbing human drama that grips—big—convincing—appealing and stirring—wonderful characterization—action with perfectly maintained suspense—good for a run anywhere—hats off to Fred Groves—congratulations to Elisabeth Risdon—all hail George Loane Tucker."

PETER MILNE M. P. NEWS "In acting, in direction, in scenic investiture it is a little short of marvelous—and in story it is superfine—double exposures without doubt the best ever done. Fred Groves gives one of the most sympathetic characters the screen has ever reflected. Elisabeth Risdon—a brilliant performance taxing versatility to unusual degree—rises to every occasion delightfully. G. L. T. has achieved a distinct truimph.

THE MORNING TELEGRAPH FRANCES AGNEW "Undoubtedly an extraordinary feature—one that will achieve a big success wherever exhibited. Wonderfully deft touches of pathos and comedy—big scenes in numbers and in action that hold spectators spellbound." Elisabeth Risdon most charming. Pete played by Fred. Groves the most sincere and human character ever offered on the screen. Superb photography, including startling and novel effects. Pictorially and directorially the picture is a gem."

VARIETY "JOLO" "There are not two or three more such film productions in the entire world. Magnificently and artistically directed—munificently staged—ingeniously cut and assembled—as nearly perfect a photodrama as it is possible to conceive. May be heralded by exhibitors as one of the best film entertainments ever put forward.

EXHIBITOR'S TRADE REVIEW "Weaves a spell about spectators as they breathlessly watch."

N. Y. CLIPPER WHITTEN "Such a superlatively good photodrama that an adequate description of it is difficult. Should play on Broadway for a year."

"PARALTA Plan"

Founded on Experience and Proved by Practical Tests

Paralta Plan Saves You Money in Rentals

MR. EXHIBITOR are you working for yourself? If not, would you like to be shown a way to get all the benefit you are entitled to from your own enterprise? Are you making the profit you should make from your theatre? If you are, do you want to increase your earnings? If you are making a loss, have you dug down straight to the very bottom cause and found out why? Or, are you just floating along on hope that something may soon turn up to land you right? If you are making a loss there is a way you can turn it to a profit. If you are making a profit you can increase it. Get the idea?

THREE years ago a certain moving picture theatre showed a net profit of $21,000 on the year. In 1916 it recorded a net profit of but $6,000. Why? The proprietor replies when asked—"Oh, conditions." Then he becomes pessimistic and says that everybody is having the same experience—everybody who is on the profit side is now making but a little; and almost everybody is losing. There's a reason. What is it? It does not lie in generalities but in specific facts—in definable causes. Is one of them too high rentals on one-day runs, resulting in continual big non-productive expense? Is it waste that is bleeding the average moving picture theatre to death? What do you think?

Are You Not Tired of Working For Someone Else? Why Not Look To Your Own Pocket?

PARALTA PLAYS, Inc.

to EXHIBITORS

It means Freedom from All Burdensome Conditions

EVERY new business, especially one that has rushed to phenomenal success, as the moving picture industry has done, always develops features which prove oppressive. In many new industries it is the retail distributor who finds himself the victim of marked adverse conditions, of which Avarice, with its quick eye to opportunity for unfair gain, takes full advantage. Are oppressive conditions and avarice, with the tremendous cost of waste from bottom to top of production and distribution loaded on to the exhibitor, the cause of all his work resulting in but small profit, or loss and failure? This ought to interest you.

Paralta Plays Are Attractions That Will Draw

THE remedy for any industrial evil is born of its hardships and impositions. Some one man begins to think. He takes others into council and a method to meet undesirable influences is formulated. It was in this way that the Paralta Plan was formed. It was proved sound by eight months' practical investigation. Then followed the incorporation of Paralta Plays, Inc., with Carl Anderson as president; Robert T. Kane, as vice-president; Herman Fichtenberg as chairman of the board of directors; Herman Katz as treasurer, and Nat. I. Brown as secretary and general manager. The Paralta Plan means greater liberty. Does it appeal to you?

THE WORLD'S OPINION

in its review of "The Boob," a Selig drama in General Film service, says:

"A two-reel offering of worth. There is much humor and pathos to be found in the two reels. 'The Boob' parts with his cash to learn to become a detective. He finds that his detective-hero is a thief, and surprises the latter rifling the local postoffice. In the end 'The Boob' finds that he is not so much of a boob after all. There is an element of romance that helps considerably."

"Two Dollar Gloves"

"Two Dollar Gloves" is another Selig drama every bit as good as "The Boob." She never had a cent she could call her own. "Take keer ev' th' pennies an' th' pound's keer fer themselves," was the Old Man's continual admonition. But one day the girl spent a few dollars. She may have squandered the money but Cupid didn't think so. It was an investment that won the love of the wealthiest bachelor in the town!

"Romance and Roses"

Another of the Selig farce comedies that are pleasing movie fans everywhere. Judging from unsolicited letters being received by the Selig Company the Selig Comedies are filling a long-felt want. "Romance and Roses" features a cast of all-star fun makers, including John Lancaster, Lyllian Leighton, Wm. Scott and Irene Wallace.

Facts and Comments

TO exhibitors everywhere we would say that you cannot or should not attempt to stand alone. See the flood of adverse legislation that is directed against the industry from all quarters. If there is a branch of the M. P. E. L. of America in your state get in touch with its officers and become a member. If there is no branch in your state get in touch with several of the prominent exhibitors in your vicinity and start a State or city local of the League. Write National Organizer, Fred J. Herrington, 310 McCance Building, Pittsburgh, Pa., for particulars and do it TO-DAY. Tomorrow a big tax may be saddled on YOU, or useless and expensive censorship. ACT NOW.

I AM not in favor of closing the movies on Sunday. I do not believe people can be forced into going to church. I do not think an attempt should be made to force them to. People must have some form of amusement and people are now going to the movies. They should not be closed, Sunday or any other time." The foregoing statements were made recently by a minister, who is also president of the Moline University Club. Sound, sane commonsense that has the twentieth century ring.

TALK, Talk, Talk and then more Talk. For years we have had talk and nothing but talk from one who poses as a champion of the exhibitor and who represented this paper before gatherings of exhibitors for many a day. But why this endless talk and the putting forward of suggestions that lead nowhere? Exhibitors, you will have to get together and get down to the solid basis of work, of doing things for yourselves, of putting your own shoulders to the wheel in meeting conditions as they arise. No amount of "hot air" will ever help you or get you very much, no matter how flattering or how fine it may sound. Get busy! Do something for yourselves and do it now.

THE Wheeler bill, brought into being to wring revenue from the motion picture business, has been introduced in both houses of the New York legislature and will in all probability be pushed along to final enactment with all possible expedition. The provisions of this measure are so unique and inequitable, not to say indefinite, as to require much careful amending. The theory upon which the heaviest item of tax is levied is fantastic to the last degree and betokens an absolute lack of information upon the object of taxation. A hearing it to be held on Thursday, April 19, at which the strongest protest that can be made should be presented to the committee in charge of the bill.

WHAT have you done, Mr. New York Exhibitor, to inform the senator and representative from your particular district regarding the real sentiment on the Sunday show question? As the matter stands now your senator and your representative are working under the impression that their constituents are overwhelmingly against Sunday pictures because those who oppose the exhibition of pictures on Sunday have written them to that effect. Organizations supporting a strict observance of the Puritan Sabbath have seen to that. Have you done anything to prove the contrary? The Walker bill is now before the New York State legislature, and, if it can be passed, will permit picture theaters to open on Sunday. Just now the chance of its passage is remote because there seems to be no demand by the public for its enactment. If it fails of passage the blame will be yours.

THE successful issue of the third meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers at Atlantic City on April 6 and 7 is a matter of congratulation on the part of those who take deep interest in the chief object of this new association, the standardization of the tools with which motion picture men work. It was a pleasure to those attending to hear technical matters discussed by men who had expert knowledge of their subject. The next session will be held in Chicago in conjunction with the annual meetings of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. The three months intervening will afford good time in which to express in concrete shape the well-defined ideas of those who are in position to outline what is best to be done and to nominate what standards should prevail in the industry,

Efficiency Versus Artistry

By Louis Reeves Harrison

EFFICIENCY is helpful in accomplishing a desired result, and a lot of it has been needed in the regulation of expenditure for motion picture production. Enormous sums have been wasted in the studios and out of them by directors who were accorded unrestrained administration of the financial end and by producers themselves through ignorance of relative values in the product. Very few producers today can closely estimate in advance how much a specified five-reel feature will cost, whereas it is purely a matter of skilled computation with allowances for such contingencies as bad weather and unavoidable delay.

Profit is the natural aim of efficiency of business method, but profit is dependent upon volume and volume upon artistry well advertised, and I do not know of another so destructive to picture values as misdirected frugality. A firm believer in such organized system in business administration as will avoid waste and extravagance, highly appreciating the judicious use of time, material and money in production, I can see clearly where the application of methods highly serviceable in the manufacture of staples defeats its own object in art production.

The application of economic methods begets a habit of mind. Economy is established by constant use and it becomes involuntary after a while, unconscious and almost uncontrollable. I have known a producer to sit down in his office and revise a scenario on which an author has worked with infinite pains and deliberately cut out certain items to save in cost. Wholly unaware that he may be sapping the life blood of the story and depriving it of total effect, he will pare a little here and there, serenely satisfied that he is adding to his profits by eliminating unnecessary waste, whereas his work is merely mutilation.

A well-constructed story is like a well-constructed human body in this respect—it is something the creator of it alone can fully appreciate. To lop a little off the nose, or to chop off a few fingers may not make it inoperative, but it becomes a disfigured and crippled thing, lacking in that completeness of effect which is so satisfying to the beholder. An act of that kind, done from the habit of economy, is the reverse of efficiency, which means bringing to bear requisite knowledge and skill for the sake of an adequate performance, a complete effect.

As well go to a painter of pictures and tell him not to put in so much time on details as to impose wearing restrictions of time upon a really artistic and thoroughly capable director. It would be more like efficiency to relieve him of many burdens by more efficient organization of his assistants and by making possible harmony of relation between him and the author when the latter is within reach. Producers have the habit of expecting too much of directors, loading them down with business administration and even scenario writing in addition to the work for which they are especially fitted. Lack of system is not efficiency.

Specialization is the straight road to effective production. Make the author complete his own scenario, accepting his final judgment on any changes to be made—he is a specialist. Hold the director responsible for picturesque and dramatic visualization of the story, and do not interfere with either, that there may be a sense of responsibility on the part of both. That sense of responsibility is destroyed and replaced by dull and mechanical effort, when the commercial specialist puts his finger into the artistic structure and treatment. It is mainly the cause of the spiritless releases we see too often on the screen.

The creator of an artistic product must put his heart and soul into his imaginative effort, but he cannot do that if he knows in advance that all the pains he must take may be nullified by some man not of his temperament and profession. How enthusiastically would an artist paint, if he knew that some layman might daub his picture before it reached the public, the final judge and critic? It may not be deemed a fair comparison to cite the case of the artist, inasmuch as both author and director participate in the structure and treatment of a screen portrayal, but it will be found that the illustration is good.

Under present conditions author and director in combination represent the painter, the novelist, the dramatist—they stand for the artistry and should be held responsible for the success or failure of their combined effort when they have worked in harmony and approved the complete result. There is no sense of responsibility possible, no spirit, soul and sincerity of feeling in what they do if they know in advance that no care they may bestow upon the creation and materialization of a story can escape commercial mutilation.

By commercial mutilation is meant not only the license exercised by producer and office force with what should be artistry as pure as the painting or piece of sculpture, but with the exactions that the characters should not be made to fit the story and its purposes but the whims of those who are supposed to interpret its meaning, the actors. Now the personality of those who do the interpreting is highly important—it is tremendously interesting to people in front, but real stars need real plays if they are to retain popular favor. The route to a place in the Milky Way is through consistent performance.

There are three or four artists whose names count heavily on the billboard, and these exceptions may get away with some very commonplace vehicles by sheer excess of personality, but even they do better in a really fine product. It is only in a real play, one sincere and complete, that the big artists find big opportunity.

All through the evolution of this new art we are confronted with a lot of false reasoning, sound in appearance only. It deceives no one more than the man who attempts to apply perfectly good business methods for some purposes to pure artistry. It has always been a failure. Publishers no longer attempt to edit a script. They either leave it as it is written, or do not publish it at all. The stage play is often subjected to criticism and change before it is produced, but wholly in the interest of finer artistry. The painter's picture is wholly unchanged.

The screen visualization is part play and part picture. The author's structure and purposes should not be modified without his knowledge and consent, and the director's treatment should be one of beautifully clear and impressive interpretation through types selected to fit the characters. Because this is not done, because producers prove their own inefficiency by tying up with alleged stars, or those in the making, every month sees the downfall of business otherwise well conceived, well managed and capable of being carried to high prosperity.

Organization and Convention Related

By Sam Spedon

THE spirit of organization is abroad in the land, everybody in the industry is waking up to a full appreciation of what might be accomplished by united effort. The pity of it all is we haven't realized it before. At the eleventh hour the president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League is swinging round the circuit to arouse the exhibitors to a realization of the value of organization. We hope he is doing this to bring the exhibitors together in convention at Chicago, two months hence, to elect a man as the head of the League who will work just as hard all the year 'round as he does just before he steps out of office and announces his candidacy for re-election.

The great trouble with organizations of the past has been politices, which means failure. Let us hope that the National Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, at Chicago, will bring together a full representation of delegates from all the organized states, uninstructed, free to use their individual judgment in selecting and electing a man as its president who will be big enough, broad enough and executive enough to work for the good of the industry as a whole and the exhibitors in particular—a man who has no personal motive in seeking the office except for the service he can do the industry and the credit which is justly due him in so doing. Furthermore we hope he will be at liberty to select or have a voice in the selection of an executive staff who will work in harmony with him for the best interest of all.

We have just passed or are about passing through the most trying year of our motion picture existence; if we haven't realized the need of an organized industry we never will. The National Exhibitors' League of America needs a reorganization at Chicago on the most constructive principles and basis possible if it expects to successfully combat the many legislative barriers and discriminations which have confronted the industry this year. We denounce the legislative politics that threaten our industry and yet we tolerate the same character of politics in our own organizations instead of routing them horse and foot. Why not remove the beam from our own eyes if we can see the mote in the other fellow's?

Right here we want to commend the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, with its great possibilities, for its efforts, both in reorganization and the desire to harmonize and benefit the industry. It has profited, no doubt, by past experience, and with its increasing membership everything augurs for a very healthy and helpful organization for the accomplishment of great things for the producers and the industry during its second year, if it has the co-operation and management it needs. It has had no cinch the past nine months.

Much credit is due many of the exhibitors' organizations throughout the country for the manner in which they have opposed successfully and otherwise adverse legislation and handled the several questions dealing directly with their own business affairs. Their efforts have undoubtedly encouraged other states and cities to organize for their protection and welfare.

We must not overlook the F. I. L. M. clubs. They have a very important place in the affairs of the industry and already, while not perfect, have accomplished much good. They occupy a very peculiar position between the producers and the exhibitors, but they serve to bring both closer together in a better understanding in their relations to both.

In summing up the whole matter of the Convention as relating to organization there is one thing all should bear in mind, for all organizations are interested; we must eliminate all factional, personal and selfish motive if we wish to get together for the good of the whole industry. Don't let any one organization or branch of the industry attend with a desire to glorify itself, or let any one go there feeling he is it, with a capital "I." There's the rub. Every organization or part has tried to advertise itself and be the whole thing. Don't forget that the National Association, the National League and all other branches are part and parcel of the whole and we must get together in united concerted action for the good of the whole. We hate to use so trite a phrase, but it is so apt we just can't help it—"United we stand, divided we fall."

A Pertinent Example

ONE of the most pertinent examples of organization was the open meeting of the Exhibitors' League of Greater New York, held at the rooms of local number one Tuesday afternoon. It was held for the discussion of the tax of five dollars a month to be imposed on all theater managers by the Music Author's League of America. There were about one hundred and fifty exhibitors present, members and non-members of the League. Among them were some of the biggest exhibitors in the business. The principal speaker was S. M. Berg, a writer of music. He was followed by J. R. Rubens, attorney for the League, also the orchestra leaders of the Loew theaters, the Rialto and the Strand theaters.

Here was an interest common to all—they were all served with notice by the Authors' League that they would be prosecuted if they used any copyrighted music in their theaters. The consensus of opinion was that the tax was unjust and would not stand a test. It was therefore resolved that the Exhibitors' League would employ council to defend a test case and have the matter settled by a court of law notwithstanding the Supreme Court had ruled that the tax was legal. This was a splendid evidence of organized effort and at the same time gave Lou Blumenthal and Sam Trigger a golden opportunity to set forth the work of the League in its organized effort to contest other unjust measures. At the same time it gave them a chance to urge the exhibitors who were not members of the League to join. At least a dozen new members signed application blanks and enrolled as members.

Slackers and Dodgers

Next to the declaration of war with Germany the most important matter that confronts the motion picture industry is the war against Sunday opening and the threatened tax to be levied on the producers. In the M. P. League we have a man on the firing line at Albany defending our rights and espousing our cause. He has been there seven weeks. During that time he has received $263 from the industry for personal and necessary expenses in looking after our interests. He surely cannot be accused of extravagance or profligacy. He cannot be suspected of graft or bribe. He is making a good stand and accomplished wonders by digging into his own pocket and keeping up an appearance of respectability befitting the great industry he represents and of which he is one. This man was elected as chairman of the legislative committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the State of New York at its convention held at Albany last December to go to the State capital as "Jerry on the job." All the League members throughout the State were to see that he was furnishd with the necessary funds and the National Association was to give a "hand-out." The answer of all this is two hundred and sixty-three dollars. Mr. Anson has fought nobly. Where, oh where are the rest of the great and glorious champions of the industry? Organization is a fine thing to talk about, but what does it profit? There is a whole lot for the National convention to do next July and they can't boast of what has been done the past year.

The evident indifference of the Exhibitors' leaguers and others to their business at Albany would suggest they have no business to defend or it was in such condition they are willing to assist in digging their own graves. They certainly cannot deny the imputation of being "slackers and dodgers."

In Favor of the Pictures

OUR British exchanges to hand this week contain evidence given by the head of the Police Department of Edinburgh, Scotland, at the tenth session of the Cinema Commission of Inquiry that is worth consideration.

The following excerpts are taken from the report of the hearing as they are given in the London moving picture papers, The Cinema and The Bioscope. Roderick Ross, M. V. O., the chief constable of Edinburgh, as he is known, is unqualifiedly in favor of the picture theater, and its influence for good cannot be questioned, in his estimation. We quote from his evidence, as follows:

In the social life of the people during recent years there has been nothing more outstanding and remarkable than the growth and development of the Cinema as a means of public entertainment and amusement.

Not only in large towns, but in country districts, the Cinema has met with phenomenal success, and received the support and patronage of all classes of society.

Secret of Cinema's Popularity.

What, it may be asked, is the reason of the Cinema's popularity?

In my opinion, this is brought about by the fact that the entertainment provided meets with the approbation and approval of the public in respect that an educative, morally wholesome, and bright entertainment is given at a price within the reach of all.

In this undoubtedly lies the secret of the popularity of the Cinema, and from this fact it has, without doubt, come to stay, and is destined to continue as a permanent form of amusement in our midst.

Power for Good in Community.

The Cinema, in consequence of its popularity, must, therefore, of necessity exercise a certain influence either for good or evil in the social life of the community.

In my opinion, the popularity of the Cinema among all classes and conditions of men and women is a guarantee of its power for good in the community. Were the lessons it taught to exercise an influence for evil in the people, that evil would ere now have made itself manifest in some form or other, but such has not been the case.

It is scarcely possible that thousands upon thousands of our citizens could nightly come under an influence detrimental to their moral character without some manifestation, however slight, of the evil inculcated making itself apparent in their conduct and mode of living.

It is my opinion that the Cinema, as a rule, has proved to those who patronize it an educative, morally healthy, and pleasure-giving entertainment.

Pictures Have Reduced Intemperance.

It has also, without doubt, been the means of attracting many who otherwise would have resorted to the public house, and, in this connection, my divisional officers, who have opportunities of judging, emphatically state that the picture houses have been instrumental in reducing intemperance in the city.

No Crime Traced to Pictures.

In some quarters it has been alleged that the exhibition of films which showed burglars and other criminals at work have been the means of inciting boys to emulate the example given by committing crime. No such case has come to my knowledge or to the knowledge of my detective officers. I, however, consider that there is grave danger in such representations. Boys are generally of an adventurous disposition, and ever ready to emulate anything in the way of an example which would afford them vent for the inherent love of adventure which is in their nature.

Unable to Find Single Case.

It has been frequently alleged that juvenile crime was due to love of the Cinema on the part of boys who took to stealing for the purpose of procuring money to pay for admission to the picture house, thus gratifying their insatiable desires in this direction. I am unable to find a single case where any juvenile set out to steal for this one purpose. I admit that the proceeds of several thefts have been spent on the Cinema, but this fact cannot be brought as a fault against the picture houses. In most instances I have found that the proceeds of theft by juveniles have gone to satisfy their fondness or craze for gambling, which is more in keeping with their vicious tendencies than witnessing an exhibition of living pictures.

Independent of the Cinema, boys will continue to steal and to devote the proceeds of their dishonesty to whatever purpose may take their fancy. I am satisfied that so far as Edinburgh is concerned, the Cinema, in this respect and as a means of inciting the commission of crime on the part of juveniles, has had little or no effect on the crime committed by children and young persons.

I have shown the foregoing statement of evidence to the Chief Constables of Dundee and Aberdeen, and they concur therein.

This testimony by the Chief of Police of the well-known Scotch city, the testimony being concurred in and approved by the Chiefs of Police of two other large cities, is expert evidence of men who know whereof they speak. We commend these statements to theater managers and exhibitors as the best possible material with which to meet the arguments of those who would blame the pictures for every crime committed. No better evidence can be produced to show that the influence of the moving picture is overwhelmingly on the side of all that is good and helpful.

ADVERTISERS WORK WITH MAYOR'S DEFENSE COMMITTEE.

The efforts of the National Duty Committee of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers are directed at present toward one specific object—the preparation of New York City for the Wake Up America Day, which has been designated by the Mayor's Defense Committee as April 19.

For this purpose the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers has combined its forces with those of the Mayor's committee, and temporary offices for this purpose have been taken in the room now occupied by that committee at 50 East Forty-second street.

At the regular meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at Keene's Chop House on Thursday John Harvey, of the Mayor's committee, was a guest of the A. M. P. A., and outlined the work which the Mayor's committee has already done, and the opportunity for co-operation which existed with the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers.

A cordial invitation to co-operate with this committee both in national and local matters was extended to Mr. Harvey, and a committee, consisting of President Arthur James, B. P. Schulberg, P. A. Parsons, Paul Gulick and Julian Solomon, was appointed to meet with the representatives of the Mayor's Defense Committee immediately after the adjourning of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers.

"HIS WEDDING NIGHT."

It has been decided that the comedy two-reeler to follow "The Butcher Boy" featuring Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle, which will be released by Paramount to all exhibitors on April 23, will be "His Wedding Night," with the rotund comedian in the chief role. "His Wedding Night," which was written by Herbert Warren and William Jefferson, will be the second made under the new business affiliations of Arbuckle and Joseph M. Schenck.

Wheeler Bill, Amended, Is Introduced

By C. L. Grant

Many Changes in Schedules of License Fees and Supplemental Taxes---Will Increase Price of Admissions

CHARACTERIZED by a number of important eleventh hour changes, including a reduction in the amount of the proposed license fee for distributors from $300 to $200, and likewise a decrease in the proposed footage tax by nearly one-half, the Wheeler bill was introduced in the Legislature at Albany on Thursday, April 12. Senator Carson, a member of the Wheeler committee, looked after the interests of the bill in the Senate while Assemblyman Wheeler himself saw to the introduction of the bill in the lower house. It is expected that a hearing will be held on the bill within the next few days.

In sharp contrast to the original draft of the bill, a summary of which was presented in the last issue of the Moving Picture World, the remodeled measure carried with it certain changes that came as the result of several conferences between members of the Wheeler committee and the attorneys, Senator Harvey Hinman and Roger P. Clark, as well as Messrs. Cummings and Rude, of the State Bill Drafting Commission. During the past week Assemblyman Wheeler held several lengthy conversations over the telephone with men in New York City who are prominently identified with the motion picture industry in one phase or another.

The Commissioner of Motion Pictures in this State will receive the fat salary of $7,000 a year and expenses while out of Albany, according to the bill. The commissioner will be required to furnish bonds to the amount of $20,000, but he has the naming of his secretary and the salary which that individual as well as deputies and others will receive for their labors. Governor Charles S. Whitman will name the first commissioner if the bill is passed.

Members of the committee realize that with a bill of so vital a nature to the motion picture business in all its branches that a public hearing will unquestionably be imperative. They likewise admit that with some of the radical measures proposed the bill can hardly have a rosy path, even though it is now the expectation of the legislators to wind up matters and adjourn on April 27. In a desire to be fair to all parties concerned, and likewise to the State in its efforts to increase its revenues, Assemblyman Wheeler asserts that if a demand is made for a hearing that one will be held with ample notice given through the press so that all sides can be represented.

Aside from the reduction in the fee for distributors and the footage tax, as well as naming the salary which shall be attached to the head of the new department, the other changes in the revamped bill are mainly of a technical nature, consisting mainly of a change of word here or there, without altering the original intent of the measure.

In the first draft it was proposed to tax the distributors a straight $300. The unfairness of this burden to that branch of the industry was explained and made clear to the committee, with the result that it was reduced to $200, while the footage tax underwent a similar change in the hopes of enhancing the bill's chances when it came to a vote.

The bill calls upon the producer to pay an annual tax of $200 and a supplemental fee for each positive print for exhibition within this State of a picture made by the producer within the State, the additional tax being based on the footage cost of the negative of the positive print.

The distributor's license fee is fixed at $200 a year and a supplemental fee for each positive print for exhibition in this State except a positive in which a supplemental producer's fee is payable. The amount of the license tax to be paid by the exhibitor, based on the seating capacity of the house, has not been changed.

The supplemental license fees as they are now proposed, based on the cost of producing the negative, are as follows:

If $2 or less, one-fourth of a cent per foot.

If more than $2 and not more than $3, one-half of a cent per foot.

If more than $3 and not more than $4, three-fourths of a cent a foot.

If more than $4 and not more than $5, one cent per foot.

If more than $5 and not more than $6, one and one-fourth cents per foot.

If more than $6 and not more than $7, one and one-half cents per foot.

If more than $7 and not more than $8, one and three-fourths cents a foot.

If more than $8 and not more than $10, two and one-fourth cents a foot.

If more than $10 and not more than $12, two and three-fourth cents a foot.

If more than $12 and not less than $14, three and one-fourth cents a foot.

If more than $14 and not more than $16, three and three-fourths cents a foot.

If more than $16, four and one-fourth cents a foot.

In connection with the powers given the Commissioner of Motion Pictures, the bill sets forth that in connection with investigations, the commissioner can subpoena witnesses and compel the production of necessary papers and books. The commissioner will also have to submit an annual report to the Legislature covering the work done and other features of the industry in this State.

Wheeler Bill Will Increase Admission Prices.

Increased admission prices will be charged if the Wheeler bill passes the Legislature. A representative of the Moving Picture World visited the cities of Albany, Utica, Syracuse, Rome and Watertown during the past few days and in conversation with exhibitors in the five cities he found an almost unanimous sentiment in favor of increased admissions. If the producers and distributors are compelled to pay the additional taxes called for by the bill, it is clearly up to the exhibitor to pay more for the film which he will use. If the exhibitor is forced to pay more at a time when in many cities the leases have increased, he in turn will look to the people to meet their share in the general increase.

In Watertown during the last two or three weeks one of the houses has already jumped the admission price from 10 to 15 cents, while another now charges 15 cents when special features are shown. Alexander Papayanokos, who now owns three of the five motion picture houses in the city, and is about to open a new and much larger one, in discussing the situation a few days ago said that if higher prices were to be charged for the film that he would be forced to jump his admission prices to at least 15 cents. Other exhibitors expressed like sentiments.

In the other cities the exhibitors asserted that the Wheeler bill would prove extremely detrimental to all phases of the industry, forcing the producers into other States and at the same time compelling the general public to pay more for their amusement. Theatrical men are also up in arms against the bill on the grounds that they were being taxed to death these days, and that they were now being called upon to suffer, simply through exorbitant expenditures on the part of the State demanding additional revenue, and that every nook and corner of the business world was being searched in a wholesale effort to glean a few more dollars, regardless of the effect on the industry, to reimburse the State.

Hearing on Wheeler Bill

Judiciary Committee Sets Thursday, April 19, at 2 o'clock P. M.—President Brady of National Association Gathering His Forces.

THERE will be a hearing of the Wheeler tax bill at Albany on Thursday, April 19, at 2 P. M. W. A. Brady, president of the National Association, has issued a call for all branches of the industry to send representatives to attend the hearing. He says the bill is discriminating, inequitable, confiscatory and unjust. If this bill passes the New York State Legislature it is probable that other States will follow in its wake and means ruination to the business if it becomes a law.

This measure will impose taxation upon the industry amounting to one million dollars annually. The whole tenure of the bill is a direct contradiction of the statistics submitted to the Wheeler Investigating Committee and a tentative understanding at the time that the committee would recommend a conservative and very moderate tax, if any, on the motion picture industry. Quick action and a hard battle confront the industry to counteract the recommendations of this bill.

Sunday Bill Reported

Senate Codes Committee Takes Favorable Action on Walker Bill.

BY A VOTE of 5 to 4 the Walker bill legalizing Sunday motion picture shows was reported out of the Senate Codes committee at Albany late Tuesday afternoon, April 10th, and was handed up in the Senate on the following day. It will probably come to a vote within the next ten days. With the exception of Senator Peter M. Daley, all members of the Senate Codes committee were present at the meeting, which lasted from 4 until 7 o'clock. In the final line-up, when the vote was taken in regard to reporting out the bill, all upstate Senators were found to be solid against such a movement. A surprise came when Senators Gilchrist and Murphy, both of Brooklyn, voted with Senators Charles D. Newton and George A. Slater against reporting the bill out of committee. It was generally supposed that Senators Gilchrist and Murphy would follow the action of other metropolitan senators, the bill having been framed by Senator James J. Walker of New York.

According to information which leaked out of the meeting, there was plenty of discussion before the vote was taken. Senator George B. Wellington of Troy expressed himself in favor of a wide open Sunday. Senator Slater, in discussing the bill at the meeting, said that he was in favor of a continuance of the American Sabbath without giving the day a greater latitude by legalizing Sunday movies and similar forms of amusement.

"This measure is one that is not requested by people in general," said Senator Slater, "but by persons who are interested in the motion picture business from a money standpoint. If we break down this barrier by legalizing Sunday motion picture shows it is but a short step to destroying other barriers which protect our Sabbath day. The opening of motion picture shows on Sundays creates a rival to the churches and so long as religion and the church form the base of protection to society the observance of the Sabbath should be strengthened rather than lessened. It should be continued as a day of rest. Westchester county in its large cities finds that motion picture shows on Sunday are not a necessity, and so when I vote against reporting the bill out of committee I do so in the belief that I am not only representing Westchester county but the entire State as well."

Senator Newton said that his entire district was against legalizing Sunday motion picture shows and that he would act accordingly. Senator Walker championed the bill throughout the discussion. When it came to a vote Senators George B. Wellington, Robert R. Lawson and S. A. Cotillo threw their forces with Senator Walker, Senator Daley voting with the majority on the day following. The four who took a negative stand were Senators Newton, Slater, Gilchrist and Murphy, the latter two, while not explaining their changed attitude, evidently having received communications from their constituents which they observed.

There is very little probability of the bill being passed. In the first place Senator Elon R. Brown, Republican leader of the Senate, had expressed himself against the measure, not openly as yet, but to certain senators who are against the bill. It is also a very well known fact that practically every upstate senator has received protests in sufficient number from residents of their respective districts that from a political standpoint they cannot ignore. The outcome of the bill is being awaited with interest at the State Capitol, owing to the fact that some of the New York legislators have expressed the belief that they can secure the assistance of Buffalo and swing the measure through to victory.

C. L. GRANT.

ANOTHER STATE HEARD FROM ON SUNDAY OPENING.

Right on top of the announcement that the Walker bill favoring Sunday opening had been favorably reported out of the Senate codes committee of the New York State legislature, the National Association of the moving picture industry received the gratifying announcement from Iowa that the Senate had passed, by a vote of 27 to 17, a bill permitting motion picture shows on Sunday in that State.

COULTER COMES EAST TO PRODUCE.

C. R. Coulter, of Seattle, Wash., who has been exploiting state right features for the past seven years in the Northwest, will soon start East and, in company with New York associates, will begin the production of a big attraction. Mr. Coulter has bought an interest in the Peter Pan Film Company, which has the United States rights for the Motoy comedies.

Triangle to Abolish "Deposit" System

Distributing Corporation Makes Arrangements With Fidelity and Casualty Corporation to Bo. d Exhibitors.

TRIANGLE is about to put into operation a new system of bonding exhibitors, which is designed to do away with the necessity of requiring advance deposits. Speaking of this new policy, R. W. France, general manager of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, said:

"This is one of the steps Triangle is taking to assist the Triangle exhibitor, leaving him greater freedom to devote to the exhibiting problems which constitute his legitimate work in the industry. It is also Triangle's way of keeping the pledge made to the Indiana M. P. E. L. on December 6, 1916. At that time we made this statement: 'The principal need of a deposit is to provide against sudden and unfair discontinuances by theaters at such times or in such manner as to cause film to lie idle. * * * If we can work out, or if anybody else can work out, a plan that will make the deposit system unnecessary, we will gratefully adopt it.'

"Doubtless the trade took this to be one of those glib 'promises' that are easier to make than to keep, but Triangle officials have been busily engaged in arranging the details of this reform ever since. We are happy to say that we are now in a position to make good our words.

"Beginning April 30, and extending to all accounts as fast as the actual labor of rewriting the old contracts will permit, exhibitors may apply their deposits against current service; and in lieu of deposit to secure this corporation against abuse of contracts we have perfected arrangements with the Fidelity and Casualty Company, of New York, whereby for a nominal sum it will underwrite the contract made by the exhibitor and become security for the correct performance of all his obligations under the contract. Under these circumstances the only remaining advantage of the deposit system would be the free financing of our proposition by the exhibitors, a service this corporation has never needed and does not want.

"The premiums which the exhibitor will have to pay per year will only average 1 per cent of one month's deposit under the present system."

Mr. France also wishes to make it clear that this new plan is entirely elastic. If for any reason any exhibitor prefers not to use it the old system is always available to him. New contract forms embodying this new option, he said, were now in the press; the premiums charged by the bonding company are very small. They are on an annual basis, and if a contract be canceled in accordance with its terms a pro-rata return premium to the exhibitor will be made.

WASHINGTON THEATER MANAGERS HOLD MONTHLY MEETING.

The Washington State Theater Managers' Association held its regular monthly meeting April 2 in the Central Building, Seattle. It was a closed session, and the secretary reported no definite results of the meeting. Most of the time was spent in a discussion of the deposit system. After adjournment the exhibitors were invited by Manager F. C. Quimby, of Pathe, to the exhibition room in the same building to view the new Gold Rooster Play in Pathecolor, "Mayblossom," starring Pearl White. After seeing the picture the showmen pronounced it the most beautiful colored picture that they had ever seen.

Those present at the meeting were Edgar Milne, Pantages theater, Seattle; Edward J. Fisher, Fisher Booking Company, Seattle; John von Herberg, Liberty theater, Seattle; J. O. Clemmer, Clemmer theater, Seattle; H. T. Moore, Colonial theater, Tacoma; A. Anderson, Apollo theater, Tacoma; John Hamrick, Rex theater, Seattle; D. Geddes, Ye College theater, Seattle; W. W. Kastner, Princess theater, Seattle; C. E. McKee, Orpheum theater, Everett; E. A. Rupert, Dream theater, Aberdeen; E. H. Smith, Colonial theater, Seattle; A. Allen, Vaudette theater, Tacoma; M. Zelinsky, Favorite theater, Tacoma; Walter McNish, Bijou theater, Tacoma; E. A. Calvert, Movie theater, Tacoma; George Sauriel, Orpheum theater, Tacoma; George Ring, Society theater Seattle; Joseph Danz, Imperial theater, Seattle.

EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE ORGANIZER.

In answer to recent inquiries in regard to the Exhibitors' League Organizations and for the information of exhibitors in any of the States, readers will kindly note that Fred J. Herrington is National Organizer for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. All correspondence on the subject may be addressed to him at 310 McCance Building, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Big Exhibitors Form Co-operative Association

Organize First National Exchange Circuit, with the Object of Buying Non-Program Features Direct From Producers.

With the object of eliminating the middleman in handling state rights subjects, for the purpose of dealing at first hand with the producer, many of the most prominent exhibitors of the country and Canada have organized the First National Exchange Circuit. The first meeting of the association will be held in New York next week, at which time two directors will be chosen from the Pacific Coast, two from the Atlantic Coast, and three from the states intervening. General offices will be maintained in New York.

Work has been proceeding on the organization for several months. The idea originated on the West Coast. Those who have been prominent in the formation of the new association are T. L. Tally of Los Angeles, Turner & Dahnken of San Francisco and J. D. Williams of Australia. The latter and E. B. Johnson, secretary of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, have been particularly active in the work preliminary to the coming meeting.

The composition of the membership is impressive. Practically all of the subscribers to the agreement are men or firms with circuits of theaters. It is understood that the idea is not to form a closed corporation, there being no restrictions placed upon any of the members to enter the market individually at any time for the purchase of a picture for their own account.

Those composing the First National Exchange Circuit are T. L. Tally of Los Angeles, Turner & Dahnken of San Francisco, Jensen & Von Herberg of Seattle, Greater Theaters Amusement Company of Portland, Silver Bow Amusement Company of Butte, Mont.; Swanson & Nolan of Salt Lake City, Saxe Brothers of Milwaukee, Robert Leiber of Minneapolis, E. Mandelbaum of Cleveland, J. H. Kunsky of Detroit, Josiah Pearce of New Orleans, William Sievers of St. Louis, Colonel Fred Levy of Louisville, E. A. Hulsey of Dallas, A. H. Blank of Des Moines, Jake and Otto Wells of Atlanta, Tom Moore of Washington, D. C.; Frank G. Hall of Newark, N. J.; Rialto Theater Corporation of New York City, Clark & Rowland of Pittsburgh, Jones, Linick & Schaefer and Ascher Brothers of Chicago, Weiss & Nichols of Victoria, for western Canada, and W. H. Brouse of Toronto, for eastern Canada. This list, as will be noted, covers the country with the exception of New England, and it is announced that by the time of the first meeting that territory will be accounted for.

The scheme of operation, as outlined last week by one of the members of the new association, is for the allotment on a percentage basis of territory to each of the foregoing franchise holders or stockholders. When a film is purchased from a producer each member pays his percentage price. He then owns that film for his own territory, to do with as he wishes. Each member will sell sub-franchises to the theaters in his own district, these subsidiary transactions being also on a percentage basis, surrounding conditions determining the amount to be paid.

It is not the aim of the association to put any one out of business, it is stated. It is simply a question of obtaining a more economical distribution, to bring the large exhibitors and the producers together. "What we want to do is to pay the producers proper prices, to allow them a fair profit," said one of the members. "We will get quick and efficient, as well as economical distribution. The producer is always assured of a ready market for his big stuff, with his money on the spot. It will give assurance to those who would undertake more pretentious productions by reason of this fact. I don't mind telling you that the manufacturers are heartily in favor of the project. As indicating this, I may mention a number of them have told me they are holding back several large subjects waiting for us to get under way. It is their belief that they can do business with us much more efficiently and profitably than under present conditions.

"Best of all, the proposition will have to stand on its own merits. No member of the association will be debarred from doing business in any way he wishes."

Trade Luncheon at Portland, Ore.

Exchange Men Feed Exhibitors and all Hands Boost Home Exchanges—Plan Convention.

At an elaborate luncheon, given by the Exhibitors' League and paid for by the city's exchanges, at the Hotel Benson, Portland, Ore., April 2, a feeling of goodfellowship was engendered and a spirit of co-operation evidenced such as never before displayed in the history of film men's organizations in Portland and Oregon.

"Patronize home industry" was the sentiment that pervaded throughout the meeting. It was pointed out that of the thousands of dollars sent to Seattle each week in payment of film service by Portland theaters, hardly a cent of it was ever returned for Portland circulation, and that Seattle exchanges threw Portland's censorship burden directly on the city's first run exhibitors. From the feeling expressed at the luncheon, it is evident that the first feature concern that locates a permanent representative in Portland will get a monopoly on the feature business here, other things being equal.

"Portland is a logical distributing point for the Pacific Northwest territory," said G. A. Metzger, manager of the Film Supply Company, handling the Universal Product in Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana. "The territory is triangular in shape, with Portland, Seattle and Spokane at the vertices. To illustrate that Portland is a logical distributing point: Films shipped from Seattle lose one day en route to Southern Oregon. Portland can ship south at midnight and reach the destination at the same time films shipped from Seattle in the morning would reach it. The same rule applies to films shipped as far East as La Grande.

"However, main offices of film companies in the East must be shown that it pays to maintain an office in Portland notwithstanding its logical location, and it is up to Portland and Oregon exhibitors to patronize Portland exchanges or Portland will be only a whistling point as far as film distribution is concerned. The burden of long distance film shipment falls on the exhibitor."

A resolution was adopted that exhibitors should favor exchanges having representatives in Portland, and a committee was selected to work out a plan to induce film concerns not having representation in Portland to locate a permanent office here.

New Quarters Are Lavish.

After the luncheon the meeting adjourned to the Hotel Benson to resume at the new quarters of the league in the Majestic Theater building. The big room has been decorated and finished in elegant style.

Speeches were made by the officers, C. W. Meighan presiding. It was announced that M. B. Haish, of Haish and Cotter, Baker, Oregon, had been selected as fifth vice-president.

Convention May 14.

Plans were laid for the state convention of exhibitors to be held in Portland May 14. This is the first state convention of Oregon exhibitors ever proposed, and from the enthusiasm shown it promises to be a big one.

Herrington Visits Philadelphia

National Organizer Joins Philadelphia Exhibitors at Luncheon—Charles H. Goodwin Appointed State Secretary.

THE Exhibitors' League of Philadelphia gave a luncheon last Friday at Soulas' Hotel, Philadelphia, Pa., in honor of Fred J. Herrington, the national organizer. The chief object of Mr. Herrington's visit here was to inform the local league of the coming state convention, which will be held in Philadelphia, sometime during the month of June. Mr. Herrington also appointed Charles H. Goodwin State Secretary to succeed the late James Delves.

At its regular meeting held on Friday the League unanimously endorsed Mr. Herrington's proposals and passed a resolution to affiliate with the national body.

Mr. Herrington took occasion to refer at the luncheon to a bill which is pending in Harrisburg, to prohibit children under the age of fifteen years from attending motion picture theaters unless accompanied by an adult. He made an eloquent plea for concerted action against the proposed legislation, and pointed out the dangers which the enactment would bring about. A similar law which is in effect in New York State has resulted in young girls requesting strange men to buy them tickets for the theaters and to accompany them in The obvious danger to innocent children resulting from such practices he said, were too plain to be disregarded.

Mr. Herrington pointed out that censorship and other laws which work to the detriment of the motion picture business, have been primarily due to the lax methods of certain exhibitors indifferent to their own best interests.

President John O'Donnell, of the local league, is determined to fight the new bill to a finish and expects to have the league solid in his support.

G. R. Meeker, manager of the World Film Corporation, also spoke at the luncheon and said that there was much need of such organizations as the League. He pointed out that the motion picture business had outgrown the demand and that co-operation was vitally necessary for successful distribution. The problem, he said, was one that manufacturers were carefully studying.

Ben Shindler supplied the excellent orchestra for the occasion, which kept the diners in a merry mood.

Those present included: John O'Donnell, George Fischer, Al. Fischer, Philip Greenburg, Benjamin Amsterdam, Benjamin Shindler, John Conway, Charles H. Goodwin, Herbert Lewis, George Haererich, George Nadascher, A. D. Resnick, George Bubeck, Charles Rapaporte, W. W. Auck, W. S. Boyd, Harry Burman, Sam Green, Sam Blatt, George Carey and Abram Nace.

A resolution offering the League's support to Mayor Smith for any purpose of the Home Defense League was also passed.

Minneapolis Convention

Committee in Charge Reports Arrangements Completed—Program of Proceedings.

DAVID G. RODGERS, chairman of the convention committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest, announces that all arrangements have been completed for the sixth annual convention scheduled for Minneapolis, May 1, 2, 3.

President Gilosky has made an emphatic ruling which will certainly tend to facilitate matters at the coming convention in Minneapolis two weeks hence. He has ruled that every exhibitor intending to bring up any matters on the convention floor must have same typewritten, double-spaced, with a duplicate to cover every resolution or constitutional amendment. This rule will be strictly adhered to so as to avoid confusion and waste of the convention's time.

Mr. Rodgers made an eloquent talk before the film exchanges the previous Tuesday and at last Tuesday (April 10) afternoon's meeting of the exhibitors his recommendations were adopted unanimously.

W. K. Howard, manager of the Vitagraph Exchange, and Harry Rathner, of the Supreme and Selznick Exchange, appeared before the exhibitors last Tuesday and each tendered a subscription of one hundred dollars to help entertain the visiting exhibitors. These exchange men were very frank and stated that they did not expect any special consideration for their subscription and commended the exhibitors' corporation for the independent spirit it had shown.

Thomas J. Hamlin, chairman of the publicity committee, offered the following program for the convention and same was unanimously adopted:

TUESDAY, MAY 1—10 A. M.

Convention called to order by President Gilosky in the Colonial Room, West Hotel; President appoints a Credentials Committee of Three; Mayor's Speech of Welcome; President's Report of Year; Treasurer's Report of Year; Secretary's Report of Year, which also includes the reports of all standing committees.

2 P. M.—Convention, Colonial Room; Report of Committee on Credentials; Report of Committee on Constitution and By-Laws; Report of Committee on Resolutions.

8 P. M.—Banquet, Moorish Room, West Hotel.

THURSDAY, MAY 3—10 A. M.

Convention, Colonial Room; Parcel Post Representatives; National League Officers; Trade Journal Representatives; Exchange and Supply House Representatives.

2 P. M.—Nomination and Election of Officers.

8 P. M.—Grand Ball (Formal) in Moorish Room. Dansant (Informal) in Pheasant Room, West Hotel, Movie Stars' Reception.

The exchanges were requested to appoint a committee of five to serve on the Reception Committee of the coming convention.

There will positively be no charge for the various entertainments this year and every exhibitor who is a members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest, whether he lives in Montana or the Twin Cities, will receive one combination ticket admitting him to all entertainments free of charge. The visiting exhibitors have heretofore been charged $2.50 for the course tickets.

Each film exchange and supply house that contributed toward the entertainment of the delegates will receive two course tickets complimentary. To others who desire to attend the entertainments the course tickets will cost $3. Single tickets to each of the entertainments, collectively, would amount to $3.50, as the banquet and $1 for the ball. It is predicted that this convention will exceed the combined attendance of the last three conventions.

All the trade journals will be provided with tables just outside the convention hall and their press representatives will have a long press table at their disposal inside the hall.

The Illinois Censorship Bill

Trickery Practised in the Holding of the Final Chicago Meeting—Adolph Powell, Chicago Exhibitors, Exceeds His Authority.

By James S. McQuade.

THE closing paragraph of my report of the hearings made for and against the Illinois censorship bill in Chicago on Monday, April 2, which appeared in the issue of April 21, read as follows:

"Chairman Thomas Curran adjourned the meeting at 5 o'clock p. m., announcing that the next meeting will be held some day during the week of April 9, at the same place, the date to be announced later."

I made note of the chairman's reference to the coming meeting, so that no mistake could have been made about it.

I inquired several times during the close of the week of Monday, April 2, if anything had been heard about the date of this meeting, but was unable to gain any information. On Monday, April 9, I 'phoned Joseph Hopp, president of the Chicago Local, asking if he had heard when the next meeting would be called. Much to my surprise he stated that the meeting had been held Saturday, April 7, from 2:30 p. m. until 4 o'clock, but that he had not been advised and had not been in attendance.

Further investigation revealed that only four exhibitors were present at this meeting, including Adolph Powell, M. A. Chovnski, William E. Heaney and M. S. Johnson, and each of these men has explained that he had not been advised, but that somehow he had been under the impression that a meeting would be held that date, as announced by Chairman Curran.

There were also present at the meeting of Saturday, April 7, Miss Harriet Vittum, who opposed the State censorship bill, and a large number of women who were proponents of the bill.

M. S. Johnson, one of the exhibitors present, informed me that Mr. Powell assumed leadership at this meeting, acting as chief speaker for the exhibitors.

Mr. Powell represented to the sub-committee of the Legislature on License and Miscellany that he was a member of the Exhibitors' League and also a member of the political action committee which had charge of the matter of censorship, also that he had just come from Nathan Ascher's office and that he represented Mr. Ascher in the matter of censorship. He also asserted that he was considered a good judge of moving pictures and that his opinion was held in high value in such matters.

His whole speech was strongly in favor of state censorship of moving pictures, and at its close the women proponents of the bill surrounded him and almost smothered him with congratulations.

Mr. Powell was then presented with a copy of the Guy Guernsey bill, with the understanding that he would go over it very carefully with Mr. Guernsey and suggest amendments wherever he thought necessary.

From what I can gather, it seems as if the meeting of April 7 will be the last held in Chicago by the Legislative sub-committee, but I have been informed that other meetings will be held by the sub-committee throughout the state and at Springfield, after which the bill will be brought up for passage in the House.

When President Joseph Hopp learned of Mr. Powell's action at this meeting he instructed the secretary of the executive committee of the Chicago Local to write a letter to Mr. Powell summoning him to appear before a joint meeting of the executive committee and of the committee on advance deposits on films, which happened to take place Tuesday afternoon, April 10, at league headquarters in the Masonic Temple. That Mr. Powell received this letter was confirmed by Mr. Schoenstadt, his partner in the Rex theater, who said over the 'phone that Mr. Powell had received the letter, but that he would not attend the meeting, acting under Mr. Schoenstadt's advice.

Mr. Powell's slight on the special committee, appointed by President Hopp to take charge of all matters concerning the Illinois censorship bill, has aroused considerable animus among members of the Chicago Local. The members of this special committee are Joseph Hopp, Alfred Hamburger, William T. Heaney, William J. Sweeney and Fred W. Hartman. This committee had full charge of the matter and superseded any authority which the political action committee might have had.

During an interview, President Hopp spoke as follows on Mr. Powell's action:

"When Mr. Powell went before the sub-committee of the Legislature on License and Miscellany, and stated that he, as a member of the Exhibitors' League and as a member of the political action committee, which had the matter of censorship in hand, was in favor of the proposed Guernsey state censorship bill, he grossly misrepresented matters. The special committee appointed by me for that particular purpose had the censorship bill in hand.

"Only members who were duly authorized by the special censorship committee had the right to speak for the League on the matter, and Mr. Powell was not so authorized.

"This action of Mr. Powell is contrary to the repeatedly expressed will of the League, and he will be removed as a member of the political action committee.

"In my opinion the attitude of Mr. Powell seems ascribable to only one motive, and that is, he hopes in the event of the passage of the Guernsey bill to get one of the jobs that will go with it.

"It is most regrettable that Mr. Powell preferred to curry the favor of the ladies who supported the Guernsey bill and of its other proponents, rather than to remain loyal to the expressed will of the League."

Mr. Hopp and I interviewed Nathan Ascher regarding the statement made by Mr. Powell at the meeting, but Mr. Ascher denied that Powell represented him or the Ascher Bros. on censorship or on any other matter.

There is no doubt in the minds of Chicago exhibitors that the members of the House sub-committee on License and Miscellany were not anxious to have a full body of the opponents of the proposed bill present at the meeting of Saturday, April 7. Of one thing the members of this sub-committee can be assured; the vast majority of exhibitors throughout Illinois are strongly against the measure, and so also are the big producers of moving pictures in Chicago and elsewhere.

I first met Adolph Powell in April, 1910, when I was Chicago representative of the Film Index. Mr. Powell was then manager and owner of the Ideal theater, Kokomo, Ind., and he took a great deal of interest in his film service and in the presentation of his pictures.

About three years later Mr. Powell removed to Chicago, where he is now manager and half owner of the Rex theater.

Motion Picture Prosperity to Continue

So Declares President Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation—Pledges Aid of His Company to Government.

THE war upon which the United States is entering will have no injurious influence upon the motion picture industry, declares President John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation. Mr. Freuler has issued a statement to the exhibitors of the country in which he calls upon the film men to lend to the government all the aid that lies in their large power. In expression of the attitude of the Mutual the head of that organization has wired President Wilson as follows:

"In behalf of the Mutual Film Corporation, an institution in intimate contact with the sixteen thousand motion picture theaters of the United States, I offer you our services in communicating your policies and the will of the government of the United States to the people through the medium of the picture screen."

"To those exhibitors who may feel a slight apprehension of the commercial effect of the war let me offer reassurance," says Mr. Freuler. "The war history of the motion picture industry of the European countries now in conflict shows a remarkable prosperity for the theater. The picture theaters have nothing to fear from a state of war. People will look to the theaters with a renewed interest. Let us put picture power behind the President."

Winifred Allen Featured by Triangle

WINIFRED ALLEN, who will be co-starred with Jack Devereaux in "The Man Who Made Good," second Triangle picture to be completed at the new Yonkers studio, has aroused the interest of Allan Dwan by her clever work, and it is said that she will be retained for other roles under Dwan's personal supervision.

Miss Allen was born in New Rochelle and after graduating from the local public schools, studied for some time at the Art Students' League. Her father was a New Englander and her mother Irish, but Winifred proudly insists that she is all Celt without a trace of the cold Puritanic blood of her paternal ancestor. Both of her parents died while she was still in school, and she and her sister took a studio together in New York. Work was now a stern necessity, so her modeling board and clay were regretfully put aside, and Winifred sought an engagement as a motion picture actress.

Winifred Allen.

Rapidly winning promotion, it was not long before she was intrusted with important parts. Before joining the Triangle forces she had played opposite William Elliott in "When We Were Twenty-one," with Jack Pickford in "Seventeen" and with Lou-Tellegen in "The Long Trail."

Winifred Allen is one of the smallest leading women now appearing on the screen. She stands 4 feet 11 inches in high-heeled shoes, and tips the beam at 100 pounds in her furs. She is a brunette of vivid coloring and sparkling hazel eyes. Her director also declares that she possesses a natural aptitude for motion picture acting which should carry her into general favor.

Urges Standardization of Cameras

Paper Read Before the Society of Motion Picture Engineers at the Atlantic City Session by Carl Louis Gregory, F. R. P. S.

THE rapid growth of the motion picture industry has made it a difficult problem for manufacturers of motion picture apparatus to keep pace with the growing demands of the industry. The manufacturing problems have paralleled in many respects those of the automobile industry, but have by no means kept pace with them. It was only with the standardization of parts and with the adoption of a standard method of measurements and specifications that the automobile industry was able to reach the development that it has today. The American Society of Automobile Engineers was probably the largest factor in bringing about the standards in usee in the automobile industry. It has, every year since its formation, helped in the elimination of freak designs and in rendering obsolete the unnecessary duplication of parts in odd sizes.

The old idea of a manufacturer who would compel a customer to replace every part of a car from parts manufactured in that particular factory by making as many of the parts as possible of a different size from that of any other manufacturer is one which has never met with the approval of the consumer. If a car owner wished to use a different spark plug or piston ring than that supplied by the manufacturer of his car it did not improve his state of mind to find that no other make of spark plug or piston ring would fit. No manufacturer ever benefited by this selfish attitude, for as soon as he had turned out enough of his odd sizes to make a market every other accessories maker turned to and made an odd size to fit it. This duplication of parts entailed more machinery, higher costs and consequently bigger prices for the consumer to pay.

Although it would seem at first inspection that the fact that the size of the film is practically an international standard and would therefore militate against an undue multiplication of parts in the film business, still we find on closer inspection that affairs are as bad or worse than they were at one time in the manufacture of gasoline vehicles. It is to be hoped that the Society of Motion Picture Engineers may do the same service for the motion picture industry that the American Society of Automobile Engineers is doing for the automobile industry.

One of the first things to put in order out of the chaos of filmdom is a comprehensive and comprehensible list of specifications by which a camera may be described. No manufacturer of automobiles would think of issuing a catalogue describing his car without including a full and detailed list of specifications. Yet none of the camera manufacturers has seemed to think this necessary in the catalogues describing their cameras. They often elaborate to great extent on some one feature or another, but slide gracefully out of describing some of the essentials which they have left out of the catalogue, and generally left out of the camera also.

The camera is the keystone in the arch of picturedom. Without the camera the whole structure must fall to the ground. It is therefore of the utmost importance that the first atttention of this august body be directed to the vital centre upon which every other section of the industry depends.

The average camera of the industry today is a marvel of compromise. It is expected to take the film of any maker, of any thickness and any degree of pliability, with perforations of any shape and almost any number per foot and produce a rock-steady picture. I say it is a marvel, for it generally accepts all these handicaps and turns out pictures which look surprisingly good upon the screen.

I must accept all of the imperfections which a lack of standards subjects it to and turn out a picture degraded with an average of these imperfections.

Its sprocket teeth cannot fit the perforations, for they must be made small enough to enter the smallest perforation that it may encounter. It must rely for registrations upon pressure plates with spring tension-pilot pins or guides being of little use unless a standard size of film and perforation be arbitrarily adopted for that particular camera. Thanks to the individual efforts of one or two of the members of this society, much excellent work in this line had been done, but unless standards are universally adopted and used the standards of one clique are sure to clash somewhere with those of another clique, and the war goes merrily on to the detriment of the industry as a whole.

It is high time that the essential parts and features of cameras have a universally recognized standard to which they should conform.

The first and most important standard to be determined is the frame line in its relation to the perforations. No two cameras can be used in the same production at the present time without having their frame line adjusted to one another. The claws or fingers which engage the film for drawing down the succeeding frames are placed in most cameras at some distance below the frame opening, and although two cameras with claws at different distances between their claw movement be adjusted according to one standard for their frame line the use of a different standard of perforation, although the new standard be used in both cameras, will cause the frame lines to differ.

The studios of today who are turning out the best grade of work have adopted a standard for their plant and, at great expense, have made all of their cameras, perforators, printers, etc., conform to an arbitrary measure for their own protection. The companies who have recognized this great economic factor in productions are unhappily still in the minority. It is not to be wondered at that in the absence of recognized standards that many makers have either never given the subject proper attention or felt equal to backing the varying opinions of the others and trying to draw them into line.

An instance will illustrate the point which I am trying to bring out. One of the largest distributing combinations in the country shortly after its organization decided to run a trailer with its trade mark on all of their reels. They made an appropriation of stupendous proportions to bring this trade mark before the public by a national advertising campaign in magazine, newspaper and billboard space. I was assigned the task of making the negative for the trailer, pieces of which were sent to each company releasing through this organization. I made the negative with the frame line conforming to the standard of the principal member.

It took nearly four months to bring this trailer into use among the different releasing companies, during which time it was necessary to remake an exact duplicate for each and every releasing company with a different frame line, and one company was even so sadly mixed that it required a frame line change to correspond to each camera that it owned. It was not able to put two cameramen on the same job, as the frame lines did not correspond.

A large number of cameramen at the present time own their own outfits. This measure was adopted by them in the beginning as a measure of self-protection against the junk-boxes with which the manufacturers expected them to work.

As soon as the manufacturers found that the cameramen would buy their own cameras many of them ceased providing cameras and depended altogether upon the heterogeneous collection of outfits that their cameraman provided.

This situation is absurd. Can you imagine a serious manufacturer of automobiles or machinery who would expect a workman to come into his factory with an arbitrary set of limit gauges and expect to assemble a product made by this workman with the product of other workmen when their measurement standards had never been compared?

That, gentlemen, is exactly the situation in a number of studios today where they are spending millions of dollars each year for the production of feature pictures de luxe.

You are all well aware that I might go on with an almost interminable list of evils that are crying out for extermination at your hands, but I would be taking up time which would be better spent by you in devising remedies that are so sorely needed.

Fellow-members, upon your decisions at this and coming meetings rest the savings of untold amounts of unnecessary waste in time, money and material.

Passing Through Crisis, Says Pathe

Head of Great Concern Talks of International Conditions in Motion Picture Industry

By Charles Pathe,
Chevalier of the Legion of Honor.

MOTION PICTURES in France are passing through a serious crisis. This condition is not local, but exists everywhere—in America, England and Italy. In every country the cause of the condition is the same, and in every country, in proportion to the importance of the business done, the effect is the same. It is, therefore, more serious in America than in France, and in both countries the same remedy is required. The root of the evil lies in the scenario end of the business, and there only.

Knowing the cause of the trouble it might seem that the remedy would be simple and easily applied. This is not so, however, and it is the duty of those publications that depend either wholly or in part upon the motion picture business to indicate the remedy of the producers.

During my stay in America I had time to notice the progress of those who once were our students and who have now become (we French must have the courage to recognize it) our masters.

I also had time to investigate the causes of this growing crisis, which is there at least as intense as the one through which we in France are going since the capital represented by all the American firms is enormous as compared with that of the industry in France.

Wall Street is involved for several millions which are in proportion not repaid as well as those actually negotiated by our Bourse. The dividends paid to their stockholders by the American motion picture companies are insignificant, if any at all, first, because the capital invested in this industry is so large, and, secondly and of greater importance, because there is an overproduction of negatives; thirdly because the written scenarios, as in all other countries, are not sufficiently well thought out, and, lastly, because the profits from good productions are wiped out by other negatives of little or no value, which, notwithstanding the large demand of the American market, are not profitable because of the excessive quantity.

In America as in France and elsewhere it is customary to divide the enormous general expenses of the motion picture industry over an exaggerated footage in order to care for the high cost of production.

The production of negatives would be reduced to at least 50 per cent. if each producer would understand the absolute necessity of studying with more care each of the 200 or 300 scenes which make up a four or five reel photoplay. The producer, in the interest of the author and the distributor as well as his own, would attain a standard of good quality if he would make it a rule to only undertake the production of a scenario when convinced of its eventual success. Naturally he sometimes might be in error, but even if it were not a masterpiece his picture would at least be an interesting work rather than a mere triviality.

This would result in a considerable decrease of the production of negatives and would increase in the same proportion the income from each negative.

All the scenarios which I have had the occasion to read in America as well as in France were, in my opinion, not sufficiently developed. Nothing should be left for the director to improvise. It is my belief that the detailed development which each four or five reel scenario requires should constitute sufficient material for a volume of 200 to 250 pages in octavo.

By the adoption of this system the motion picture author will write only two or three scenarios per year, for he may neglect the literary quality or style of his work, and the time so gained may be spent on the details which should be given to each picture.

The detailed description of a motion picture requires a much greater development than the description of a drama or comedy for the stage, the latter being rehearsed fifteen or twenty times by the artists before being played in public.

The motion picture scenario should indicate the length of the scene, the different foregrounds of the artists, the lighting effects and the locations to be chosen. To this last the author should give particular care and sketches are sometimes necessary. In other words, everything should be put in which is likely to facilitate the work, and the director, with all the above information, will have made good use of his time if he completes four to five photoplays during a year.

In America, as well as in France and other countries, the author, who is frequently a director, usually produces double this amount, and all the harm comes from that fact.

The director, as well as the author, is too frequently paid per scenario; in other words, per foot. It would be to the advantage of the producer to interest through royalties the director and the author in the final result of their work, in a similar way as the publisher of a book associates the author with the results obtained from the publication of his work.

Without a doubt, up to the present time the restricted number of photoplay authors having sufficient knowledge of the profession did not permit this arrangement, but I believe that the time is drawing near when these matters will be considered from the point of view I mention.

I notice with pleasure that in France as in America the number of intelligent producers who are really interested in our art has increased in appreciable proportions, and I think the time is not far off that a corporative organization of authors, directors and producers will write scenarios, direct and produce negatives which the distributors will send out on the market in close collaboration.

The time is past when producers were both authors and business men. With the exception of travelogues, educationals and scenics, which require important and special material, they will be obliged to look to one who adapts scenarios from stories (scenario writers) pending the time when there will be real authors for motion pictures.

The time has come where the distributor must take care of his own line, which is totally different from that of the producer. Each of these professions requires particular experience and knowledge.

To combine in one person the distributor with the producer, what would one say if Messieurs Lemerre, Flammarion, McClure, Doubleday Page, or other publishers wished to write works similar to those of Anatole France, Marcel Prevost, Edmond Rostand, Kipling, Winston Churchill and Henry James, authors with whom they may have contracts by which the writers bring their special talent in exchange for the business training and ability of the publishers?

This would evidently be ridiculous, and still this is exactly what has been done up to the present time in our industry, and this must be stopped.

But, you will say, the motion picture author requires financial assistance to proceed with his work. Marcel Prevost and Anatole France write works at small cost, which, to put into photoplays, would require an advance of not less than $10,000.

Until a corporative association be created the distributors could advance capital to the producers with whom they are connected, of course, with certain precautions. There are certain producers, of whom I know several, who could easily obtain the assistance of distributors.

As far as I am concerned, I would be disposed to consider offers and to make some if the producers who would associate themselves with me could come to the idea that it is greatly to their interest to produce well rather than to produce much.

Our industry would then be for some time, if not for always, on a sound basis if the exhibitor was willing to associate his interests with those of the producer and distributor, paying for his program in proportion to the receipts which he realizes; in other words, on a percentage basis to be determined upon, following the same system as is used for the legitimate stage.

As to whether the French motion picture industry will resume its supremacy in the world which it has lost, I think this is impossible.

I will give a few figures which will make my reasons clear, since these figures are the result of my personal experience.

In September, 1914, I left for America to face an extremely difficult situation, due to the fact that Pathe, a few weeks before the declaration of war, had severed with the General Film, through which we originally did business in the United States.

In order to resume relations with the customers, which at that time had practically left us, I made arrangements to hurry the negatives of a serial which we released in France under the title of "Mysteres de New York," and which I put on the American market under the title of "The Exploits of Elaine," using publicity similar to that used in France.

The rental price of this serial in the United States and in other English speaking countries amounted to about $1,800,000. The same serial, edited for the Latin countries, hardly reached $400,000.

The serial which is being brought to a close in France under the title of "Masque Aux Dents Blanches" (known as "The Iron Claw" in America) has given about the same results.

These same serials could have been made in France at a saving of about $30,000 on the cost of negatives, but they could not have been profitably edited in the United States and other Anglo-Saxon countries, because they would not have had the desired American atmosphere.

Therefore, I must conclude that the returns from pictures made in Latin countries and those made in Anglo-Saxon countries are totally different, and we French must satisfy ourselves with conditions which we cannot possibly change. We must realize that Latin productions are and will always be handicapped by the American productions, and that the latter in a certain measure can boast of a predominance, if not absolute, at least appreciable, in the motion picture industry.

My conclusions, as you see, are very different from the result of an investigation made recently, where it was decided that the chief handicap of the motion picture business was "lack of capital."

To fight effectively against overproduction, there is only one way—produce well, and, better still, more than well.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of April 15 in New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"Sleeping Fires" at the Strand.

THE principal photo-dramatic feature at the Strand theater for the week of April 15 was "Sleeping Fires," in which Pauline Frederick was the star. It is a combination of a thrilling detective story plot, with a romantic love theme. A second film adaptation of the famous O. Henry story series, "Friends at San Rosario," was also shown. Other features were "A Spring Ideal," one of Paula Blackton's country life stories; interesting educational studies, and the Strand Topical Review.

Rosa Lind, Nann Lit Koster and Grace Hoffman were the soloists.

"Told at Twilight" at the Rialto.

Baby Marie Osborne in "Told at Twilight" was one of the features at the Rialto. There is an unconscious charm about the performances of this five-year-old Pathe star which sets her quite apart from the usual child actress. With a droll little colored boy for a playmate she rolics through the plot of the picture as naturally as if there were no camera in sight. Charlie Chaplin in "The Cure," his latest bit of expert clowning, was shown Monday afternoon and all week thereafter. The pictures of the Salisbury expedition to the Spanish Main showed Rex Beach and his fellow explorers capturing monster crocodiles in Colombia, besides views of ant eaters and other strange Central American fauna. The always interesting topical digest completed the program. The soloist was Mlle. Androva.

"The Deemster" at the Broadway.

A picture version of Hall Caine's famous novel, "The Deemster," opened an engagement at the Broadway theater, April 15. The Arrow Film Company's production of the film version is excellent in every way.

Eighty-first Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street theater Mme. Sarah Bernhardt in "Mothers of France" was the feature for the entire week.

KING BAGGOT CLOSING TOUR.

Charles H. Greene, the veteran manager and screen director, has just returned from a ten weeks' trip through Michigan, Ohio and Indiana, where he has been directing the personal appearance tour of King Baggot through those States, and reports great business for his star and says in many towns King Baggot was received with ovations by the mayors and public officials, and banqueted by clubs and societies, making it a grand triumphal tour.

King Baggot will close his tour on April 22 and return to New York to organize his own company, Mr. Greene, his manager, coming here in advance to attend to the preliminary work.

Ann Pennington Comes Back to Screen

Popular Ziegfeld "Follies" Star Will Again Appear in "The Boy Scout," Famous Players-Paramount Picture.

ANN PENNINGTON, the popular little Ziegfeld "Follies" star, who created such a sensation on the screen when she made her motion picture debut in the Famous Players-Paramount picture, "Susie Snowflake," has returned from a long tour upon the stage and will again star upon the screen under the auspices of the Famous Players. The return of Miss Pennington to the Famous Players studio after an absence of several months will undoubtedly meet with the popular approval of the public, for in the brief space when she flitted upon the screen last year she won popularity and achieved success.

Ann Pennington.

The production upon which Miss Pennington will at once begin work is "The Boy Scout," a patriotic picture written especially for her. It will show the little screen star in an entirely different light upon the screen and will at the same time strike a timely note.

Ann Pennington is a native of Camden, N. J. She won a reputation as a dancer and actress in the little amateur shows in which she took part in her native city. Her fame soon spread across the river to Philadelphia and she was invited to participate in several amateur performances in the Quaker City. Then she began to study stage dancing and later joined the "Red Widow" company. After touring all over the country in "The Red Widow," Miss Pennington appeared in several other shows before her striking beauty and remarkable dancing ability attracted the notice of Mr. Ziegfeld and she was added to the stellar forces of the "Follies."

The date of release for "The Boy Scout" has not yet been set, but work upon the production will begin at the Famous Players studio within a short time.

MARGUERITE CLAYTON IN BLACK CAT SERIES.

The General Film Company announces that Marguerite Clayton, the Essanay star, is to be featured in the forthcoming Black Cat Features, the series based on stories in the Black Cat Magazine, which is being distributed by the General Film Company. Miss Clayton, who has become very popular with picture fans through her work in "Is Marriage Sacred?" series, in which she was featured, will play a boarding house slavey in "Pass the Hash, Ann," the coming Black Cat Feature, and she is said to have the best character she has ever portrayed in this picture.

ELLIOTT DEXTER MARY PICKFORD'S LEADING MAN.

Appearing opposite Mary Pickford in her latest picture, to be released by Artcraft Pictures on May 14, is Elliott Dexter, the well known leading man whose many characterizations in Paramount Pictures have made him a favorite among screen patrons. Mr. Dexter has appeared in many successes under the Famous Players, Lasky and Morosco-Pallas trade marks. In Miss Pickford's new Artcraft subject, "A Romance of the Redwoods," he plays what he considers his greatest part, that of a bad man of the West.

CAST FOR "TODAY" ENGAGED.

Harry Rapf has engaged, for the support of Florence Reed in the new film feature "Today," a cast of real stars, including Frank Mills, Gus Weinberg, Leonore Harris, Alice Gale and Kate Leslie. Mr. Weinberg and Miss Gale are of the original cast, and work is now going forward under the personal direction of Ralph Ince. With the star, producer and director of such high standard, "Today" should prove one of the masterpieces of the screen.

Richardson Going Strong

Takes in Mobile, New Orleans, Memphis, Little Rock and Hot Springs

Mobile, Alabama.

HERE is where I met a live-wire bunch of stage employees, headed by their efficient president and Disha Niolan, secretary Local Union 142. The operators of Mobile, save for a few exceptions, showed little interest—in fact, not sufficient to even attend the meeting which stage men, aided by two or three wide-awake operators, arranged; proof positive of their lack of progressiveness, and pretty good evidence they stood and stand sadly in need of exactly what I had to offer. Several managers also shared this lack of understanding of the responsibility attached to their position by failing to either be present or aid in having their operators present. Such a course is something very much worse than unwise. If this matter has proved of great value to managers and operators of other cities, as is proved by letters we have published; if it has the open indorsement of State Leagues of exhibitors, and of large, powerful local unions of operators, don't you really believe it might have sufficient value to justify you in at least coming out to see what it is? Are you so tremendously wise that the thing which has taught others valuable lessons can have no value to you? Think it over, even though "thinking it over" will do the Mobile men who stayed away no earthly good now.

F. M. (Buck) Taylor.

But there was a fair sized gathering of managers and operators at the Crown theater, nevertheless, and as one operator afterward expressed it: "It certainly was the best dose of medicine I ever took. It was a pretty bitter pill, but I swallowed it like a man, I trust, and it will do me a lot of good." It was one of the most appreciative audiences I have yet addressed. Frequent good-natured laughs greeted such points I made which happened to touch some sore spot of local practice, and the up-turned faces showed lively interest and appreciation.

In Mobile I found a genuine specimen of the genus Old Timer in the person of F. M. Taylor, better known as "Buck" Taylor. Brother Taylor is shown standing beside his "Edison Cinematoscope, Improved Model." He was (in 1896) touring the South with the Woodward-Warren Stock Company, showing pictures between acts. Judging by the clerical garb, showing pictures must, in that day and date, have been a very solemn rite. Brother Taylor is still running a projection machine, though not regularly, at Monroe Park, Mobile, Alabama. He is a member of Local Union 142 and knows Billy Reed, Atlantic City, the dean of us all.

The Crown theater has a brilliantly lighted picture, and a progressive operator, but the auditorium lighting needs attention, and a reduction of picture size, with the addition of a black border, would be a very decided improvement. The operating room is none too large, but is not really cramped as to space. Its walls are slate black, and the glass of the windows is painted black also. My hat is off to the operator who thus sacrificed his personal comfort upon the altar of good projection. The observation ports are poorly located—too low. Cut them out, is my advice. A few hours' work by a stone mason will do it. The equipment consists of two Power's 6A machines, taking D. C. through Power's circular 110-240 volt rheostat, located under the vent plug near the ceiling—fine! J. H. King manages the Crown, and Harry Prown is chief operator; L. Macon, assistant. At the Crescent, L. N. Frenkel, manager, I found (time 11:50 a. m.) the picture being run altogether too slow, with consequent ghost-like movement of the actors and very bad flicker. Asked the operator on duty, W. Van Der Braak, assistant (A. F. Thompson, chief), if he had orders to run slow, and he said he had not. It therefore is, or was up to Friend Van Der Braak, who was deliberately ruining the work of the actors and badly straining the eyes of the audience. It was even worse than overspeeding, and the good Lord knows that is bad enough. Operator Van Der Braak had all his operating room lights out, and that part of it was most excellent; also the operating room walls were dark in color—good! Power's 6A machines were used, and the arcs are handled by American arc controllers, which Van Der Braak reports as giving satisfactory service.

Crown Theater, Mobile, Ala.

At the Empire I had an extended and emphatic, though good natured, argument with its manager, who gave me her name as M. Luckel, presumably Mrs., as a lady of such charming appearance could hardly have side-stepped matrimony, unless Mobile men are quite some slower than they look to be. M. Luckel was not present at the lecture, nor were her operators. I asked her why this was so, and was promptly informed that it was not up to her to stay up until 3 a. m. to hear a lecture on projection, and that as to her operators, why they had nothing to do with the projection anyhow.

Inside the Empire I found the screen result none the best. The illumination was very uneven, with bright center and yellow edges. But M. Luckel averred, asserted, stated and said that the man who designed and arranged the lens system of her machines was a very wonderful optician, beside whom all other opticians were as mere dross, and therefore the thing must be, had to be and was right. Of course, when a regular lady makes a positive statement, with the glint of determination, not to say battle, in her eye, there is nothing for a reg'lar gent to do but agree. So the lens system on M. Luckel's machine is right, but it is NOT delivering the right result on the screen. The latter circumstance is, however, a mere trifle, over which who am I that I should haggle.

The Empire would gain by reducing the size of its picture and adding a black border; also the clock immediately over and very close to the screen, with more light on the wall than is on clock dial, is very very bad from the projectional point of view. In fact, if Manager M. Luckel will forgive the statement, her whole scheme of auditorium lighting is decidedly inefficient. If you must have the clock where it is, at least confine the light to its dial, put on very wide clock hands, paint the clock face BLACK, with white figures and hands, and then a very little illumination will serve, and the clock will not be objectionable. The speed of projection was good at the time of my visit. I did not visit the operating room.

New Orleans.

For three thousand five hundred miles I have been looking for the Crescent City, New Orleans, the city of ancient dreams, the city of mystery, the city of the old French quarter, the city of Lafitte the pirate and (latest appellation) the "City Care Forgot," because it was here I would have my first full day layover.

The train pulled in at 7:05 and waiting with outstretched hands were Arthur A. S. Hadden, president; John Davidson, business agent; Turo Glucksmann, press agent; E. Steward and W. L. Shepherd, members executive board, and A. Merritt, members Local Union 293. And right here let me pay a deserved compliment to Touro Glucksman, press agent, New Orleans Operators' Union No. 293. I have had much correspondence with Friend Glucksman, and must say he cannot write letters for sour apples, but when it comes to general enthusiasm, hustling ability and stick-toitiveness, Brother Glucksman certainly is there with the goods.

New Orleans has more than 100 theaters and it would be utterly useless for me to try to visit any considerable portion of them, so I confined my efforts to dropping in at some of the Canal street houses, and taking note of auditorium conditions and screen results. Local Union No. 293 had made great preparations for the lecture, which was to be held in the Triangle theater, Dauphine and Iberville streets. This was to be the night following my arrival, and the night after that there was to be a banquet "tendered," according to the menu card, by the "Moving Picture of New Orleans to F. H. Richardson, Editor Projection Department, Moving Picture World," in Fabacher's Rathskeller, one of the famous New Orleans restaurants.

I believe there is no city in all the United States which holds so much of real, genuine interest to the traveler, provided the aforesaid traveler knows how to go about finding it, than does New Orleans, and every moment of my time was pleasantly and profitably employed while there.

The second evening of my stay, however, came near being my finish, because Friend Glucksman took me to dine at Maylie's Esparbe, a famous French restaurant, where they start in by demonstrating the fact that Louisiana is not (yet) dry, and wind up by almost choking you to death with good things to eat. It really was an experience, and by the time we got through, if anybody had drawn a bow across my tummy the resultant sound might have closely resembled that produced by an over-tight fiddle string.

In course of my wanderings I dropped in at the supply house of George Vivirito. Mr. Vivirito is not only a most pleasant gentleman, as is also his assistant, Fred Cady, the latter being an old-time motion picture machine operator, but he also is an up-to-date supply dealer, who carries a well displayed and complete stock of nearly everything having to do with motion picture theaters. Mr. Vivirito showed me the business card of a customer, Leonard Falgout, Raceland, La., on the reverse side of which was found the following: "Proprietor of following businesses: Prairie Road Store, King Saloon, Raceland theater, Falgout Hotel, Raceland Undertaker." Evidently Friend Falgout overlooked the livery stable and agricultural implement dealers' end of it. Doubtless, however, those items will be added later.

During the afternoon of my first day in New Orleans I paid ten perfectly good cents to enter the Empire theater on Canal street, merely to see what the screen result and auditorium light would look like. I found the screen to be at the front of the house, and the picture small and ill lighted. The projection light was clear, brilliant and of good tone, also it was well handled and the speed was O. K. The auditorium lighting, however, was decidedly inefficient; in fact, it was very bad, particularly for those seated at the rear. At the right of the screen was a clock, with the USUAL smear of light all over and around it. At the right and left of the screen were red lights indicating exits, and just above them, for some reason which was not apparent on the face of things, were two shaded white or amber lights, throwing their light in a glaring circle on the wall, all of which is very nice for the eyes of the audience—I don't think. J. C. Davidson, business manager, Local Union No. 293, is chief operator J. O. Webb (on duty), assistant.

At the Plaza I found the clock and piano lights to be very bad. The speed of projection was correct, but there were very bad shadows on the screen several times, and at approximately 3:30 p. m. there were dark brown shadows at the bottom of the screen twice in less than three minutes. At the end of the reel the operator projected some slides, which were literally filthy with dirt. One slide contained the photograph of a woman, her features almost entirely obliterated with the dirty, greasy thumb mark of the "operator" (?). Crude work. Inefficiency. Those are charitable terms; if I spoke what is in my mind concerning this type of screen results, it would not look at all well in print. Why, why, WHY will managers employ men who have no more pride in their work than this? It seems to me that a wooden cigar store Indian would at least have sufficient ambition and pride in his work to keep his slides clean. At 4:11 (I remained in this house for quite a little while, in order to be sure the bad result was not merely momentary) the film broke. I had intended to report this operator to Local Union No. 293, and demand his discipline by that organization, but found out, considerably to my relief, because I belong to the I. A. myself, that he was not a member. He canot claim that the poor result was due to any fault in equipment, because poor equipment won't account for dirty slides and continued recurring discoloration at the bottom of the picture.

At Pearce's Tudor theater I saw a specimen of auditorium lighting which has only been equalled in inefficiency and rank disregard for the comfort of the audience; rank disregard of the item of eye strain and rank disregard of the excellence of projection, by anything I have seen, except in one instance which has already been described in my visit to Nashville. At the left of the screen, and close to it, was a clock, which was, in its way, an island, being "entirely surrounded by light"; nor was this sufficient, for immediately above it was an illuminated green-letter sign, presumably advertising the jeweler who supplied the clock. Of course, the audience at the Tudor pays its money for the privilege of staring an illuminated jeweler's sign out of countenance for a couple of hours, to the detriment of their eyes and the picture on the screen. But this was not all, for there was a smear of white light at the top and clear across the front end of the auditorium over the screen, which means that Anita Stewart, Dustin Farnum, Clara Kimball Young, Mary Pickford, et al, are obliged to share their popularity, and fight for their screen existence with the decorations on the front wall of the auditorium. From the projection point of view, this is absolutely the worst example I have ever seen, but even this does not tell the entire tale of the attempts to murder the picture in this particular theater, because on the right of the screen, and close to it, is an announcement board containing, at the time, six lines of illuminated white letters, and on the right of the auditorium, scattered along with some of them comparatively near the screen, are five very bright red lights. But even this is not all, for the music on the organ immediately below the picture was brilliantly illuminated, as was also the entire front of the instrument. Presumably the organist found it necessary to read the whole front of the organ, as well as his or her notes. But there is still more to the sum total of the sins of the Tudor, because the picture sets back in a wide flat arch, which by all rules of common sense as applied to projection should be painted flat black, or draped in black velvet, but which is, instead, light in color. The picture light was clear and brilliant (God knows it had to be), and to the credit of the operator, working under such utterly impossible auditorium lighting conditions, he was getting a very good result on the screen. I was sorry to learn that this apparently capable man was not a member of the local union. He certainly ought to be. I remained in that house about five minutes, and in passing out remarked to the attendant that, having due regard for my eyes, I would not sit and stare at that mass of light for an hour for $5 of anybody's money. His only answer was a stare of amazement.

At the Globe I planked down two perfectly good dimes, and in return was permitted to pass through the portals into the enchanted land beyond. The Globe is one of the Fichtenberg houses and is really a charming theater. I had not the pleasure of meeting Fichtenberg himself, but did meet W. H. Gueringer, general manager, who impressed me as not only being a very courteous gentleman, but a capable manager; I also met Carl Goldenberg, house manager. The Globe is putting on a particularly good picture, but, as I pointed out to Messrs. Gueringer and Goldenberg, the clock at the right of the screen, smeared all over with white light, is bad. To give Friend Gueringer due credit, he agreed with me, and said he had issued orders to the electrician to confine the light to the dial of the clock, and considering the clock in itself a bad proposition, proposed to get rid of it.

Let me suggest to Friend Gueringer that the clock, rightly treated, is a good proposition. First, confine the light absolutely to the dial of the clock, paint the clock's face dead black, have the hands and the figures painted dead white, and then you can cut down the illumination to almost nothing and practically all the audience will see will be the white hands and figures. The orchestra lights in this house were also bad, as I pointed out to Friends Gueringer and Goldenberg.

The operating room of the Globe is very excellent, indeed. It has dead black walls, high ceiling and ample ventilation. There are two Simplex machines, equipped with arc controllers—the first I have seen in the South. The operating room and typhoon fan system are operated by remote control, and the equipment is remarkably complete. With proper control of the clock light, as before indicated, and of the orchestra lights, the conditions in the Globe would be very excellent indeed, and the auditorium, with its high arched ceiling, is very beautiful. I would, however, recommend a considerable increase in the candlepower in the two rear inverted light fixtures.

While in New Orleans I had the pleasure of meeting Herbert Brenon, one of the famous producing directors of the industry. Mr. Brenon has been taking pictures in and around New Orleans, and was just leaving for New York City. I also, much to my disappointment, found that my friend, Anita Stewart, was due to arrive in New Orleans on the day following the day I was leaving. This was a real disappointment, because it would be a more than ordinary pleasure to at least say howdy and good-bye to my charming friend of the screen. Miss Stewart, as I understand it, is coming down here to enact some of the scenes of a photoplay.

During the afternoon of the second day Brothers Glucksman and Caznavet, treasurer of Local Union No. 293, took me for an auto ride out to some of the beautiful parks and to Lake Pontchartrain—a very pretty and most agreeable experience. I also visited some of the queer old cemeteries and other intensely interesting things New Orleans has to show.

I also paid a brief visit to the Lyceum theater, owned by the St. Charles Amusement Co., managed by F. R. Heiderich. The Lyceum is long and quite narrow. The distance of projection is 140 feet and the picture fairly brilliant. The projection light is well handled by A. S. Johnstone, night operator. C. A. Archer runs during the day. Friend Heiderich has a reputation for progressiveness, and the Lyceum was one of the first union houses in New Orleans.

A. G. Shear, secretary-treasurer Sobel-Richards Theatrical Amusement enterprises, acted as toastmaster at the banquet, and his selection for that position was a most happy one. Among those called upon were E. V. Richards, Jr., secretary and general manager Saenger Amusement Company, which operates a long string of theaters. Mr. Richards spoke at considerable length upon the policy of his company as applied to those in its employ, and one feature which particularly impressed me was that the company holds weekly "get-together" meetings of all its employees. Mr. Richards did not say so, but unless I am in error others told me the company provides a dinner on these weekly occasions. Several other managers and exhibitors spoke, among them E. Gannier, who said his own experience was that the union had on its muster rolls the really competent operators of the city; that non-union men had proven to be unsatisfactory.

The affair was a decided success; also it was freely commented upon by those present as being the first of its kind, and marking a distinct epoch in the history of the industry locally. The editor feels that he added many highly desirable names to his list of friends and will not soon forget the cordiality of his reception in the Crescent City.

Memphis, Tenn.

While in Memphis I was entertained by my old friend, C. F. Bridges, secretary-treasurer Majestic Amusement Company, and his charming home-partner, Mrs. Bridges, also an old and valued friend, and did not have much opportunity for the visiting of theaters. Theater visiting was further curtailed by the fact that it rained most of the time I was here, and during my stay a cyclone played Memphis a visit, wrecking a large number of buildings and seriously injuring many people. I did, however, examine new Majestic No. 1 and Majestic No. 2, both owned by the Majestic Amusement Company, which also owns old Majestic No. 1, Empire No. 1 and Empire No. 2.

Majestic No. 1, G. M. Courier, house manager; S. D. Campbell, C. C. Keade and M. S. Stovler, operators, is an up-to-date, very pretty house, with charmingly decorated interior, but with unnecessary and objectionable side lights (I hate to say this, Brother Bridges, after all your kindness and courtesy, and the courtesy shown me by your company, but in matters of this kind there is a sharp line of demarkation between friendship and duty) and with a lighting scheme which is, as a whole, inefficient from the projection point of view and the point of view of the audience.

The operating room is of ample size, has black walls and modern equipment, but friend architect has so located the observation ports that it is utterly impossible for the operator to see the top part of his picture; also he has to stand on tip-toe to see the lower part. That the men are delivering good results on the screen (for they are) is to their everlasting credit. Chop out the bottom of these ports, gentlemen, and do it QUICK. You have no right to expect good results on the screen under such a condition as that, and a few moments' careful work with a drill and hack-saw will fix it. The operating room ventilation is excellent, except that I did not see any intake from the outer air. The house seats 1,014, and has a really splendid pipe-organ. Simplex projectors are used. I also visited Majestic No. 2, J. B. Amis, house manager; William Elliott, chief operator; R. McDonald, assistant.

Little Rock, Arkansas.

Waiting at the depot I found Henry N. Burke, chief operator Chrystal theater, and E. H. Bellingsley, business agent Local Union 204, who, together with their gasoline cart, constituted the Welcome to Our City Committee of the Little Rock Managers and Operators.

Union, and right here let me say that Local Union 204, through its representative, Brother Burke, certainly made the editor feel that Little Rock was glad to have him in its midst. The Little Rock Union had been written to twice, but had, much to my surprise, not replied. It seems that the letters really were replied to, and that I was invited by the union to visit Little Rock, but the communication never reached me. It's up to our good friend, Uncle Samuel, I guess. Failing to connect with the union, I had written Saul Harris, president Gem Amusement Company, who, after consulting with the operators, assured me that my visit would be welcome. I found Brother Harris to be one of those enthusiastic chaps who is both an honorary and active members of the "Good Fellows' Club."

Projection in Little Rock, while subject to considerable possible improvement, both in screen results and auditorium lighting, is very good. During my stay in the city I visited the Royal theater, Albert E. Hanger, house manager; Boone Herring, chief operator; Paul Williams, assistant. The operating room is large and well ventilated and its walls are dark colored, but the room is flooded with daylight at matinees, and right over the observation port the operator had a 16-candlepower incandescent lamp blazing away, which is about as bad a thing for both the operator's eyes and the screen result as could well be imagined. Brothers Herring and Williamson have every appearance of being men who have brains and know how to use them. I was therefore astonished to find them pulling off a foolish stunt of that kind. The projection machines are Power 6A, and the revolving shutters would be, I think, very greatly improved by the application of a little knowledge of the proper matching of the optical system of the projector. With these slaps on the list, which are meant for the ultimate welfare of the souls of Brothers Williamson and Herring, and the improvement of screen results in the Royal, we will pass on to the Kempner theater, Aaron Laskin, house manager; Guy C. Redman, chief operator; M. F. Pierce, assistant. The operating room of this theater has dark walls, but the omnipresent incandescent lights were on the job. When I entered the theater there was a shadow on the bottom of the picture—a discoloration of the light. This is not to be wondered at, with all that light in the operating room. The Power projectors take current through rheostats, which are placed in an iron-lined, ventilated closet. The room is of ample size, as were all Little Rock operating rooms I visited.

At the Chrystal theater, C. H. Fridheim, house manager; H. N. Burke, chief operator; J. Schoemaker, assistant, the operating room was literally flooded with light; the walls were light green; the equipment consisted of two simplex projectors and one extra mechanism. The rheostats are on a shelf near the ceiling, directly under the vent flue, and the ventilation draft (upward) is so strong that it runs the fan backward when the current is shut off. The operating room is fed by a three-wire system, with No. 00 leads, the subsidiary operating room projection currents being number four. There is a basin with running water—the only one I saw in an operating room in Little Rock. Convenient to the operating room are toilet facilities. With the light cut out of that room and the walls painted black, Brothers Burke and Schoemaker would have a room which could not be made the subject of any just criticism.

The Palace theater, L. Storthz, manager; C. L. Gowens, chief operator; B. T. Hardcastle, assistant, is a large, fine house, with an imposing front. The operating room is of even more than ample dimensions and is in every way excellent, except that its walls are white plaster and there is the inevitable flood of light. The equipment is Power 6A, taking current through rheostats.

Summing up, all the operating rooms I saw in Little Rock are roomy, had high ceilings, fairly well located observation ports of goodly size, and had equipment which was at least fairly well up to date, but in all cases there was a flood of light and there was a lack of black walls in most of the rooms. As has been time and again pointed out, the lighting of the operating room, or rather the lack of lighting of the operating room, is extremely important. The more light there is in the room, the less clearly will the operator be able to see his picture, prevent the faint shadows due to improper light adjustment and judge intelligently as to the sharpness of focus of the picture.

The Little Rock operators and managers made the editor very welcome to their city, and it goes against the grain to point out, even for their own benefit and the benefit of others, the errors they are making. The managers can in some instances help very greatly in securing of better screen results by carefully studying the lighting of their auditorium.

During my visit to Little Rock I met Dana Hayes and Clifford Bernard, state right owners of Arkansas, Texas and Louisiana for the "Little Girl Next Door." Messrs Hayes and Bernard are of Los Angeles, California. They report excellent busines with the feature they are handling.

The lecture was held in the Chrystal theater, and was attended by practically the entire operating force of Little Rock and most of the managers, plus some out-of-town operators, one of which was C. E. O'Donald, operator, Best theater, Pine Bluff, Arkansas.

I shall remember my visit to Little Rock as one of the many pleasant incidents of the trip. The Little Rock men are to be placed among the progressives, but, like nearly all other bodies of operators and managers, they might well put in some time studying the text-books of their profession and the Projection Department of the Moving Picture World. Knowledge is power, gentlemen, and the more you have of it the more efficient you will be in the handling of our modern magnificent photoplays.

Oh, yes; I almost forgot to say that the lecture was given with an almost 100 per cent. attendance, and was followed by a nice, light luncheon served in an adjacent cafe.

Hot Springs, Arkansas.

Not knowing that the operators of Hot Springs were organized, I wrote S. M. Nutt, manager, Central theater, Hot Springs, who promptly replied that he would be more than glad to have me visit Hot Springs and give the operators and managers a talk on projection.

Hot Springs is a pretty place, lying up in the canyons of the hills, but, while I admire its manly men and its beautiful maidens, the darned place gives me the shivers by reason of the number of apparently incurable cripples who parade its main street. The thing which made Hot Springs famous is the quality of the waters which gush out of Nature's laboratories, and many people come here hoping for cure from that which is incurable. They, in many instances, remain as reminders of the fact that even the wonderful waters supplied by Nature cannot cure that which cannot be cured.

At the lecture held in the Princess theater at 10 a. m. there was a 100 per cent. attendance of operators and managers, who listened for almost two hours with very close attention while we preached to them the gospel of better projection. The operators of Hot Springs are all members of Local No. 326 and are a well appearing group of men.

The Princess, owned by Blumensteil & Wolfe, is a commodious theater with a good lobby and front. The auditorium lighting is efficient from the projectional point of view, and the screen sets well back at the rear of the stage fully 25 or 30 feet from the front row of seats, all of which is good. Behind the orchestra is an opaque screen which keeps the rays of light from the eyes of the audience. This screen ought to be raised about three inches, but aside from that there is very little to criticize in the auditorium lighting.

The operating room of the Princess is, however, a particularly bad example. Its dimensions are 11 ft. 3 in. in width by 5 ft. 4 in. from front to back, with perhaps a 7 ft. ceiling. The room is entered by mounting the top of the balcony, getting down on one's hands and knees and literally crawling through a hole cut in a 12-inch brick wall. Once inside we find the following: Two Powers 6B machines, one rewinder, one film cabinet, the operating room switchboard and a General Electric Mercury Arc Rectifier, and one Ft. Wayne A. C. compensarc. The room is so narrow that it is impossible to get the lamp house back as far as it ought to be, and even where it is placed the operator could barely squeeze through behind the first machine to get to the second, and I could not do it at all. The bulb of the mercury arc rectifier is unprotected, and you can imagine the flood of light in that little cubbyhole of an "operating room," but in order to help matters out and be sure he would not overlook anything the operator had two incandescent lamps burning, though as a matter of fact unless he was merely being friendly with the light company I don't know what he had them burning for.

All this is not said to roast the operator or the manager. As a matter of fact, the manager asked me to suggest what could be done in the way of improving the operating room, and told me point blank it would be done. Well, my first suggestion would be that the present room be abandoned, and that a new room be built inside the auditorium, on the main floor at the rear. Of course, this would cut off a block of seats, but it would make the other seats just that much more valuable, and the only real problem would be the dodging of the center post which would be in front of the operating room and the ventilation of the room. If you don't want to do this, however, then cut down into the floor of the balcony at the rear, just in front of the wall where it now is, and place the room there. Even that would be a big improvement and would give you a room of ample size without removing any seats.

At the Royal theater, J. G. Blasghke, manager; Ralph E. Mackey, operator, I found an iron operating room in which were two Powers 6A projectors and a G3 rectifier; also there was a compensarc. The picture was bordered in black, and the house lighting, while susceptible of some improvement, was not bad, except that there was a bright exit light to the left of the screen which ought to be reduced by means of a sheet of red glass, which could be gotten at any photographic store. As I passed out I noticed a very pretty cashier in the box office, deeply interested in the manipulation of a good sized wad of chewing gum and the perusal of a pink sheet "racing form," Hot Springs being one of the few remaining communities which still "follows the ponies."

At the New Central, S. M. Nutt, manager; L. R. King, operator, I found a black-walled operating room with big ports. The room itself was excellent, but the General Electric Mercury Arc Rectifier was flooding the room with light, although Brother King had had the grace to pull an ordinary paper bag over it, thus reducing the evil to some extent. Projection equipment consisted of two Powers 6A machines. I showed Friend King how he could improve his picture, both in definition and brilliancy, merely by moving his lamp house back a few inches.

Taken altogether, Hot Springs, like all other cities I have thus far visited, is doing some good work, but stands in need of the application of scientific principles and up-to-date knowledge, both in auditorium lighting and operating room practice.

Elaine Sterne Writes a Novel

Story Originally Submitted as a Script, but Is Held Back While Young Authoress Puts It in Book Form.

ELAINE STERNE has written her first novel. The young woman whose scenarios have been so successful in the last three years has done much in the way of short story writing. Last summer saw the publication of her first book, "Sunny Jim," a collection of sketches based upon the picture series of that name. This has had a large sale.

Last summer Miss Sterne submitted to Vitagraph a scenario entitled "The Road of Ambition." It was approved by the production chiefs. Colonel Jasper Ewing Brady, however, saw in the script more than did his associates. He recommended that the production of the story be held back while Miss Sterne wrote a novel around the theme. The suggestion was accepted by all parties, and Miss Sterne looked about for a publisher. The Britton Publishing Company of New York read the script—already it was acquainted with her fiction style. From the script the company accepted the book before a line of it was written. The company did more than that. It made Miss Sterne an advance payment and bound her to a contract to write a second and third book within five years.

The young authoress set out to get real atmosphere. As the story was of the steel mills it was necessary that she should obtain entrance to large establishments. Owing to the pressure of munitions work and the disinclination of managers to permit the visiting of any investigating authors there were discouragements before Miss Sterne succeeded. She interested Charles M. Schwab, the head of the Bethlehem works, and the doors of that great establishment were opened to her. She got the atmosphere. "The Road to Ambition," of 496 pages and illustrated, goes into the bookstores this week.

New trails are being blazed in the motion picture industry. It is beyond question that in the train of incidents leading up to the publication of this book Miss Sterne has established another record—in the acceptance by a publisher of a book from script form before a word of the novel had been penned, and that meantime the script should be held for production. The foregoing will be of marked interest to the wide circle of friends of the writer—but it need hardly be said it will not surprise them.

FOX ENGAGES GEORGE BRONSON-HOWARD.

George Bronson-Howard, the well-known author and playwright, has taken charge of the scenario department of the William Fox Film Corporation. This is just another step of William Fox to make his productions the best that brains and money can produce.

Already Mr. Bronson-Howard has distinguished himself as playwright, novelist, short-story writer, musical comedy librettist, dramatic critic, war correspondent in the Russo-Japanese war, captain in the Chinese Army and inspector in both the Chinese and Phillipines Customs; besides having been a reporter for a dozen papers from San Francisco to London and a member of the editorial staff of half a dozen magazines.

Just a little over a year ago Mr. Bronson-Howard succumbed to the lure of the silent drama and joined a motion picture producing organization in California. Shortly after his play, "Snobs," was flashed upon the screen. Becoming enthused with the art of making photodramas, he was not content merely to adapt his novels and plays for the screen; he wanted to direct; so he joined the directing staff of another California producer and wrote and directed for the screen "The Perils of the Secret Service."

EDWARD ELLIS AND JOSEPHINE STEVENS.

Edward Ellis, star in several Art Dramas productions, and author of "The Great Bradley Mystery," a coming release, was married on Thursday, April 5, to Josephine Stevens, a film actress of note. The affair was quietly managed, only a few friends and relatives being present. The Church of the Messiah, on Park avenue, was the scene, while Rev. Doctor Holmes conducted the ceremony. Fred Perry and Mary Louise Morrison were best man and bridesmaid, respectively.

Mr. Ellis, besides appearing in Apollo productions on Art Dramas program, is at present engaged in reviving "Get Rich Quick Wallingford," in which he will play his original role, that of Blackie Daw. He has been starring in stage productions for a number of years, and has also written a number of plays, which have enjoyed Broadway productions. Miss Stevens has been appearing as leading woman in the "Fatty" Arbuckle comedies.

Hampton Resigns G. F. Presidency

Will Devote His Time to Rex Beach Pictures—Harold Bolster Elected General Manager.

AT a meeting of the directors of the General Film Company, held on Monday, April 9, the resignation of Ben B. Hampton as president was accepted and Harold Bolster elected vice-president and general manager. Mr. Hampton issued this statement:

"I have resigned the presidency of General Film so that I can spend my time on the Rex Beach Pictures Company, of which Mr. Beach and I are the owners. I am distributing "The Barrier," which is a highly important piece of work in itself. Mr. Beach and I are making a ten-reel drama of "The Auction Block," and are planning to start production at once on another large picture from another of his books. It was impossible for me to do justice to these valuable interests and continue to handle such an important matter as the presidency of General Film.

"Some weeks ago I requested the board to appoint as assistant to the president of the General Film Harold Bolster, who was then business manager of the Vitagraph Company. Mr. Bolster has been here for some weeks getting the reins of General Film into his hands, and the directors at their meeting on Monday elected him vice-president and general manager of the company.

"Mr. Bolster has already made good for himself in the picture business in his excellent work at the Vitagraph Company and he is taking hold of his General Film duties in such manner as to convince all his associates that he will be splendidly successful in his new position. General Film service is steadily going ahead, and under Mr. Bolster's management marked progress may be expected."

Directors' Association Holds Dinner

Adolph Zukor Guest of Honor—Rose Room at Astor Beautifully Decorated for the Occasion.

THE Motion Picture Directors' Association of New York, which includes practically all of the well known directors in the East, offered its services to the president of the United States at a dinner given by the association in honor of Adolph Zukor, head of the Famous Players, at the Hotel Astor Tuesday evening, April 10.

The dinner was one of the most successful the association has yet held. J. Searle Dawley, who directs pictures for the Famous Players, with a large crew of men from the studio, had transformed the Rose Room of the Astor into an Egyptian banquet chamber for the occasion. The table was built up in tiers. Four guests sat on each tier and at the top sat Mr. Zukor and Alan Dwan, the toastmaster.

The chief speaker was Mr. Zukor. The guests at the dinner included Alan Dwan, J. Gordon Edwards, Oscar Eagle, J. Searle Dawley, Joseph Kaufman, Paul Scardon, Joseph W. Smiley, Sidney Olcott, Joseph Humphrey, M. Simpson, Robert T. Thornby, Robert G. Vignola, John G. Adolfi, Emile Chautard, Edwin Carewe, Frank Crane, Harley Knowles, Jack Harvey, Travers Vale, Charles Giblyn, Francis J. Grandon, Del Henderson, Larry McGill, John Ince, Perry N. Vekroff, Bob Leonard and J. Allen Boone.

Strand Theater Brandon, Manitoba

Canada's Newest Photoplay House Managed by George Sempter—Seats 600—Mayor Carter Speaks on Opening Night.

WITH the opening of the new Strand theater in 10th street, Brandon has acquired a photoplay house which is the equal of any in Canada in a city of similar size. This beautiful theater has just been completed by J. H. Hughes, the owner of the property, and is under lease for a term of years to the Canadian Amusement Company, Ltd., of which George Semper is manager. Mr. Semper has for the past four and a half years conducted the old Bijou theater on 9th street, and has worked up a faithful clientele of regular patrons who have grown to like him and his methods.

The Strand has a seating capacity of 600, with the space between rows varying from 32 to 36 inches. The tiled lobby is wainscoted to a height of ten feet, while above this are painted scenes on the walls, and an ivory ceiling. Separating the foyer from the auditorium are latticework arches entwined with climbing roses and other flowers rising from flower boxes which top the partition. At the rear of the auditorium are six raised boxes, each furnished with six large wicker chairs. Boxes and foyer are carpeted in red.

In the auditorium a six-foot wainscoting in imitation marble is surmounted by paneled walls done in ivory and old rose, while the lighting scheme is amber. The stage set is a pretty flower garden, with lattice work corresponding to that at the rear. All foliage is thoroughly fireproofed.

The opening night was regarded as an event in local history, and Mayor Carter made a speech in which he congratulated those concerned in the opening of the new house. The military band of the 181st Battalion was also in attendance, and played selections throughout the evening.

Teddy Gives a Party

Teddy, the Keystone Dog, Gives a Party in Honor of Humane Animal Week to Other Animal Actors.

MONDAY, April 16th marked the beginning of Humane Animal Week, according to information received from the Keystone studios in California; and Teddy, a Great Dane and one of the stars of the Mack Sennett Keystone Comedy Company showed his appreciation of the courtesy to his kind by holding a banquet in honor of the occasion.

Fuzzy and Claire Anderson.

The big Keystone electric light studio was promptly turned over to Teddy as soon as his generous intentions were made known, and a delicious dinner of juicy beefsteak and liver was served in two courses, the latter as a compliment to "Fuzzy" the Keystone Persian cat; while a special desert of cheese was served in honor of the Keystone white rat.

The mixed character of the company required tactful handling on the part of the host as the following list of guests will suggest. There were present, the two Keystone bears Mary Ann and Percy, and Kid, the big white bulldog, who appears in Mabel Normand's play "Mickey." Then there was "Fuzzy" the Persian cat already referred to, and Tige also of the cat kind; and against these aristocratic personages the little white Keystone rat. The Keystone broncho, Jasper, was not invited, so it is said, because of his dissimilar tastes, but was provided by way of compensation with a banquet all his own. The Keystone monkey, however, was invited, and was careful to attend.

Teddy, while he is said to be quite temperamental, has a big and generous heart, and was quite self-sacrificial on the night of the banquet. He even prevailed on his guests to forgo their inherent hatreds of generations past, and the evening was spent in jollity with only a few good-humored growls as a suggestion of more primtive circumstances. The beefsteak and liver and also the cheese, was dispensed by pretty Keystone stars, after which the guests and their host, full and happy, retired to their respective quarters.

NEW COMEDY COMPANY.

One of the latest recruits to film land is J. S. Klein, the well-known lawyer, who entered the picture business last week as president of The Commonwealth Comedy Company. "The Commonwealth Company," Mr. Klein states "will produce one-reel comedies under the direction of George Orth, a well-known comedy director and a man thoroughly conversant with all the angles of comedy production. Our productions will be released on one of the big programs, one each week."

"Our comedian, who will be featured in all of our productions, is Louis Smile, and judging from what I have seen of his work he will live up to his name. The supporting company will include Constance Delmar, Elsie Yumell, George Ross, Charlie Cappollo and many others all well known in motion picture industry."

"After spending quite some time looking for a studio with a desirable location, we decided on Mr. Steiner's studio and laboratory which is located at Cliffside, N. J., and immediately leased the property."

VOTE OF THANKS FOR KAUFMAN.

At the recent meeting of the Teacher's Institute, held at Gallipolis, O., in Feb. '16, the following resolution was passed:

"We wish to also extend our thanks to Mr. J. M. Kaufman for his pictures, and commend his bringing to our city and county the pictures of current events and others, which we consider of high educational value."

J. M. Kaufman is manager of the Gallipolis Theater, and one of the first promoters and prominent workers in the M. P. E. L. of A. This resolution is in keeping with his policy of uplifting the business and shows his efforts are appreciated in his home town.

FOX GETS ANOTHER CHILD ACTRESS.

Margaret Laird, an eleven-year-old from Birmingham, Ala., is the latest addition to the large group of screen children who appear in William Fox screen productions. Margaret came with her mother from the South with a view to doing picture work. While on the ferry from New York to Fort Lee to apply for a job at one of the studios scattered along the Hudson, little Miss Laird was observed by a Fox star. The latter asked her why she didn't go into films. Miss Laird told her she was on her way to try that very thing. Two hours afterward, the girl was at work with a Fox company of players.

Among the Picture Theaters

Regent Theater, Kansas City, Mo.

Frank L. Newman, President of Company Operating One of Th's City's Best Photoplay Houses, Embarked in Business in 1905—Has Successfully Conducted Many Picture Shows Since—Music Furnished by Eight-Piece Orchestra and Big Kimball Pipe Organ.

THE REGENT THEATER is one of the largest picture houses on Kansas City's "White Way." Twelfth street, called the "Great White Way" because of the crowds that surge back and forth all day and far into the night, is one of the city's busiest thoroughfares. From Broadway to McGee street, a distance of seven blocks, it might be called "Cinema Row," from the number of picture houses that are located within those bounds. Some of these theaters are large, others are small, but they all do thriving business.

The Regent is situated on the south side of Twelfth street, between Grand avenue and Walnut street, each of which has a car line, and is an ideal location. With a frontage of 38 feet and a depth of 76 feet the house is built on a foundation capable of carrying a ten-story building. It has a double roof, which affords fine ventilation and renders the theater comfortable in the hottest days of summer. Between the roofs is a space of 10 feet with vents for supplying fresh air. The ceiling is a stucco grill 40 feet from the floor, and in the ceiling are rows of electric lights which serve to keep the house from being entirely dark at any time. Because of this height it would be extremely difficult to replace the lamps when they burn out, as they often do, were it not for a simple device planned by the manager when the house was being built. Instead of fitting the lamps from the inside, openings were made in the lower roof and the lamps were slipped through these from above. When a bulb burns out all that the house repair man has to do is walk up the stairs to the top floor, which is really the lower roof, lift out the flexible conduit and put in a new bulb.

Being of concrete, the building is, of course, fireproof, and is of the latest construction, as it was opened in March, 1916. The lobby and stairways are of marble. One thing that impresses patrons particularly is the absence of the sensation of "hitting back" from the screen. Every picture shown is steady and clear. This is due to two reasons. One is that the bases of the operating machines are set in concrete and are so firm that there is not the least vibration. The other reason is that the walls are of cement and stucco in neutral tints with scarcely any side lighting. The house seats 640 and has a balcony extending over three-fifths of the auditorium. The high ceiling allows for this balcony space with a drop of six inches in each tier of chairs, so that a free view of the screen is possible in every part upstairs. Each step in the balcony has an electric light in front. Some idea of the value of the theater may be gained from the information that the building cost $65,000, the furnishings and equipment $16,000, and that the ground on which the building stands is held at $300,000. This for a lot only 76 feet deep is among top prices for real estate.

Every possible convenience is provided for patrons. In the basement rest rooms are furnished with the best of taste, pretty rugs on the floor and wicker chairs giving a homelike effect. Telephones are provided free of charge. Everything about the place gives evidence of care and order. Shows run from 9 o'clock in the morning until 11 at night every day in the week. Saturday and Sunday attendance is always so big that many are turned away from every performance. One price is charged for seats in all parts of the house, including boxes, and that is 10 cents. Only one exception is made to this rule. When a picture of more than six reels is shown the admission is raised to 15 cents, because the length of time necessary to run cuts the number of performances. But in no case has more than 15 cents been charged in this house. Pictures shown at the Regent are shown in Chicago for 25 cents, Manager Newman says.

Since the opening of the Regent an eight-piece orchestra and a $10.000 Kimball pipe organ have been regular features of every performance. Bert Lewis, leader of the orchestra, is considered the best piano player in this line of work in the West.

Frank L. Newman, president and manager of the incorporated company controlling the Regent, holds the same office with the corporation owning the Royal theater. He plunged into the picture world in 1905 when he saw a show on the Bowery in New York which gave him an idea for something along higher lines. He opened the third picture theater in St. Louis in 1906 and made a success of it for three years. Seeing an opportunity for more money, he opened a theater in Joplin, Missouri, and in 1909 embarked in the same line in St. Joseph, Missouri, where he was even more successful. He remained there until 1912, when he sold his theater and went to New York. There he met a Kansas City real estate man who told him of the good points of the town, and as the lure of the West was strong Mr. Newman decided to try a new field. He came to Kansas City and looked about for a suitable location for a first class theater. Main street seemed the very place, but when he tried to secure a lease on some ground he met with vigorous opposition on all sides from retail merchants, who feared that a picture house would lower the tone of that district. But he won against great odds and after his theater was in operation the men who were strongest in fighting him admitted that the theater was a good thing for business. The opening was in June, 1914. The building of the Royal cost $107,000, and there is probably nothing finer in construction and furnishings in this part of the country. Only the best is given in pictures and the splendid service and attention to patrons' comfort has built up a regular attendance. It is no uncommon sight to witness a throng waiting on the sidewalk for a performance to end so that they may get in. The house has a seating capacity of 750. One of the big expenses of the house is an orchestra costing $50 a day. Besides rest rooms for grown-up patrons, there is a playroom for children and a maid to look after them while parents enjoy the show. Ten cents is the price here, too, except for loges, which are 20 cents. A raise in price to 15 cents was made for a recent exhibition of "Snow White." And speaking of "Snow White," Manager Newman is the man who managed the recent exhibition of that picture in Convention Hall when the Kansas City Star was host to something like 65,000 children and grown persons. The picture was shown on four screens at one time and eight machines were used. It was the biggest thing attempted in this line in the history of motion pictures. Telegrams of congratulation were received by Mr. Newman from picture men in all parts of the country on the success of the undertaking.

Knickerbocker Theater, Nashville, Tenn.

Latest Entry Into the Exhibiting Field in Nashville Exemplary in Construction and Architecture—All of Its 1,200 Seats Are of the Air Cushion Type—Under Management of William H. Wassman.

SURPASSING in elegance and scientific construction former attempts at theatrical architecture in Nashville, Tenn., fireproof in every respect, and catering to the highest possible class of patronage, stands the Knickerbocker, the latest entry into the picture theater field in that city. Opened in the fall of 1916, this theater sprang into immediate popularity with followers of the silent drama in Nashville, and through its spacious and comfortable construction has lured from the road shows many followers of dramatic art. With a seating capacity of 1,200, the house compares favorably in size with the playhouses of the city, and the balcony is probably the largest in this vicinity.

Each seat in the building is of the air-cushion type, and of the latest opera design. Realizing that one of the prime requisites of a successful theater is an abundance of fresh air, particular pains were taken to provide for this element of comfort. Accordingly, a mushroom system of ventilation was installed, the fresh air being washed before being drawn down into the building from the roof. After passing through the washing machine the fresh air is circulated through the auditorium by means of nozzle devices placed under alternating seats throughout the building. The air is not allowed to remain in the theater, but is promptly drawn out through the top, thus furnishing a constant circulation of fresh and cleanly washed air. This system not only serves to ventilate the building, but in the winter, when heat is required, the same method is employed, except that before the air is passed into the building it is forced through a heating device, which brings it to the proper temperature. Commensurate with the system of ventilation is that of cleaning. Powerful vacuum machines remove all traces of dirt and waste accumulations.

Extending from the balcony around the sides of the wall are tiers of boxes, with roomy cane chairs upholstered in plush. The boxes include the front section of the balcony, and the entire box arrangement follows the general lines of a horseshoe. When the theater was first opened the balcony seats were considered the best in the house, and priced accordingly. Admission at that time was 25 cents for box seats, 15 cents balcony and 10 cents parquet. The scale at present, however, is 10 cents for all seats daytime and 15 cents night, except on special occasions, when the prices are advanced.

The Knickerbocker extends through an entire block, with entrances on both the Sixth avenue and Boulevard sides. Although the lower floor follows a gradual decline from the rear end to the Sixth avenue entrance, there are no steps at either end, this item having been eliminated through a keen bit of constructive work in graded surfaces. At the screen end there is a spacious foyer between the outer lobby and the auditorium proper, and a smaller one at the Boulevard, or rear entrance. The decorative effects of the entire house are carried out in ivory, green and gold tones, and harmonize with the furnishings throughout. The building is of brick and stone, with concrete floor and marble stairs. All the uprights, beams, arches, etc., are of steel. The building is faced at both ends with white tile brick, blending with strips of red tile used at intervals, while suspended shelters of glass and steel protect both entrances. There are four flights of stairs to the second floor, two from each corridor. Two smaller flights lead to the mezzanine floor, where the offices and store rooms are located, as well as the operating booth.

The operating room reaches the acme of perfection, both from a standpoint of safety and convenience. It has been stated that this booth alone cost more than the entire Crystal theater, Nashville's first photoplay house, erected by the same management as now controls the Knickerbocker. It is constructed of reinforced concrete and is equipped with thick steel doors. Further reducing the possibility of danger, a separate room, built along the same lines as the operating booth, is built adjoining for the purpose of storing and rewinding film. No reels but those in the projectors are left in the projection room proper, but are carried immediately to the ante-room when removed from the machine. Two Baird projectors enable the management to put on an entire seven-reel show without changing reels. Outside this department are located washrooms, etc., for the operators' and office use. At the foot of the rear stairs there are both ladies' and gentlemen's retiring rooms, equipped with the latest sanitary devices.

The lighting system could hardly be improved upon. Over the auditorium and mezzanine floors are sixteen suspended semi-direct chandeliers of improved design. By the use of specially constructed controlling devices, these lights may be made to give any degree of brilliancy desired, which are made to alternate in colors between shows. Numerous softly shaded wall lights contribute to the general system of illumination.

The Knickerbocker was completed at an approximate cost of $100,000. A Kimball pipe organ, with echo attachment, alone represents $10,000 of this amount, both the main instrument and the echo division being of the most modern type. Manager William H. Wassman maintains a seven-reel program. He is surrounded by a capable corps of assistants, and union operators are in charge of projection.

Ruby Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.

Its Central Location Enables Management to Keep a Clientele of Transient and Steady Patrons—Modern From Cellar to Garret—Managed by J. A. Murphy.

DAILY change of program, features and bills of the highest class, and seven shows daily are responsible for the success of the Ruby theater, at Market and Marshall streets, Philadelphia, Pa. Though the house seats only four hundred, its location on one of the busiest commercial streets of Philadelphia gives it a large transient patronage, and its accessibility by trolley from nearby residential districts has enabled it to establish a steady clientele, built up by newspaper advertising and a large mailing list, as well as by attractive lobby displays and a front that strikes the eye.

Ruby Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.

The house was completed in September, 1915, and is modern and finely equipped. Its small seating capacity permits an intimate and cozy interior, and it is notably comfortable. It stands on a corner lot, 50 by 120 feet, and the architects have taken advantage of the fact that both Market and Marshall streets are unusually wide to develop both the front and side facades to good advantage. The theater is of fireproof construction, and the builders were under instructions to use only the best of materials in its construction.

The house is also fortunate in having an alert and up-to-date manager, Joseph A. Murphy, a thorough showman of likeable personality. Mr. Murphy's experience in the amusement field has been unusually varied, especially for a man who is only thirty-one years old. He was formerly connected with the American Theater Stock Company, for whom he produced several musical comedies. He was a member of Frank Dumont's famous minstrels, and has also worked at the Lubin studios. His first enterprise as a motion picture exhibitor was at the Opera House in Swedesboro, N. J., and later he was assistant manager at the Regent theater, a house of much the same character as the Ruby, but located on Market street some distance from it.

The facade of the house is notably cheerful and pleasing. The lobby is tiled and inclosed with glass and mahogany doors, and a well equipped ticket booth occupies the center. A handsome bronze and glass marquee projects over the sidewalk topped with a massive electric sign displaying the name of the house in colored lights. Above are a series of plate glass windows assuring ample illumination to offices, and the whole is crowned by a massive yet gracefully proportioned Renaissance cornice. Three-sheet and one-sheet posters are the usual lobby display, held in special frames attached to the walls, and there are two special portable frames for photographs. A 10-cent admission charge is made.

Entering the house the interior, because of the 25-foot ceiling, gives an impression of spaciousness, and, though there are but four hundred seats, they are of extra large size, comfortable and upholstered in leather. A red velvet carpet covers the aisles, and the decorations are in gray, with old rose paneling picked out with gold beading. Medallions in oil adorn the walls. There are seven exits, two of which lead to a court in the rear, one to Marshall street, and four to Market street. The ceiling consists of four inverted domes, three of which contain outlets—part of an efficient ventilating system, in which fans and an air filter also have part. The fourth dome, that nearest the screen, is connected with the main organ chamber.

Illumination is semi-indirect and consists both of a series of wall brackets and of chandeliers, which are suspended from the ceiling.

Interior of Ruby Theater, Philadelphia, Pa.

The screen consists of a white plaster wall squared to give a picture 10 by 13½ feet. The throw from booth to screen is 75 feet. On one side of the screen is an illuminated clock, and on the other a space of similar dimensions which is used to announce the succeeding day's feature. The screen is surrounded by a frame of artistic design. The orchestra pit is separated from the auditorium proper by a brass rail and red velvet curtains. There the console of the organ and a grand piano are situated. Music has always been a feature of the house, and the present organ, itself a fine instrument, is being replaced by an even larger and finer one containing all the latest devices. On each side of the screen the organ pipes are decoratively grouped.

A well appointed ladies' retiring room and a men's smoking room are part of the house equipment, and competent attendants are in charge. The house is steam heated, and thermostats regulate the temperature to the comfort point.

A projection room, 22 by 12 feet, contains two Power's 6A machines in charge of Projection Engineers Frank Adams and Nathan Fehrman, both of whom are members of Local No. 307, Operators' Union.

All the big feature releases are shown here on a schedule of seven shows a day, with daily change of program. The first show starts at 10 a. m. and runs continuously until 11:15 p. m.

Advertising announcements are run in the daily newspapers, and a large mailing list is carefully dispatched each week. The theater is one of many in Philadelphia run under the direction of the Stanley Company. The staff is smart and competent. The ushers are girls. By reason of its central location the house is profitably kept open all year round.

British Notes

THE Alhambra theater, Leicester Square, London, one of the English houses of successful revues, has started a moving picture innovation. It is a Ham and Bud comedy as a curtain raiser.

Accounts received from Rome show that the premiere of "The Invasion of America," at the Apollo theater last week, was the scene of a tremendous pro-ally demonstration in which all the favors of the audience were for the new ally—as she was hailed when the United States Ambassador entered. Verily the film is helping the molding of modern history.

Before leaving Continental trade affairs it is important that American manufacturers should note that the licensing authorities in Paris have decided not to entertain serial films for censorship for some time to come.

In evidence at the Kinema Commission the Dean of Worcester furnished the results of a searching inquiry into children's preferences of moving picture films, based upon answers to teachers' questions in the schools at Worcester. Pictures against which children expressed dislike were murders, burglaries, tragedies and love making, in the order named. Love making pictures were described by boys as silly. Of films in favor cowboy subjects came first, comic pictures second, war pictures third, detective pictures fourth, while travel and industrial, news, romantic drama and novels had only a few supporters each. The Dean observed that the films exhibited at the theaters in the city were, with few exceptions, not objectionable on grounds of indecency, but they were often highly sensational and melodramatic. Society dramas of certain kinds helped to lower the standard of reverence for women and familiarized the young mind with loose ideas of the relations of the sexes. In reply to a question asked by the chairman of the Commission (the Bishop of Birmingham) the Dean reported that he had not encountered any case of immorality among the audiences at the theaters.

Following close upon the order forbidding the importation into Great Britain of posters, lithographs, etc., from abroad comes a new paper restriction order from the Board of Trade. As and from the beginning of March it is illegal to make or exhibit any paper posters exceeding 600 square inches in area, or equivalent in the conventional sizes used in the trade to anything larger than a double crown. While confining posters to this size or less no stipulation is made as to the quantity to be used. Furthermore posters already in stock—that is actually printed—are exempt from the order. It is also intended in the course of a few days to introduce regulations to stop the indiscriminate circulation by mail of general trade catalogues and advertising circulars. They may only be sent out to customers when asked for. The additional clause of the order will also prohibit the publication of newspaper contents bills except for display at the publishing offices of the newspaper, and the whole order applies equally to every industry. The publicity men in the film trade regard the order as being of questionable effect, since it restricts size only and not quantity. Another question that is being extensively asked concerns the coming embargo of posted circulars. Is a synopsis of a film a circular within the meaning of the order? Synopsis design and get-up is one of the most advanced of the specialized arts associated with the moving picture business here. It threatens to hit hard those film dealers—and we have not a few of them—who rely for bookings upon an alluring synopsis to dazzle the optics of the exhibitor.

Everything associated with a black cat does not imply good fortune. The use of a black cat as a trademark led two renting exchanges into the law courts last week when Tatem & Co. of Cardiff obtained an injunction against the Gaumont Co. restraining them from using a black cat design in their film advertisements. Tatem & Co. claimed priority to the black cat as a film trademark. The Gaumont Co. used a black cat design last year to advertise a set of comedies they purchased from the Universal Co.

At last week's meeting of the Kinematograph Trade Council a resolution was passed urging the trade journals not to advertise or review films rejected by the British Board of Film Censors. The motion arose out of a discussion on the loyalty of the trade to the Board of Censors. Cecil Hepworth further proposed penalizing exhibitors who under "momentary irritation" scrapped their agreements and exhibited uncensored subjects.

Australian Notes

ON AND after March 1 the importation of cinematographs and films into Australia without the consent of the Minister for Customs will be prohibited. A proclamation to that effect was issued this week.

Under the War Precautions Act a new regulation was issued this week by the Federal Treasurer to limit the expenditure on amusements. The regulation provides that no person, firm or company shall, without the written consent of the Treasurer, erect any building or structure for amusement purposes. Make any structural alteration in or to a building used for amusement purposes. Expend money for the purpose of establishing an amusement business in any building which was not at the commencement of the regulations used primarily for amusements.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Hughes, states that the Federal Government has decided to undertake the censorship of all films imported into the country, as from March 1. The constitution of the new Federal Board is such as to restore general confidence that future censorship will not be as embarrassing or eccentric as has been under the state system. Any pictures not passed by the new board will be liable to seizure under the Customs Act as a prohibited import.

* * *

To the date of writing the State Board has not announced if it will cease activities at the end of this month, and the attitude of exchangemen and exhibitors is that the sooner they shut up shop the better. Two Paramount subjects, "The Storm" and "Ashes of Embers," were held up at the last moment by the censors last week, after all advertising arrangements were completed for their screening at the Waddington circuit. These subjects were viewd by the chief secretary (Mr. Fuller) and passed by him, after considerable delay. The release of "The Vice Trust" has not been questioned in Victoria, but the picture has been banned in New South Wales.

Under the new board, if a picture is banned, it will not be screened in any part of Australia. This naturally will be much fairer than the present state of affairs, which has been a joke to the spectator, and a serious annoyance to the exchanges and showmen.

The Mosman (N. S. W.) Council recently opposed the proposed erection of a picture theater in the Zoological Gardens at Taronga Park, on the grounds that moving pictures had no educational value. It is easily seen that the councillors have not attended a picture theater lately.

After five years' engagement C. L. Yearsley has resigned his position as director of advertising throughout Australia for Union Theaters, Ltd., and Australasian Films, Ltd. This embraces a circuit of thirty theaters throughout the six capitals of the commonwealth, and also many suburban and provincial shows. Mr. Yearsley came to Australia originally from Spokane, Wash., to handle the firm's publicity when J. D. Williams was managing director, and has been responsible for the placing of moving picture advertising on an organized basis here. Mr. Yearsley has always specialized in unusual lobby displays, and was the first in this country to use moving figures in the place of poster cut-outs. He is also a prolific newspaper and advertisement writer, and has the unique reputation of being the man who did most to popularize Mary Pickford in Australia, it being he who conceived and carried to completion the idea for the presentation of the loving cup and album to this actress three years ago. He was also responsible for the launching of the Triangle plays in this country, introducing many novel advertising ideas. A number of offers have been made to retain Mr. Yearsley in the film industry here, but it is his desire to return to the center of things (and incidentally, his native land). He is returning to America during April.

John F. Gavins' feature production, "The Death of Captain Fryatt," was released in Sydney this week, and proves to be a very good production on patriotic lines. The scenario was written by Agnes Gavin from the authentic details of the capture of Fryatt and his subsequent trial and death. The production is all that could be desired, while artistic subtitles, designed locally by Syd Nicholls, add greatly to the general tone of the picture. The Australian rights have been secured by Australasian Films, Ltd., and it is understood that negotiations for the English and South African rights are under way. In all probability Mr. Gavin will send a special representative to Canada with the picture some time during the next month or so. As a box-office attraction the Fryatt picture is proving already to be a much greater success than the producer's other success, "The Martyrdom of Nurse Cavell."

Franklyn Barrett is preparing for the production, on a very large scale, of a feature picture to aid in the recruiting campaign. It is understood that this will be one of the most pretentious efforts in picture production ever attempted in Australia. The government has sanctioned the use of the Liverpool military camp and the soldiers encamped there for several big battle scenes.

The prices of admission range from 1/- to 3/- (approximately 25c to 75c).

JANE GUTHRIE A GOLDWYN SCENARIO READER.

Jane Guthrie, one of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation play and scenario readers, is much more than the sister of one of America's best known women novelists and essayists, for she is, herself, an author and essayist of distinction. Mrs. Guthrie literally took up her pen in self-defense for one of her brothers and two sisters had achieved widespread literary reputation.

Mrs. Guthrie was born in Ohio. Her husband, Frank Morton Guthrie, was a Baltimore and New York man, a Yale graduate and founder there of one of the fraternities. While on trips with her husband, Mrs. Guthrie began her first literary work which appeared in the "Outlook." Later she began writing for the various Harper publications, the Metropolitan, Judge, Vanity Fair and the New York Evening Post.

Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, Mrs. Guthrie's sister, is a novelist, playwright and essayist and now reaches a tremendous audience daily through her work for the Hearst publications and their allied newspapers.

Elda Furry to be Featured

ELDA FURRY, who will be featured with Wilfred Lucas in "Her Excellency, the Governor," the Triangle play now in course of production, under the personal supervision of Allan Dwan at the new Yonkers studio, is in private life Mrs. De Wolf Hopper.

A native daughter of Pittsburgh, Pa., Miss Furry is extremely loyal in her allegiance to the city of smoke and dollars. She is a blond, stands well above the average height, and is not only beautiful but radiates breeding and intelligence, a combination that is not too common to pass unnoticed. In fact, Miss Furry would be apt to hold the eye and the inspiration of an artist wishing to picture the typical modern American girl. Those who have watched her initial work under Dwan's direction predict a brilliant future for her on the screen.

Elda Furry.

Elda Furry made her debut as a motion picture player during the current year in "The Battle of Hearts" with William Farnum. Previous to that she had won much favor on the legitimate stage, as the heroine of Edgar Selwyn's "The Country Boy" and as prima donna of "The Quaker Girl."

"But despite my brief experience," she declares, "I am already firmly convinced that motion picture work is the most fascinating form of acting. It develops all of one's resources, and every day's work means a new adventure. I love the open and would be perfectly happy if Mr. Dwan would keep me out 'on location' all the time."

"INTOLERANCE" HAS BIG RECEPTION IN LONDON.

J. J. McCarthy, general manager of D. W. Griffith's attractions, received the following cable yesterday from London regarding the first performance of Mr. Griffith's great spectacle, "Intolerance" in Drury Lane theater Saturday:

"Intolerance reception greatest in Drury Lane history. Cheers and applause after first act lasted seven minutes. Everyone certain it is tremendous triumph. Splendid advance bookings and Sunday newspaper reviews praise it unanimously."

A subsequent cable from Business Manager Burlock, who represents the American company in London, says that Mr. Griffith was called before the curtain at the end of the presentation and given the greatest ovation ever tendered an American producer in England.

"Button Making." (Pathe-International)

THE manufacture of buttons from vegetable ivory is well illustrated in this film. We learn that the nuts of the Tagua Palm are used for this purpose, that after they are gathered they are baked for a lengthy period, the shells removed and the nuts sorted. They are then cut in slices after which they are re-cut into button shapes. The drilling of the holes and the final polishing and sewing of the buttons on the cards finish the illustration.

"Abalone Pearl Fishing." (Paramount-Bray)

A well photographed group of views disclosing at close range how the abalone pearl fishing industry is carried on. The picture which appears in No. 63 of the Paramount-Bray-Pictograph, was photographed from a platform constructed on a reef half a mile out in the ocean. Through the picture we learn that fishing for abalone oysters in the shells of which beautiful and costly pearls are occasionally found, is a hazardous occupation as pursued on the Western coast of our continent, for the reason that devil fish abound in these waters. We see the divers equipped with diving suits descend into the water from power launches and gather the oysters, which are found fastened to the rocks, into wicker baskets. Once above water the oysters are opened and searched for the hidden treasure which is found on an average of one pearl to every thousand oysters. We also witness the removal of what is known as the abalone blister which appears on the inside of the shell and is used in the manufacture of jewelry. This is an exceptionally interesting and instructive picture.

"Wine Making in France." (Mutual-Gaumont)

"Reel Life No. 50" contains a well-illustrated description of wine making in France. We are taken to the vineyards where we are permitted to watch the laborers gathering the luscious clusters of grapes into huge baskets which are then taken to the wine press. Here we learn how the juice is pressed from the grapes and placed in wooden vats to ferment before being bottled for use.

"Tree Animals." (Educational Films Corporation of America.)

An interesting number of the Ditmars "Living Book of Nature" contains a study of the various tree animals which in the course of the struggle for existence have been forced to take to the trees for safety. The first of these in the Honey "Bear" of South America, a queer little animal whose place in the scientific classification of animals is still in debate. It eats insects, eggs, reptiles and fruit, has fore paws like hands, and a prehensile tail. The Brazilian opossum is another queer little animal with sensitive ears as thin as paper which wiggle continuously and catch every sound. It also has a prehensile tail always on the alert to keep it from falling. The Brazilian opossum has a leaning toward beaten eggs, and is most particular to wash its face after partaking of this delicacy. The flying phalanger of Australia is a night prowler and has piercing dark eyes, and while it can be fed bits of meat from the point of a stick, it is not to be trusted. With its body set for flying it is perfectly square in appearance. Views of the phalanger in flight are also shown.

"New York's Great Aquarium." (Universal)

The "Universal Screen Magazine No. 16" contains some excellent views photographed in the New York Aquarium. Among the denizens of the deep, gathered from the seven seas of the earth, which are shown is the Bony Gar which inhabits the great Lakes and Rivers of the United States, and which we are told are useless for food, vicious in temperament, and measure from five to six feet in length. We learn from the picture that heavy scales provide armor protection against enemies, following which explanation the Pike and Muskalonge are shown. The latter we are told is the most powerful and gamy of all fresh water fish, that live bait is used in trolling for it, that it weighs at maturity 100 pounds on an average, and is found in northern American waters. The Pike which makes excellent food, weighs on an average 40 pounds.

Then there are the Rainbow Parrot Fish which are found in tropical waters and are known as chameleons of the deep. They are on an average four feet in length and 60 pounds in weight. Their peculiar head gives them their name. They have the power of changing color on the approach of an enemy, and near the rocks they become mottled in appearance.

"Ye Old Time Coon Hunt." (Paramount-Bray)

The scenes in this subject which will be found in the Paramount-Bray-Pictograph No. 63, were photographed in South Carolina. In the picture we see the darkies and their dogs starting out at break of day to track the coon. After considerable disappointment the coon is at last scented by the dogs and forced into a tree where he hangs suspended to a limb by his tail. The colored hunters forming a ring around the tree perform a dance while one of their number climbs the tree and knocks the coon down with a stick. This subject is interesting as a glimpse into the southland, and has frequent comedy touches.

"Henry Thadeus Tinklebottom, Motorist." (Educational Films Corporation of America.)

The first of the 1917 Robert C. Bruce series shows something of his trip from New York to St. Augustine, Fla., and is amusing as well as informing. Henry Thadeus Tinklebottom (Robert C. Bruce) is first seen in his "little old last year's car," which he has revived for the trip south, ploughing through the spring clay of the South Carolina roads. Here we arrive at some conclusion of what the word "mud" really means, and proceed to pity our friend until the climax of the South Carolina mud scene where with the aid of five "niggers" and a "Henry" he succeeds in extricating his huge machine from a bog hole. Arriving in the state of Georgia he discovers that the weak places in the roads have been bridged over, except in a few places where apparently they ran short of bridges and he is forced to motor through water from two to three feet deep.

Having at last arrived where civilization has provided good hard roads of brick or oyster shells, he proceeds to admire the scenery, and we are treated to some beautiful views of the St. Mary River and the cypress swamps of Florida, a singular and interesting sight to the eye of the uninitiated northerner. We also wander with "Henry Thadeus" through one of the beautiful and fruitful orange groves of Florida, and finally buzz through the old stone gates of the city of St. Augustine, Florida, where the first lap of the trip ends.

"Our Islands in the West Indies" (Mutual-Gaumont).

In "Mutual Tours Around the World No. 22" our new possessions in the West Indies recently purchased from Denmark are exploited, views on two of the three islands being exhibited. The islands illustrated therein are St. Thomas and St. Croix. In the film we learn that at the town of Charlotte Amalia on the island of St. Thomas is an impregnable harbor, giving the United States the finest naval base in the West Indies. The harbor and town are protected by small islands and a ridge of mountains behind the town, keeping both secure from the violence of storms or the invasion of hostile fleets. One of the interesting spots shown is "Bluebeard's Castle," which was two centuries ago the stronghold of Captain Teach, the notorious pirate. A Danish fort 260 years old at Charlotte Amalia is also an interesting sight.

St. Croix, of which sugar is the principal product, is the largest and wealthiest of the three islands. Views of the towns of Fredericksted, situated on an open roadstead on the west coast, and Christiansted, on the north coast, are shown. In the pictures many types of colored natives are seen, and we also learn that one of the minor products of the island is sea cotton.

"Tree Surgery" (Pathe-International).

In this picture we learn that a tree which is practically devoured by rot and other diseases can be operated on and given a new lease on life. The tree operated on in the picture is a little more than a shell; yet all the diseased parts are cut away, the parts scraped and swabbed with disinfectant, and fastened limb to limb securely with iron bolts, the cavities are filled with cement and the tree gains a new lease on life. Small defects are also given an equal amount of attention. Grafting fruit trees forms another interesting feature of the picture, and includes closeups of the actual operation, showing the cutting of the limb, the making of the incision and the separating of the bark, after which three twigs from a neighboring tree are placed in the incisions imbedded in grafting wax. In this manner wonderful changes can be wrought in the fruit produced by the tree.

"Birth"

Film Presented by the Eugenic Film Company Teaches Proper Care of Babies.

A FILM based on the principles of eugenics and hygiene is being presented by the Eugenic Film Company, 220 West 42d street, New York City. This film is a remarkable one because of the revelations which it contains, and is not presented as a photoplay. It is entirely educational in character, and is intended for exhibition only before adults, and especially the feminine sex.

In the picture we are shown a baby immediately after its birth. The child in question shows no signs of life, and the closeup views showing the treatment given it to arouse the slumbering spark of life are most interesting and instructive. The ministrations necessary at this period of a baby's life are shown in detail, including the care of eyes, nose and mouth, and finally the dressing of the child while it lies across the nurse's lap, all of which is of infinite interest to "the female of the species."

Then there is the baby of premature birth which must be submitted to a period of incubation. We are allowed to witness the bathing, dressing and general attention paid to babies of this class, according to both old and new methods. Intensely interesting also are the scenes in the hospitals and children's homes where the little ones are cared for from infancy according to scientific and sanitary rules. One of the most valuable lessons taught in the picture is the care and preparation of milk for the babies, and the cleansing and sterilizing of bottles and other accessories. We are also pleased with a glimpse into the babies' ward and the periodical delivery of the babies to their mothers in the lying-in hospital for purposes of refreshment. Scenes showing individual babies being cared for, with bits of comedy worked in to relieve the general gravity of the situation will also be found interesting.

The picture is at present being exhibited at the Eltinge theater, New York, accompanied by a pleasing address by a well-chosen member of the feminine sex. A remarkable thing about this presentation is the absence of any effort to star anyone or anything but the subject in hand. The production is offered as a cinematographic presentation of the sanctity and duties of motherhood.

Fifth Salisbury Beach Offering

Coffee from the Planting of the Seed to the Sacking of it Ready for Shipment at San Jose, Costa Rica, Shown at Rialto.

COFFEE raising as this industry exists in the neighborhood of San Jose, Costa Rica, has been treated fully in the fifth installment of the Salisbury-Beach pictures which are being exhibited weekly at the Rialto theater.

The soil about San Jose is of volcanic origin and admirably suited to the culture of coffee. The manner in which the photographing of the coffee plant at its different stages has been accomplished is very pleasing, following much the same idea as that carried out in "The Birth of a Flower," the plant actually growing and gathering size and strength before our eyes. We learn from this picture that coffee plants bear at from two to three years of age, but produce most prolifically at five years and after. The coffee pod is called a cherry, is not unlike this fruit in appearance, and contains two beans. Pods gathered by hand are carried through water sluices to the pulping machines where the coffee beans are delivered from the cherry. We learn also that the coffee trees when they have grown to the height of 20 feet are pruned back to 10 feet, when they are ready for the next crop. The coffee beans are placed in vats to ferment, after which they are dried and sorted, sacked and hauled to the shipping depot.

Another interesting feature of this installment consists of several closeup views of the armadillo, the monkey, the ocelot which is the smallest of the spotted cat species of Central America, the Mexican white-tailed deer, the wild turkey of Central America, and the lynx. The huge horned beetle and others of the insect family are added to this list of living things shown in this picture.

Paramount-Bray Pictograph at Strand

Strand Theater Adopts Paramount-Bray Pictograph as Weekly Attraction—"Bobby Bumps" Helps to Set Ball Rolling.

AT LAST the Strand theater management has awakened to the entertainment value of a Paramount Pictograph with a Bray animated cartoon as the leavening element. Number 63 goes on record as being the first of the present series to appear on the Strand program.

The Paramount-Bray Pictograph will now be one of the weekly attractions at the Strand and will no doubt be welcomed by its patrons. One of the "Bobby Bumps" cartoons accompanied the first series of educational subjects. The cartoon number will, of course, be alternated with other favorite Bray subjects.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Rebookings.

BRASS TACKS is the title of a new house organ of the Famous Players Star Feature Film Service, Minneapolis. Most of the second issue is given over to rebookings, which is always a fruitful theme when you have stuff to offer that will stand rebooking. One point made is that many of the houses addressed have played The Old Homestead repeatedly and always to good business. The argument is a good one. Before we made theater going a business we recall that we saw A Parlor Match thirteen times in eleven years. As a matter of fact, the better films will pay more on a second showing if they made good the first time. Apart from the reissue talk there is some snappy comment on exhibitors in that territory.

Another Cut Out.

Bennie Ziedman sends in a picture of Paul Noble, of the American, Butte, Mont., with a cut-out of Bill Hart on the front of his car. Of course Bennie is not wholly disinterested in this for he knows that there are a lot of eight sheets of Douglas Fairbanks that can be made into cut-outs, too, and it is Fairbanks whom Bennie is promoting.

Try Th's.

H. A. Gillespie, press man for the Frederick Mercy Theatrical Enterprises, which conducts four theaters in North Yakima, Wash., writes that the week previous to The Man Who Forgot a Personal Letter—not a carbon or duplication—was sent all ministers and organizations likely to be interested, calling attention to the strong plea for prohibition carried by this Robert Warwick vehicle. It drew down packed business for two days, for prohibition drove Tom North and others out of the state and the matter is a live issue. Mr. Gillespie adds:

> I wonder if someone can tell me why a director, according to a press sheet, will spend weeks in arranging for the proper furniture and costumes of another period for a picture and yet will fall down by having a "sousse" who can scarcely sit on a chair write a letter with the most beautiful and symmetrical chirography imaginable, and which brings from a youngster in the seat ahead, the remark: "Gee! Pretty good writin' for a 'stew.'"

We give it up. We can't even tell "Why is a director" let alone why does he do the things he does. That is no worse than the old Lubin stunt of having all letters written by the same person so that a letter and its reply was in the same hand. Mr. Gillespie is an old newspaper man who has just started publicity work and promises to send in stuff from time to time. With four houses to keep supplied, he should not lack material.

All But.

The Mutual press department is issuing press sheets for its features. It is well prepared, but loses part of its value because it is printed on both sides. It would be better to cut out the fancy double printing and use cheaper stock to give the exhibitor something he can cut up without destroying its usefulness. As it stands, he has his choice between the press work and the ready made advertisements on one side and press work and the list of advertising aids on the other. Red ink and good stock do not help the exhibitor. What he wants is stuff he can cut and paste without frills. There are plenty of advertising aids, reasonably priced, and the heralds carry a blank fourth page for house or trade advertising, something that all heralds should do though most of them do not. The ready made advertisements are prepared by the advertising manager of the motion picture section of the Chicago Tribune and are practical and practicable both as to copy and display.

Mr. McCormick also sends in a press sheet for The Garden of Allah which he wrote for the company handling the subject in that section. He says it is his idea of what a press sheet should be. He has none the best of us. We like it, too. It is a press sheet written to be used by the Exhibitor. It is not something written to book the film or to swell the boss and the director all up. It is for the use of the man who has paid out his good money for rental and wants a chance to get it back and some more with it. It offers ten stories, with illustrations, the stories varying in length, but none of them running more than two columns. They are written by a newspaper man in newspaper style and not in press agent language, which is something entirely different. There is also a set of ten ready-set advertisements which can be used as a series or individually, as the house manager prefers. They are all practical advertisements which can be duplicated in any printing office. If press agents will write, it is probable that Mr. McCormick will be glad to send them a sheet and it will show them how to write what Exhibitors want, rather than what they imagine the Exhibitors should want.

Suspended.

Clarence J. Koeting, of the Lyric, Ste. Genevieve, Mo., writes that the printer has boosted prices 65 per cent on him and that the Lyric program has suspended just when it was getting good. Of course the printer blames it on the war, but a boost of more than half is not war stuff; it is war stuff plus. Most printing prices have kept pace with the supplies, but 65 per cent at one fell swoop is almost too much. Mr. Koeting is going to use the Blue Bird heralds and the newspapers. He sends in three newspaper advertisements for comment as to their relative merits on the page. All are framed in three point rule and are mostly type. We reproduce a couple of them. The third gives the titles and dates on one side and the reviews from this paper on the other under the crossline title of Photoplays and Bouquets. This is a good scheme, and in a double column, 3½ inch space, the effect is better than would be a heavier display across the two columns. We do not know what Mr. Koeting has to fight on the same page. If he does not have much trouble in standing out, the six point is enough. If he is buried then he might try a twelve point Klondike border or something of that sort. A twelve point solid border will hardly do. The space is too small to carry it and the irregular border will be better.

Starting off right with Vol. I, No. 1, is sometimes something of a job, but it did not seem to faze three young southerners who have just taken over the Alsha, Atlanta, Ga. For a starter they changed the name of the house to Shamrock and give a two column story as to their reasons, with prizes for the best slogan to fit the new name. The story, and the rest of the sheet, is in just the right key. The Alsha is a neighborhood house and they talk like home folks, simply, convincingly and with little flashes of humor that lighten the lines. For example they start their editorial by saying that they hurriedly wrote an announcement and presently some small boys, not so hurriedly, distributed it. That is a mild sort of joke, and yet it gets a smile where something smarter might sound like an impertinence. It is pleasant and friendly rather than brilliantly clever, but it will make a lot more friends. No intelligent person can read any issue through and not want to go down to the house and see what is doing. If they can keep it up in that strain—and it seems to be natural—they have an unfailing friend-maker in their little sheet. Look over this substitute for the usual formal head:

An English Syndicate Program.

W. Arthur Northam sends in some copies of the programs gotten out by an English syndicate for its various houses, about twenty-five houses using the same general form of program. The cover design is frequently changed, but those at hand all show military sketches in color similar to the two reproduced here. Inside there are four pages of program. The first page gives the house information, the program runs on the two middle pages and over on to the fourth, for you get a lot of entertainment. The show changes in the middle of the week and two programs are given. The program sells for two cents. Balcony prices are higher than the lower floor. The price for the larger houses is fourteen cents for the stalls and twenty-eight cents for the balcony. This includes the war tax on tickets. One house, in a small town, offers monthly tickets. The shortage of paper is reflected to some degree in the quality of the stock, but the programs are well printed and look better than the average job turned out on this side with better stock.

Quinn Likes Ruff.

If we did not know that Washington went dry we should imagine from this letter that Jimquin, of L. A. had been across the street with Ralph Ruffner instead of watching the show. But evidently Mr. Ruffner can do something besides advertise his house. For that matter advertising alone counts for nothing. That merely gets them in. Jimquin says:

> Had the pleasure of dropping into the Liberty, Sponake, recently and bee-lieve me it is a pleasure. That house runs like a watch. From the time you are helped off with your coat until it is slipped on again by one of those ebony-hued descendants of Ham, who are just busting out all over themselves with good humor, you know you are seeing a real show. And, by the way, that good humor seems to be the order of the day around there—it fairly oozes out all about you. If I had been told they were all partners in the business I would have believed it I think, for I don't know any place that I have seen house attaches seem to take such keen delight in being of service. One lad that I talked to was not quite sure of some information I wanted but he did not lose any time about going and getting it. He didn't say "I don't know" and then let you go rustle for it yourself.
> And the organist knew he was accompanying the picture, not playing a solo. So few musicians seem to pay attention to the tempo of a picture only in a general way. Great stress is laid on laying out what are deemed the proper melodies to interpret the story musically, but it seems to me that it is just about as important to fit the rhythm of the music to that of the picture (if you could use that term of a picture) as it is in accompanying a soloist and that just as much care should be taken to keep strictly in tempo with the picture. An audience may not, and probably would not, know just why the pictures and music in one theater are so enjoyable while at another with general conditions equally as good and a musician of reputation in charge of that end of it, the performance seem to lack something. In a good many cases I believe it is because the one player has failed to take cognizance to the necessity of creating a sympathetic synchonism between the ear and the eye and only succeeds in making a jangle of discords between the two.
> Ask Mr. Ruffner first chance you get the whyfore of the 10 or 15 feet of Chaplin stuff run into the opening of Wm S. Hart in "The Gun Fighter" He probably had somehing he was pulling off but I have to admit that it was too deep for me—and I am quite curious to know too. I wasn't quite sure that it wasn't my imagination, because they had just used a shot effect in an almost still house that was so unexpected that I blinked a couple of times, and between blinks I saw Charley Chaplin hopping across the screen. A couple sitting near me remarked about it so then I knew I was not seeing things.
> But that was the only thing I had to guess about. I knew absolutely that the rest of the show was right.

Breezy.

The Hip, Phoenix, Arizona, publishes the Hipograph, a four-page issue. It is self contained, for the lower third of the back page is printed up as an address space. Most of these self-contained programs are small issues, with one page used as the "envelope," but this seems to be something new, and is reproduced here as a suggestion to others. It will be noted that the card is printed upside down. A star sticker such as is used for whist and euchre scores is employed as the seal, but any bit of adhesive paper will do.

The editor seems to believe in abbreviations, for he speaks of Los Angeles as "Los" and calls his house the Hip instead of Hippodrome. The location is given as "34 W. Wash. St." and he does not bother to name the town in the heading. He is a breezy sort of editor, as this extract from his house talk page shows.

> A fool legislator in Texas introduced a bill to close everything on Sunday, prohibiting the selling of gasoline, make it an offense to attend even a free band concert.

Give a long-haired reformer an inch and the goof will start out to hang himself.

Every now and then some Los Angeles transplanted simp comes out after looking at a splendid picture and says: "Why, in Los they only charge 10 cents for pictures. Indeed, I know. I'm from there and the best houses never charge more than a dime."

If the simple minded mutt would only buy a copy of the Los Angeles daily papers and note the same identical pictures that play Phoenix play there and Talley's, Superba, Clune's Broadway, Symphony, Millers, Alhambra, Majestic all charge 10, 20 and 30 cents.

If you want to get the dope buy a 10-cent seat at either one of the mentioned houses and see where they put you.

Have you noted our addition, the Girl Usher; Yes, they have them in Los, that's where we got the idea.

Have ordered the classiest lot of souvenirs for the GIRL PHILIPPA. Every lady will be given one. Not a dinky cheap makeshift, but a souvenir worthy of the name.

The program is badly set, the type is too black and a little too large for the space. There is nothing attractive to the eye about this space, and there is no effort at display. A lighter face would be better than the too-heavy line and a formal program would be better than this series of small display advertisements. Using the same space and twelve point type for titles and eight point for a brief description an effect could be gained that would be more in harmony with the rest. This is only the second issue and we would like to be placed upon the mailing list. We think that editorial page is going to be good.

Bribery.

J. S. Smart, of the Royal Opera House, Port Hope, Ont., is resorting to bribery in promising that if we do not sit down too heavily upon his program he will send in his newspaper work. He writes:

> I enclose our latest program, which might be called a "vest-pocket-railroad" as it is a combination of the two styles. Six weeks ago we got out our first one, which was four pages, and last week we changed it to six, a size which gives a more convenient makeup for the three changes of features and permits of ads. being included. A criticism would be very much appreciated.
> In addition to the program we use five inches, double column, every day in the only paper which is read by everybody, and get a good deal of reading matter in it. "Picture Theater Advertising" and your department have taught me all I know about the business, as I have been in it only six weeks. If you don't roast the program too hard I will write again and give you a chance at my newspaper ad.

Mr. Smart need not have been apprehensive of criticism. He gets out a good issue. The first is a four pager on gray card, pages 3 by 4½, with the program on the inside pages set crosswise on the page and covering both pages. Side boxes are used for the dates and times of showing, three changes a week. The back page carries an underline. The six pager provides a page to a change on the three inside pages. House announcements appear at the top and bottom of the Wednesday-Thursday page and two advertisements appear below the outer boxes; an orderly arrangement that is not at all intrusive. There is a pair of advertisements on one of the back pages. The house talk runs on the front page, both issues. The only thing we do not like about the folder is the color of stock, a vivid red that sinks the black. Black on red is a good combination only when large type is used and one with six or eight point. Mr. Smart appears to have devised this layout himself and if he will send in a copy on white paper we'll be glad to reproduce it, as it is a handy model. The house talk he writes is sound and convincing. Here is a sample:

OUR GUARANTEE.

> A couple of weeks ago we said we were merchants—selling entertainment.
> The biggest stores have won success and held it—by guaranteeing "Satisfaction or your money refunded."
> So it's up to us to do the same thing.
>
> If you're ever disappointed, we want you to ask for your money when you come out.
>
> Just say, "I didn't like the picture," or "The house was cold"—or whatever the trouble was.
> You'll get your money, an apology and the promise that it won't happen again.
>
> You can take only one thing away with you—an opinion.
>
> And it's our business to see that it's a good one.

Good for Waterville.

Waterville, Maine, is our second choice for a place to live in, for that is where Picture Theater Advertising and Technique were written. It has been a dead advertising town until lately, but now it has combination program for the four theaters, the Opera House, Silver, Royal and Bijou. With Oakfield, Fairfield and Winslow to appeal to, the new paper has a large clientele to draw from and also to sell its advertisers, and they make a good showing on their early issues. It would be better to set the programs as such instead of display advertisements, for the program spaces are far too full of type. This would also give a little more space for the reading matter, but there is enough good reading at present to carry the four page sheet. It is sent out in a special wrapper printed up:

DO NOT DELAY ME
I Am Wrapped Around a Copy of the MOVING PICTURE PROGRAM

The first and last lines are in bold type and the others in roman type. It makes a good introduction.

Steve Is Still There.

Steve Farrar is still running the Casino, Eldorado, Ill., though he has been keeping it mighty secret lately. The other day he sent in some stuff, just to prove himself still alive. He is still using cheap throwaways; rather gaudy circulars, because he knows they bring in the money, but he is also using a small colored cover four-page folder, with the house talk on the back. It is good house talk, and we are going to run both of them as samples for others. It is not florid, but it is sincere, and that counts for more.

> He stood in the lobby watching the picture one evening last week and, turning to Steve, he said: "Why is it that in some theaters I have to move around until I find the right spot where my eyes focus on the pictures, while here at the Casino, I can sit in any part of the house and get a beautiful clear picture, without a trace of eye-strain or flicker?"
> Well, when Steve recovered his breath, he explained to him that in the Casino, we focus the picture. That for the money he pays into our box office we furnish him something in addition to a well-balanced program of excellent pictures—pictures in good condition—good stories, etc.—And that something is PROJECTION. We explained that our little operator Eugene Bagby, was a pastmaster of his profession, who takes pride in his work and uses intelligent effort to make our pictures clear, distinct, steady and flickerless, that his efforts are crowned with success, is amply proved when you compare Casino pictures with those anywhere else on earth.

I'm happy this week for I have a picture each night that I know is going to please everyone, and when I know this to be true it makes the job of running this little old theater a lot more fun. But it's a trick that's rarely done. Picking pictures to please all the people is some job. I like for people to tell me when they like or dislike a picture they see on the Casino screen, if it weren't for the people who tell me as they pass out each night, that "There's what I call a real picture—best thing you've had," I don't know what I'd do. I hope that every patron of my theater feels that I am trying to pick the best pictures on the market and the ones that will please him most. I want you to feel that any night you come to the Casino you will be entertained and enjoy yourself. Don't forget to tell me as you pass out if you like the show.

Not in Chicago.

Please note that the address of Bradford & Co., recently given as Chicago, is not correct. It should have been St. Joseph, Michigan. If you want samples of the clever little portrait program they issue, write them there.

A Norther.

Tom North sends in a program of the Stillman, Cleveland, and points out a paragraph for The Vicar of Wakefield in which the text runs: > as the Vicar, in Goldsmith's immortal classic, "The Vicar of Wakefield," enacts the title role in this very wonderful photo-play. A great many of our patrons may feel that, this story being a classic, will not prove very interesting as a picture. We wish to overcome this idea by stating that it is not only good, but one of the best and most interesting attractions we have yet had the pleasure of offering.

> FREDERICK WARDE,
> See it by all means.

This is a good line to pick up for other classics. Because they are classics it does not follow that they lack interest. It is because they are entertaining that they have lived to become classics.

Values.

DON'T spend more than half your time looking for dramatic situations. Spend the rest of the time looking for ideas that will make dramatic situations and you will not be wasting all of your chance. What makes a dramatic situation is not a man with a knife standing over another man. It is the idea back of it that gives the dramatic to the situation. If the dead man is the murderer's own father, the situation is more dramatic than if the victim is merely a man the other caught robbing his chicken roost and had a fight with. The situation may suggest the story leading up to the situation, but the tableau itself is not dramatic if it lacks the idea behind it, and unless situations lead to the ideas (from which they should come as the natural consequence), then they are of no avail. You cannot get several situations and have a five-reel play. You must have a story so planned that the situations are led up to.

The man standing over the body of his victim, for example, may be dramatic if the relationship of the two men is close. If, as suggested above, the dead man is the father of the slayer, the situation is more dramatic than were the victim a chicken thief, but only if there is a good reason for the killing. The murderer cannot be asked to kill his parent merely to make a situation. There must be a clearly explained and acceptable reason for the killing. If the father has interrupted to prevent the boy eloping with the girl he loves, the situation is less thrilling than it would be did the old man interfere to prevent the boy eloping with a married woman, the wife of the father's most intimate friend. The action would be the same, but the story would be stronger. Suppose that instead of this the father came to prevent his daughter from keeping an appointment with a man who sought her ruin. The son comes for the same purpose and kills the old man, supposing him to be the Lothario. Here you get a new development stronger than the old because an innocent action is more terrible. You can have no sympathy with a man who murders his father in the heat of passion. You can better sympathize with a brother's effort to shield his sister from shame. If this effort results in the murder of the parent you can be still more sorry for him.

In all of these examples it will be seen that it is the idea back of the action from which the situation derives its power. Go a little further in your analysis and you will find that the better the story the more direct the appeal. It is not sufficient that you have some sort of story to back up the situation. You must have the best possible story; the story best calculated to win sympathy. If the son merely kills from an overdeveloped sense of duty, the story will stand, but it will not be as appealing as one in which the son, through his intense love for his father sought to shield his parent from suffering through taking the law into his own hands. Now the situation becomes more striking because it is now the excess of filial love which makes the boy a fratricide.

Cultivate a sense of story values. Learn to know how to get your effects from the story and not from the action and you will soon be able to plan stories that tell themselves in the necessary dramatic action. A dramatic story, if capable of being told in action, will be more dramatic in its action than one twisted and distorted to fit predetermined scenes. Get a hint of a story from a situation if you will, but then write the story regardless of the big scene and you may get a different and better big scene if you have a sense of values and let the story run.

We shall have no truly great stories until we have more editors whose own mentality enables them to appreciate the work of intelligent authors and who buy stories for the mental values as exploited in physical action rather than the purely physical appeal to the eye alone.

To give a concrete instance; take a letter just received from a woman who greatly admires a certain actor. He appeared in a role which won her sympathy, but in one scene he knocked a woman down. It made what the editor and director probably regarded as a big scene, but it was so far from the psychology of the role that the scene offended and cost the player his climax, for by the time that was reached he was detested.

Plan your work carefully and you will not lose sympathy for your hero and no play is a truly great play in which the interest is constantly shifting.

A Compliment.

Lately a student wrote in to know if we had a book on short story writing. He said he had four books on the subject and yet had gained more definite information from a copy of Technique of the Photoplay than from the four volumes dealing with story writing. We appreciate the compliment. While we have no idea of offering Technique of the Photoplate as a substitute for books on story writing, it would be well to note that synopsis writers need to study plotting before they can make out real synopses, and the detailed study of the plot, from the purely photoplay angle, is a textbook on the synopsis only that gives all needed information. Technique is not merely a book on photoplay form. It is a book on photplay writing in any form and to write good synopses you need to study the first and second sections in connection with the chapters of Synopsis and Marketing appearing in other parts.

Write Comedies.

If you write comedies, you may find some comfort in the present condition of affairs in the thought that abroad the war brought about a demand for comedy to the exclusion of drama. Where one lives in a condition that is far more forceful than the average drama, the desire for relaxation is but natural, and presently the crudest slapstick should prove more profitable than the best dramas. Brush up on your comedies.

Leaders in Synopses.

Many requests for information as to the use of leaders in the synopsis only have been replied to to the effect that the action determines the leaders, and these cannot be written until the action has been planned. Now comes a correspondent to submit a "sample" synopsis in which leaders are inserted. Will this correspondent and others please note that we did not say that leaders were not used, but that they should not be used. If you write a synopsis, write synopsis and not a bob-tailed script. A clean cut synopsis is better than one interspersed with leaders and portions of scenes. At best you cannot tell much in a synopsis, but tell that little well. Say that ten years have passed instead of using the leader "Ten years later." You can at least be reasosnably fluent. Don't loaf with leaders. Do your work properly.

The Way.

Lately a Los Angeles literary club was addressed by the wife of a local film editor, and the meat of her rather wordy discourse was to the effect that the way to sell scripts was to make your husband take them—which is useful information only to a rather limited number of persons. It throws some light, however, on the reason for some particularly poor stories.

Prove Your Sum.

Seeking to prove his expertness, the waiter in a restaurant showed that he added figures by rows instead of columns, just as a bank accountant can add two or three rows at a time. He started at the bottom and worked to the top and then began at the top and worked down to the bottom to check his addition. It is a good plan to do that with your scripts. Start with scene one and read to the end, and then start at the end and go back to the opening scene, making certain that nothing in the early action nullifies the later scenes or vice versa. No matter how careful you may be, there may be some slight development in your later scenes that does not harmonize with some early action. Go back over the play to get the scenes in a new combination which may bring a new light.

Ingredients.

No one ever tried to make a beef stew out of eggs, sugar and flour, yet that is no more ridiculous than trying to make a happy ending story out of a series of incidents that are improper, merely because happy ending stories sell best.

The Essential.

Two big productions have recently "done a flop" in the English market almost wholly through lack of story, according to the private advices of a trained observer. And both producers are going ahead making stuff that is expected to win through without story because a lot of money has been spent in other directions.

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Amusing.

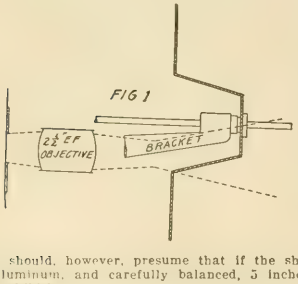
The editor glancing through a "projection department" in a trade paper recently noticed the following advice given to an operator in Carlisle, Indiana, who had been unable to get rid of a blue ghost. The editor says:

> Try 6½ and 7½ inch condensers, moving the lamphouse forward and backward with the light on the screen. If this does not clear it, then use 6½ and an 8½ or 9½ and try them the same way. If that combination does not clear it, then use 7½ and 8½ or 9½.

This was rather amusing. Presumably the only reason the kind-hearted editor did not give more combinations was that he ran out of lenses. Instead of telling the good brother exactly what to do, he asks him to get several dollars' worth of lenses and experiment. This would merely be funny, but for the fact that when Carlisle got his ghost out (if he did) the good Lord only knows what kind of a condition he would have. If he used that 7½ and 9½, I would say, at a guess, that he would be wasting mighty close to 50 per cent. of the electrical energy used in producing light at the arc by reason of the distance from crater to arc lens. Moreover, no account whatever is taken of the waste of light beyond the aperture. Just move your lamphouse around until you get your screen clear, and never mind the rest of it, is what it amounts to. You can clear your screen that way, but it is likely to be a mighty expensive proposition to Friend Manager, either in excessive current bills or lack of brilliancy on the screen. We have not yet arrived at perfection in the lens matters, but a sufficient amount of reliable, concrete information is now available to enable any operator to remove a ghost without sacrificing either screen illumination or power consumption. I would advise Friend Editor to purchase a Handbook; also to look over the light ray matter we have published during the past twelve months.

A Possibility.

In looking over the drawings used to make cuts for the replies to various questions I ran across the accompanying. It was used in answering question 121.



In many instances it is found quite difficult, if not impossible, to get the shutter out far enough to reach the dissolving point of the light ray, and it occurred to me that if a shutter made like this were turned around the other way it would in some instances solve that particular problem, though how long the cone could be made without setting up vibration I don't know. I should, however, presume that if the shutter and cone be made of aluminum, and carefully balanced, 5 inches or even 6 would not be prohibitive.

Fade Out. Fade In. Change-over.

Carl Ragsdale, Colfax, Wash., proposes that at the last end of each multiple reel release the camera operator fade out by slowly closing his lens, and then fade in by slowly opening the lens at the beginning of the next reel, this being the change-over sign.

The principal difficulty of this is that the operator would not be able to recognize it from any other fade, of which there might be several in any reel; also it would be impracticable to make the fade-out of sufficient length to give the operator notice of the impending change-over in time to get his other lamp lighted and ready for business.

Amazing Results Claimed.

The Motion Picture-Scope Company, manufacturers of the Portoscope projector, Chicago, have presented to the department some rather remarkable things with regard to an incandescent lamp which they have christened with the trade name Monoplane. The company says that at a demonstation at the California theater, Chicago, in the presence of representatives of the E. E. Fulton Company, and the McIntosh Stereopticon Company, they used 115 volts A. C., rectified and reduced to 30 volts. The equipment was a Model No. 3 Portoscope, with a new No. 4 lamphouse, Monoplane lamp and a special 30 volt, 20 ampere rheostat. The screen was a Mirroloid, which is about the same grade as the screen known as the Portoscreen. At a distance of 60 feet the company claims to have projected a "splendid 16 foot picture," and at a distance of 80 feet a "brilliantly illuminated 12-foot-wide picture." The company remarks: "Such a remarkable showing was never before made by a portable projection machine."

Yes, that is right, and, I might add, by any other machine, though the words "splendid" and "brilliant" are susceptible of quite some several highly different constructions. The company says: "Everyone present was astonished at the result, and the screen illumination was as good as in the average motion picture theater where standard equipment is used. The pictures were evenly illuminated, and not a trace of flicker was observable."

Boiled down to hard facts, I imagine this much of the above claim can be very thoroughly substantiated. In the first place the Portoscope is an excellent portable projection machine of the "suit-case" type. picture referred to doubtless was remarkable, when we consider the fact that it was illuminated with an incandescent lamp, but if we place it beside an arc lighted picture of equal width, the difference would, I believe, be something more than discernible. But the fact remains that I have myself seen an acceptable 16 foot incandescent lighted motion picture projected in a theater, and what is more the projection was going on from day to day. In other words, the incandescent had ousted the arc lamp in that particular theater. The illumination was not, however, up to the standard of arc lamp illumination. The picture was quite well illuminated, and very evenly illuminated, but the light was distinctly yellow. It was not white and brilliant like the arc lamp illumination.

I have met Mr. Patterson, sales manager of the Motion Picture-Scope Company, however, and when as the claims as above set forth are a little more enthusiastic than the facts will warrant, still, knowing the machine and knowing the man, I am very sure those interested in portable projection machines for home work, or for educational work, will find that the Motion Picture-Scope Company has something of very real value to offer, and that with a semi-reflective screen and a picture cut down to, say 8 feet, they would get what could really be termed a tolerably brilliant illumination; also I have no doubt but that in a dark auditorium with a semi-reflective screen they could put on a very fair 16 foot picture, but the "brilliant" end of it I would have to be shown.

A Brother Editor.

C. A. McMahon, Toronto, Canada, comes south with the following:

> Although I conduct a projection department in a small trade paper here in Canada, I believe that, because of the wholeheartedness and clean methods practiced by yourself in your own department, I am just as welcome to come to "our daddy" as is anyone else. And believe me Friend Richardson, I really do admire your work, both past and present, and appreciate the good and substantial help you have give so freely, whenever and wherever needed. It has been this help which has done so much toward making projection something else than mere crank twisting.
> While following up my studies it occurred to me that I would very much value your opinion with regard to a scientific principle of electrical action. Electro-physics teaches that during the manifestation of electrical energy conditions may be such that a wattless current will become evident. I understand that a mathematical value can be found for this current, and that the phenomenon is well understood from the scientific viewpoint, but what I don't understand is this: Is there an active magnetic field set up in conjunction with this electrical circumstance which is consistent with what we understand about the laws governing magneto-motive force? I am sure your knowledge of electricity has embraced this problem, and I would appreciate your viewpoint on the same.

In conclusion I am sure you will be pleased to learn that an old correspondent of yours is my assistant—I prefer to call him my "partner"—in Canada's largest theater, "The Hippodrome." I refer to Mr. C. A. Dann, who asks me to extend to you his very best wishes. I trust the operator will always be fortunate in having such a friend as you have proved to be, and I look forward to the time when I may be able to have the honor and pleasure of a personal acquaintance.

Well, anyhow it is quite evident I have got one friend in the world. Brother McMahon, the fact that you are conducting a projection department in a trade journal has nothing whatever to do with your right to apply to this department for information.

With regard to the problem you present, I don't really feel myself competent to give an authoritative answer, therefore have referred the matter to the engineers of the General Electrical Company, who reply substantially as follows, and be it noted their reply has the hall-marks of authority:

> What is known in electrical engineering as a wattless current is usually associated with alternating current circuits only. In continuous (direct) current work, the product of voltage times amperes is the watts of energy being consumed, or expended in the circuit, and the current is all energy current. In the usual A. C. circuit, which contains reactance or capacity, or both, the product of voltage times amperes does not represent the total watts of energy consumed as shown by a wattmeter connected in the same circuit; the active value being greater than the wattmeter reading. There is, therefore, some current flowing which is not producing energy or work. For convenience in dealing with A. C. problems the current is considered as being divided into two components, viz.: the energy component in phase with the voltage, and the wattless component lagging (or leading) the voltage by 90 electrical degrees.
> Of course, there is really only one current flowing in any circuit, and wherever an electric current flows, a magneto motive force is established. This question is very thoroughly covered in all text books on alternating current, and we would refer your correspondent to one or more of these for a full explanation of the matter.

Yes, the last paragraph is quite true, but when the aforesaid correspondent undertakes to dig this matter out of standard text books he will run up against the proposition of sifting ten pages to get one line of concrete information, and more often than not, those ten pages will be couched in such highly technical terms that he won't know what in thunder it is all about, unless he is himself a college graduate or an electrical engineer. I know, for I have myself tried to dig that particular proposition out, without arriving at a conclusion which made me altogether sure of my grounds.

Wrong Advice.

John Sailor, St. Louis, Mo., says:

> I notice in the projection department of a trade paper the following: "If you are using a first-class carbon you ought to be able to use a, 5/8 inch carbon top and bottom on amperage up to 60, and a 3/4 inch on amperage from 60 to 80. Use soft cored carbons both top and bottom." Do you consider this as being correct?

Well, Brother Sailor, that depends. You don't say whether the question dealt with alternating or direct current. If alternating was meant, why the answer is correct, because 5/8 is all right for 40 to 60 amperes, and we seldom use less than 40. If, however, direct current was meant, it is not correct. In the first place, with direct current it is not advisable to use a cored carbon below, unless it be the new Hold Ark, made by the Speer people, which is not a soft cored, but a hard cored carbon; but even if a soft cored carbon is used below, it should be of smaller diameter than the upper carbon. Carbon manufacturers set the limit of 51 amperes for 5/8 soft cored carbon where direct current is used. I, however, go eleven amperes under that, and advise the use of 3/4 inch cored carbon above as soon as you pass the 40 ampere mark. Our best operators agree with this practice.

Study and Climb.

The operator of the Bijou Theater, Grantsbury, Wis., who forgot to sign his name, says:

> Enclosed find stamps for which send me question booklets, and carbon copy to question I ask below. My light is not steady; here are the conditions: Current between 27 and 32 amperes, taken from a 250 volt, 200 ampere compound wound generator, delivering 220 volts through about 500 feet of No. 12 copper wire, and then through 8 feet of No. 8 copper. The small wire got hot and set the insulation on fire. After this had happened two or three times, the power company was induced to change it. The No. 8 wire is inside the house only. The current reaches the arc through two 110 volt, 22 to 40 ampere rheostats. Carbons are 5/8 inch cored and 5/16 inch Silver Tip. Current D. C. Would Reflex or Hold Ark carbons be better? The shaft of the generator is so bent that the armature wobbles about 1/16 or 3/32 of an inch, I mean the power house generator. Now, here is what I would like to know: The light shifts from side to side on positive carbon, with a small point running up the front of positive carbon. This happens even with the carbons center to center, and gets worse as the upper carbon is drawn backwards. Is this due to some fault of mine, or are the conditions, such that a steady light is out of the question? I have just started taking the World, and, therefore, missed the last right ray dope. I would like to have the number containing it sent to me. And, say, don't let those fellows who are kicking about the "high-brow" stuff worry you. When I first got the Handbook it was away over my head, but I saw it was up to me to study and climb until I got my head up to the book. I am heartily in accord with Parkersburg with regard to the photo. Each issue of the World is full of pictures of actresses and actors and film men, but we never get a glimpse of yourself, though you have done more than everybody else put together to improve projection. I think it is only natural that we should want to see your face.

Well, brother, there was a picture of Yours Truly printed on page 1174 of the issue of February 24, because I must let the reception committees in the various cities know how I look so they can "spot" me at the depot.

No, we are not going to cut the high-brow stuff, but will try to make a little more judicious mixture in future. As a matter of fact, however, until I get back from the trip there won't be much of it in the department. You see, I have got to do the department work while on the road, and by the time I travel from 50 to 300 miles each day, look over a lot of theaters, be introduced from ten to to two or three hundred operators and managers each day, deliver a two-hour lecture at midnight, write the story of each town, and edit the projection department, I will be pretty tolerably, reasonably busy, and won't have much time to puzzle my brains on "high-brow" stuff for the department.

And now, with regard to your trouble. As to the Reflex and Hold Ark, why there is no one on earth can answer that question for you. My advice would be to get a half dozen of each of the two brands, telling the dealers your amperage, or rather the diameter of your upper carbon. Very likely if you write the Speer Carbon Company, St. Marys, Pa., telling them the diameter of your upper carbon and the amperage, they will send you two or three of the Hold Ark, of proper diameter, to try. I believe it is very likely the Hold Ark would help your peculiar condition materially, and might stop the trouble altogether. Suppose you, meanwhile try another brand of upper carbon; also pulling a little longer arc. Proceed as follows, doing the experimenting in the morning before the audience is in the house: Using your adjustment rheostats, cut in a little more current—in other words, cut down the resistance. Then pull a longer arc, thus substituting the resistance of the arc for a portion of the resistance of the rheostat you have cut out. You will, of course, have to learn to handle that kind of set, because it will be considerably different from handling the short arc. Also, perhaps, it won't work at all, but try it, anyhow. I am inclined to think your trouble is largely due to the high line voltage, with possibly a heavy fluctuation of same. Have the light company test the voltage just ahead of your rheostat. Watch the test and see if the voltage is steady. And then have them test it on the arc side. If there is any considerable fluctuation in the voltmeter needle, I guess you will find that to be the seat of the trouble. I would also suggest that your light company is wasting a lot of power by installing that No. 12 copper wire which is only rated at 20 amperes. No. 8 R. C. is rated at 35 amperes, and is, therefore, not working above capacity, provided you are correct in your amperage reading, and further provided, that it is not carrying any other load. However, if you mean that the run is 500 feet long, that is something else again, since that would be 1,000 feet of wire in the circuit, and the resistance of 1,000 feet of No. 8 copper wire is 0.6361 of an ohm, provided it is in good condition and has never been overheated, and this would mean a total voltage drop, due to the resistance of the wire, of 20.3552 volts. Of course, looking at it one way, if you are paying a flat rate it does not maks so much difference to the company whether the voltage drop is in the rheostat or in the line, but, if you are on meter, then the company is losing and you are saving, and saving very materially, too. However, be that as it may, the smallness of the wires need not, I think, trouble you, since there will be no over-loading, and you are actually the gainer. If any of our readers have had an experience similar to this and feel they can help the brother, let them come forward. By the way, I wonder if it could be possible that a ground would or could have any such effect? I don't see how it could.

Motor Drive.

D. Tamplin, Boomer, W. Va., says:

I notice, January 27th issue, Mr. George Arbuckle, Argyle, Nebraska, inquires as to how to construct a motor drive. Here is the way I have fixed mine, and it has been driving my two Edison Model B machines for one year without a single breakdown. First, I run a small line shaft across the front wall of the operating room in front of the machines, just above the lens port. On the right hand end I place two pulleys, one attached to the shaft by means of set screws, and the other setting snugly up against the first one, held in that position by a collar on the line shaft. This pulley is not attached to the line shaft, but runs loosely thereon. These are placed directly in front of the end of the crank shaft of the projector. Immediately in front of the end of the crank shaft of the other projector I place two other pulleys, one attached to the shaft and one not attached, the loose pulley being merely an idler to carry the belt when the projector is standing still. At the extreme left end of the line shaft (left as you face the screen), I place a large diameter pulley to receive the belt from the motor, which latter may either be set on the floor or placed on a shelf in front or above the line shaft pulley. I then attach a suitable size pulley to the main driving shaft of the mechanism, and belt therefrom to the tight pulley on the line shaft. Now you can groove the pulley placed on the main shaft of the projector and on the tight and idle pulley and use a round belt, but preferably you should use flat face pulleys with a one-half inch belt, in which case the pulley on the projection machine should be about 1½ inches wide, and the two tight and loose line shaft pulleys should each of them be about ¾ inch wide. On the lower side of the belt, which is run quite slack, I rest a pulley carried in a yoke. This pulley carries a weight which supplies tension to the belt, and you can vary the speed of the machines by increasing or decreasing the weight on this pulley. If the bottom of the projector pulley and the line shaft pulley be level with each other, this pulley will automatically remain about half way between the two, but if one is higher than the other, then it will have to be held in position by a wire or string attached to something, since otherwise it will strike one of the pulleys.

Brother Tamplin sent in a sketch, but it would not do for reproduction and it would be quite some job to redraw it in intelligent form. I think, however, you will get the idea from what I have said, and I believe I have set forth the brother's idea correctly. The size of the various pulleys must be calculated in order to give approximately the correct speed. The main line shaft driving pulley will, of course, be quite large. The pulleys which drive the projector are, in Brother Tamplin's case, 4 inches in diameter, and have just enough groove to hold the belt in place. The projector pulley is 6 inches in diameter. Friend Tamplin uses a round belt, but with this particular plan, I think perhaps I would prefer a ½ inch flat belt, with a wider face on the pulleys.

Certainly You Can.

J. A. Stigler, Lexington, Miss., says:

I have read the department for several years, though this is the first time I have written to it. Have two machines, wired through a double-pole, double-throw switch. As soon as one reel is finished the switch is thrown over and the other arc started, but that does not make for the best screen result, and I want to know if I can wire each machine up with a double-pole S. T. switch and run both arcs at the same time so that I can blend the pictures into each other and get my light into first class shape before starting the idle machine.

Assuming that you are taking current from the city mains, and that the wires are large enough to carry the amperage necessary to supply both arcs, you certainly can, though you will have to have two D. P. S. T. switches and another rheostat to do it. You should run your machine circuits from the main operating room cut out entirely independent of each other—wire each machine just the same as though the other one did not exist. This will call for two sets of fuses, two S. T. D. P. switches and two rheostats. If, however, you are using a motor generator set to rectify A. C. into D. C., it will be necessary that the machine have sufficient capacity to carry the two arcs for at least a limited time. If you are using an economizer on A. C., then you will have to have two economizers.

Books of Value.

From time to time letters reach this department asking information with regard to the value of electrical works and operators' handbooks put out by various publishers. In response to this let me say right here and now that, so far as the moving picture machine operator be concerned, the best single volume on electricity I have yet found is "Lessons in Practical Electricity," by C. Walton Swoope. This book contains an excellent assortment of general information with regard to resistance and other things which the operator needs to know, told in simple, understandable language. This work, however, is extremely incomplete from the operator's viewpoint as compared with the Hawkins' Electrical Guide, which is composed, at this time, of ten volumes, some of which would be of but little value to the operator. The Hawkins' Electrical Guide, however, may be purchased in its entirety on the installment plan, one dollar down and one dollar per week, I think it is, and these two works, viz.: Swoope and Hawkins', are the only two works on electrics I could consistently recommend to the operator. There are plenty of other good works, but all I have seen are, except the two named, either misleading or entirely too technical. The beauty of the Swoope and Hawkins books is that anyone can understand them. I particularly recommend the Hawkins.

So far as operators' handbooks be concerned (this sounds egotistical I know) it is just a plain statement of bald-headed fact, that aside from my own, I have yet to see any handbook on operating having any considerable practical value. Most certainly all those I have seen are not, in my opinion, worth the price charged for them. I certainly don't like to say this, because it lays me open to the charge of boosting my own game. However that can't be helped. I feel that it is my duty to warn you against operators' handbooks which have comparatively slight value. Having done so it is up to you. If you still elect to purchase them, that is your business. I can only express my own view. The operator's library I would commend is: Hawkins' electrical guide; Optoe Projection, by George; third edition Richardson Handbook; National Code, and the various catalogues and booklets put out by projector manufacturers or else use the plan illustrated in Fig. 100, page 251, third edition of the Handbook.

And What Do You Know About That?

A writer, who at the end of his letter says: "Please don't use my name," writes on the stationery of the New York Stock Exchange as follows:

As a business man who has made a hobby of moving pictures, and an owner of a Simplex projector for private use in my home—in other words, from the standpoint of a rank amateur in every sense of the word, may I be permitted to offer a suggestion with reference to Fredericton, N. B., page 680, February 3 issue of the department. I have had some little experience with the Simplex, and feel sure that this particular trouble is easily located and remedied. Tell your friend, Mr. Merriman, of Fredericton, N. B., that when his machine runs stiffly to clean the gate carefully with a piece of soft metal or wet cloth, and note the result.

And thus we find the projection department is read even in the New York Stock Exchange, and Friend Merriman is replied to by a man who is presumably a member of the Exchange. We thank the gentleman for his kindness in submitting this possible solution, and pass it along to the Land of the North in hopes that it will at least help some.

Educational and Industrial Picture Making.

THE making of so-called educational pictures has developed until it now calls for a high degree of specialization.

Industrial pictures are of the same type in the majority of instances, and may be classed under the same heading in this article as well as the higher grade of scenic pictures.

It is no longer possible for a cameraman to take his camera out in an automobile and, after riding around for a day, return with a heterogeneous collection of scenes and dispose of it as "Picturesque Podunk," length 989 feet.

If he is not familiar with the region he is about to record on celluloid he repairs to the nearest library or book store and peruses with care and diligence all the literature that he can find descriptive of the locality. In his trusty notebook he writes down the history and location of landmarks and points of interest, he records incidents of the customs and habits of the natives, with a view to find characteristic bits to enliven the skeleton scenario which he will make out before he starts to turn the crank on his picture. When he has done this, and not before, he engages a car with a chauffeur well acquainted with the locality, or a guide and pack mule or other conveyance, as the case may demand.

He then starts out with his outfit to find the things which he has noted down in his synopsis. His eyes are open wide for anything that will add interest to his picture. Many things will greet his eye that he has not thought of in his prepared schedule, but the chances are, if his scenario is what it should be, that whatever he discovers to add to it will help to round out and add interest or locality to what he has already planned. Oftentimes he discovers something that will give him the material for another complete picture aside from the one he has planned. I remember, years ago, of making a picture of a historic Mexican city. It nestles in a beautiful valley between high mountains of impressive grandeur, and my first thought was only of the beautiful scenic picture that I could make in the quaint old city, with its historic buildings and rugged mountain scenery. It was a perfect mine of interest. When I had finished I had material for the following pictures, varying in length from 400 to 1,000 feet: "Picturesque Monterey," "Hemp Industry," "Rope Making," "Thermal Baths of Topo Chico," "Where Nature Makes Soda Waters," "Iron Industry in Mexico," "Zinc Mining and Refining," "Primitive Laundries," "Beer Brewing," "Mexican Cookery," "Bull Fighting in Mexico," "Pulque and Mescal—The Mexican National Drinks," "Beasts of Burden in Old Mexico," and some others which I cannot recall.

On the first trip many of the scenes mapped out can be found and taken, while others will either be impractical to take at all or lacking in interest or be in such relation to the light as to require taking at a different time of day. A compass and timepiece are indispensable, although in the absence of the compass the watch may serve for both. Point the hour hand of the watch in the direction of the sun and half way between the hour hand the numeral twelve will be south. Knowing this and reversing the process will show you at just what hour the sun will be at the most advantageous position for taking your picture.

Make a note of each subject which you reserve for a particular taking time and arrange your schedule with your guide so as to return and cover your missing scenes with the greatest efficiency.

Learn to use just enough film to show your subject plainly and well, but stop before the interest can lag. A naturalist friend of mine bought a camera to take with him on one of his expeditions. On his first trip he took a whole roll of film and sometimes two or three on each subject, unless it flew away while he was reloading! Of the details of camp life, of the ex-president who was a member of the expedition for a portion of the time, of the methods of preserving specimens and a thousand other interesting details he took not an inch! They were every day matters to him, and it never occurred to him that the people who would view the picture would be interested in anything other than what interested him.

Get out of yourself and look at things with the eye of a curious stranger. Don't let the little interesting things that may be familiar to you get by. Often they are the spice which seasons the picture. A cute kid with a dirty face engaged in some childish occupation, or baby animals of most any kind are more apt to touch the emotions of an audience than a beautiful landscape. The innocent firtation of a buxom peasant girl, or the foolish amorous smile of a hulking farmer boy, even a closeup of a beautiful wayside flower adorned with a honey bee, or brilliant butterfly will bring your spectators into more human relationship with a scenic picture.

There are millions of people in this broad land of ours who have never had the opportunity of travel. An old style scenic with panoramas of ancient ruins or old castles brings to them no more sense of reality than engravings of a fairy story in a book; but show among these ruins or castles things which are kindred to the emotions which they have experienced and you establish a sympathetic bond which gives them a sensation of reality and relationship to the images on the screen.

With all this dwelling on the intimate touches that go to make interest in a picture we must not lose sight of another strong factor to which we must cater. That is the sense of the beautiful. Artistic composition sounds terribly highbrow, but the lowliest of us have some innate sense of the artistic, and the soddenest wretch that ever passed a nickel into a picture house ticket window may yet be capable of catching his breath at the glory of a mountain sunset thrown on the screen, though the caliber of his intellect would not permit him to articulate in words the emotion that the picture stirred in his breast.

The cameraman who makes interesting educational pictures is more than a photographer. He is at once an artist, an author, a director and a scholar combined in one man.

As an artist he strives to make his pictures pleasing to the eye. He is not content with his natural gifts in that direction if he is ambitious. He studies books on art and composition when he has the opportunity, and in this day of free libraries and cheap printing there are none who have not the opportunity.

As a scholar and author he studies the subjects which he makes, and compiles a coherent and consecutive story to tell before he starts his picture. In his brain must dwell the clear conception before he can crystallize it for others.

As a director he has charge of his subject matter, and, though his actors be moths or machines, cascades or cocoons, he is just as surely the director as the man who moves the living pawns and knights through the checkered episodes of a melodrama.

As a photographer and cameraman he is master of the camera's technic. Besides all the accouterments and paraphernalia of the studio cameraman he calls to his aid many other devices, such as the microscope and the ultra-speed camera. The photographer of educational pictures should have a large assortment of lenses of different focal lengths. Spots on the sun and spots on cheese are all the same to him. He pictures them so that he who runs may pause and see and understand. The bullet's swift flight and a tree's slow growth; the mountain's magnitude and the microbe's minuteness slow down or speed up, contract or enlarge at his word of command.

With ray screens and panchromatic film he can accentuate or suppress or record with proper tone values the different colors as they appear to the eye.

Shipley Films, T. C. Shipley, Association Building, Lincoln, Neb., writes to the department as follows:

> I wish that you would spread the information through your department that cameramen in Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas, Colorado and northern Missouri should communicate with me, as I have some valuable information for them.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN and NORMAN STUCKEY.

THE design of this department is to diffuse among musicians and exhibitors correct information on all important subjects pertaining to music for the film, to improve the quality of playing and to raise the standard of music in motion picture theaters.

Any question concerning music; suitable instrumentation; questions relating to the organ and mechanical players; in fact, any queries, criticisms or suggestions dealing with the musical interpretation for moving pictures will be answered through this department.

Individuality in Playing for Moving Pictures.

By Norman Stuckey.

MUSICIANS in moving picture theaters who are successful interpreting the varied action on the screen with appropriate and pleasing music should be artists of exceptional individuality. Individuality is nothing more or less than originality. There are few fields of human endeavor that require more creative effort than the musical field where the high-class musical settings for films is made a feature.

The musician, whether pianist, organist or orchestra leader, who lacks originality and individuality, is not as sure of success as his rival who possesses these essential qualities. There are thousands of musicians in picture theaters today who are making little advancement over their style of playing of a year ago, and this is a fact to be lamented, considering the progress it is possible to make in music.

Progress is the secret of success in any business, and this is especially true of music. The musician who is satisfied that he knows all there is to know about music is a detriment to himself, his manager and the public.

The ambitious and successful musician is wide-awake to conditions. He has an antipathy for the shirker. Always ready to improve his technique so that the rendition of new music is artistic, the progressive musician also should read the happenings in the musical world and always be eager to learn the new music appropriate for film interpretation that is constantly being published.

I once knew a violinst who was undoubtedly 50 per cent. better than the average theater musician. There were few numbers that he could not play in a clean, artistic style. His technique was exceptional and his foundation training the best. While the other members of the orchestra were spending their time playing pinochle, this violinist would go to an unoccupied dressing room in a secluded part of the theater, where he would practice.

When a difficult piece of music was placed on his stand, he had the advantage over the other musicians. This violinist knew that his fingers were in condition to execute difficult passages and this alone gave him the confidence to attack and play the piece as it should be played. While the cornet player or 'cellist stumbled over their parts, they regretted the fact, but the damage had been done, and the effect of the number spoiled.

It is indeed surprising what a half-hour's practice a day will do for the musician who wishes to improve his playing and to impart individuality to his work. Your playing should reflect your disposition. If you come to the theater with a grouch, your playing is bound to show it. You are liable to take your feelings out on the music, and usually the result is not pleasant to the audience.

The pianist who has been away from the piano any length of time knows that his fingers are not responsive and that the rendition of scales and arpeggios is an effort. It is a known fact that a little practice each day makes the musician's work lighter. The fingers respond easier and there is not the mental worry and physical effort when the musician knows that he is "in condition."

Many musicians fail to make their playing individual because of their carelessness. Many pianists, especially beginners, fail to observe expression marks. They seldom observe the tempo in which a piece should be played, and they also often fail to notice whether it is marked loud (f) or soft (p). When they come to a sign that is unfamiliar, they guess at its meaning instead of looking it up in a musical dictionary at the first opportunity. Every musician should have a small musical dictionary handy where he can consult it when musical terms puzzle. This will materially aid him in playing a number correctly, and greatly enlarge his musical vocabulary.

The choice of interesting and tuneful music is also highly important. When the musician finds little interest in his work, he becomes mechanical and the result—his playing is cold and without feeling.

Orchestra leaders should always vary their program with a variety of tuneful and interesting numbers. They should also use care and discretion and not play any number too often or more than once, or at the most, twice through. There are many numbers, themes, etc., that will bear repeating, but the majority of numbers are more effective when played once or twice.

Many musicians who have had vaudeville experience know the labor and effort concerned when an act uses a waltz or a march for fifteen minutes. When selecting music for the film, do not use music that soon becomes monotonous or tiresome for the musicians to play. Usually, the best selections and standard numbers never become tiresome, and numbers by the best composers seldom become monotonous to the real musician.

Individuality in playing for moving pictures is an art; and the successful composer, as everyone knows, is he who is entirely original in his compositions. The musician who interprets the compositions must also be original. He must grasp the composer's ideas at once and play the number exactly as the composer would play it himself. Many musicians play a piece in a sing-song manner, regardless of the tempo or phrasing. Certain liberties may be taken with many compositions, as it is sometimes necessary in order to fit the action on the screen, but the musician must use his best judgment instead of playing the piece so that it is not easily recognized by anyone in the audience who happens to know the composition.

The musician who is dissatisfied with his playing and wishes to improve his style, can, to a certain extent, cultivate style and originality that will make him a leader in the profession.

First, he must be serious. Many theater musicians regard their work in the theater as the hardest kind of manual labor. If they would look upon it as pleasure, better results would be forthcoming. Study and an intelligent understanding can make your work a pleasure. Many refer to their work as a "grind." Musicians who do this are not liable to advance.

It is impossible to succeed in your work if you do not like it. You must resolve to master the details of the position that will make it pleasant, and this can be accomplished by becoming proficient. The musician who dreads playing certain numbers, because of their technical difficulties, will always find his work unpleasant, for he is always in fear of having to play a number that is tecanically beyond him.

This musician should take immediate steps to overcome the little obstacles that make his work unpleasant, and this can be done only by serious and conscientious practice. In becoming proficient you become efficient, and this today is a paying asset, for there is no demand for the careless and inefficient musician.

The efficient musician is seldom out of work. His services are always in demand—as are the services of efficient men in every line of business. The efficient musician never has to worry about his position. He never has to worry about another musician succeeding him, because he knows that his work is of the highest standard which invariably brings its own rewards.

Music Every Musician Should Know.

"Le Prophete" Coronation March—Meyerbeer.

Meyerbeer's opera is based upon the Anabaptist fanaticism of the sixteenth century, which agitated a large part of Germany and Holland. The leader was Bockelson, the "prophet," commonly called John of Leyden, son of an innkeeper.

The "Coronation March" occurs in the Cathedral of Munster, where the "prophet" is about to be crowned after the rebels under his leadership have captured the city. The royal cortege gradually assembles to the stirring strains of the march, much as the Landgrave's court assembles to the imposing march in Wagner's "Tannhaeuser," on the occasion when the minstrel knights are to be heard in the song tournament.

Meyerbeer placed a company of trumpeters and players of other brass instruments on the stage (in the cathedral) so that they and the orchestra proper talk back and forth to each other, as it were.

The march begins with the majestic passage from the full orchestra. Then the trumpets and saxhorns in the cathedral blare forth a mighty fanfare, answered immediately from the orchestra. This dialogue, as we might term it, proceeds for several measures.

After this, introduced by a solo-measure on the kettle drums, begins the beautiful lyric passage, sung by the clarinets, violins, 'cellos and bassoon, the accompaniment being for strings, and the French horns.

These episodes are repeated until, toward the finale, the brass band on the stage and the orchestra in the pit have another "argument," each one this time having a longer sentence to pronounce. Finally they become inextricably mixed up, every one shouting at once. Then the "Coronation March" closed in a tremendous climax in perfect harmony, all differences of opinion having been adjusted.

Too often the "Coronation March" is played too fast. The time or tempo should be slow enough to make it truly majestic.

Selig Polyscope Company Wins Suit

Gate City Feature Film Corporation Must Pay Damages and the Cost of the Suit in "The Spoilers" Cause.

JUDGE REID, of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Iowa, Cedar Rapids Division, sitting at Dubuque, Ia., Friday, November 3, directed the attorneys to prepare an order enjoining the Gate City Feature Film Corporation from further exhibiting "The Spoilers" in the States of Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri and Kansas.

The suit was originally brought by the Selig Polyscope Company on July 5, 1916, in Cedar Rapids, Ia., and claimed that the rights which Martin & Estes had, and which they claimed were assigned to the defendant corporation, had expired December 31, 1915, and that the people who were then attempting to exhibit the picture had no right to do so.

The final hearing of the cause took place on April 7, 1917, before Judge Reid of the said Court, in Cedar Rapids, and the court, having considered the bill of complaint, the answer of defendant, the evidence introduced, and being fully advised in the premises, found:

1. That the complainant is, and was at the commencement of this suit, a corporation organized and existing under, and by virtue of, the laws of the state of Illinois.

2. That the complainant did, on or about the 14th day of April, 1914, file a proper application for the registration of copyright in a motion picture photoplay entitled "The Spoilers" as a motion picture photoplay reproduced in copies for sale, and the conditions of the Copyright Act having been complied with, the Register of Copyrights issued to the complainant a certificate of copyright registration under the seal of the copyright office, signed by the Register of Copyrights, as well as a certificate evidencing the receipt of copies; and thereby the complainant, its successors and assigns became entitled for the term of twenty-eight years to the exclusive rights and privileges in the copyright of said motion picture photoplay, "The Spoilers," and the complainant at the time of the commencement of this suit was, and now is, the absolute owner of said copyright.

3. That the defendant, the Gate City Feature Film Corporation, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the state of Missouri, has not received from the complainant any authority to exhibit the said motion picture photoplay, "The Spoilers," in the states of Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas, or elsewhere; that the said defendant by means of piratical photographic copies of the said motion picture photoplay has in violation of the complainants' copyright, exhibited the same from the 2d day of March, 1916, up to and including the 9th day of May, 1916. That the Selig Polyscope Company never gave to the Gate City Feature Film Corporation, to H. O. Martin, or to Martin & Estes, their alleged assignors, a contract or agrement or license in writing to exhibit the said motion picture photoplay known as "The Spoilers" in said states or in any states or territories in the United States, and that any right or license which said Martin & Estes, or H. O. Martin, their alleged assignee, had at any time from the Selig Polyscope Company expired and terminated with the year 1915.

4. That the defendant has in its possession or under its control, and has been exhibiting and using piratically, four prints of the motion picture photoplay entitled "The Spoilers," each print comprising nine reels of approximately 1,000 feet each of motion picture film.

It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed that the temporary injunction issued in this cause on or about the 16th day of November, 1916, be and is hereby made permanent, and that the said defendant, the Gate City Feature Film Corporation, and its officers, including E. E. Burdick and L. A. Ganahl, its board of directors, its attorneys, agents, employes and all persons acting in aid of, or in conjunction with, the said Gate City Feature Film Corporation or its said officers, board of directors, attorneys, agents or employes or any of them, and any and all said parties are hereby strictly and permanently restrained and enjoined from directly or indirectly publishing, copying, vending or offering for sale or lease, or being in any way concerned in the publication, vending, or offering for sale or lease, or producing or exhibiting in the states of Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas or any of them, or elsewhere, the motion picture photoplay known as "The Spoilers," consisting of a representation of the story, "The Spoilers," by Rex Beach, in motion pictures, and comprising four prints of nine reels each, each reel being approximately 1,000 feet of motion picture film.

It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that the defendant, the Gate City Feature Film Corporation, its board of directors and officers, including the said E. E. Burdick and L. A. Ganahl, its agents, attorneys and employees, and all persons acting by, through or under them, or any of them, deliver up on oath to the United States Marshal for the Northern District of Iowa or to the United States Marshal of any district in which the said prints or any of them may be found, or in which the defendant or any of its board of directors, officers, agents or employees may be found, for destruction the said four prints of the photoplay entitled "The Spoilers," each print consisting of nine reels of motion picture film and each reel of said motion picture film being approximately 1,000 feet in length, and comprising a series of photographs of successive positions of objects at rest or in motion, and a representation of the story, "The Spoilers," by Rex Beach, in motion pictures; and deliver up under oath all plates, negatives, posters, advertisements and other instruments or means for making or exhibiting such infringing copies, including negative and positive reproductions of separate pictures taken from or in representation of scenes in the said copyrighted motion picture photoplay.

That if said prints or any of them are delivered to any United States Marshal other than the United States Marshal for the Northern District of Iowa the same shall be immediately turned over and delivered into the possession of the United States Marshal for the Northern District of Iowa for destruction, as provided by law. The defendant shall so deliver the said prints for destruction, accompanied by an affidavit of some officer thereof, as required by law, and the United States Marshal for the Northern District of Iowa is hereby authorized, directed and commanded to destroy the said four prints of nine reels each of the said motion picture film, "The Spoilers."

It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that the complainant have and recover judgment against the defendant, the said Gate City Feature Film Corporation, in the sum of $3,134.55 as damages, and also the costs of this suit, and that the complainant have and recover judgment against the said defendant in the sum of $300 as attorneys' fees, to be taxed as part of the costs; the said defendant having denied the ownership of said copyright by the complainant for the said states; and the clerk of this court is hereby directed to issue execution upon said judgment for the collection thereof, together with said attorneys' fees and costs and accruing costs.—(Signed) Henry T. Reid, Judge.

Messrs. Cooney & Verhoeven, of Chicago, and Trewin, Simmons & Trewin, of Cedar Rapids, represented the Selig Polyscope Company, complainant.

Joseph P. Armstrong, President of Chicago Local 110, I. A. T. S. E., Shot.

Joseph P. Armstrong, president of Local 110, I. A. T. S. E., was shot but not seriously injured in the offices of the organization Thursday, April 12. Three men walked into the office on the seventh floor of the Temple Court Building, 219 S. Dearborn street, and attacked him, beating him over the head until he fell unconscious. Then two shots were fired into his prostrate body. Edward Collier, secretary of the organization, rushed into the room from another office and was also wounded.

Speaking of the attack later, Mr. Armstrong stated: "I was hit on the head and threw up my left arm to ward off another blow, and one of my fingers was broken. I saw three men and fought with them. I was shot and then they shot Collier. They had come into our private office to do it. I did not recognize any of them."

It is believed that the attack was made by members of an operators' union affiliated with the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

Last November Mr. Armstrong's home was partly destroyed by a bomb, and on Saturday night, April 7, while sitting in an automobile in front of the White Eagle theater, he was shot at, the bullet missing him and striking a girl.

Douglas Fairbanks Makes Pleasant Stopover in Chicago.

Douglas Fairbanks arrived in the city by the Twentieth Century Monday morning, April 9, and stopped over until the Santa Fe train left for the Coast the same evening.

Max Goldstine, Chicago manager of Artcraft Pictures Corporation, had made arrangements for a luncheon at the Illinois Athletic Club at 12.30 P. M., to which a number of prominent Chicago exhibitors and representatives of the Chicago daily and trade press were invited. Luncheon was served on the mezzanine floor of the club, and the famous comedian was formally introduced by Bennie Zeidman, his publicity representative.

Peter J. Schaefer, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, was toastmaster, and the guest of honor was called on for a speech, to which he responded in his own inimitable and informal way. Alfred Hamburger, Max Goldstine and several others followed.

Among the exhibitors present were: Peter J. Schaefer, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer; Nathan Asher and Wm. C. Lamoreaux, of Asher Bros.; Joseph Trinz and Harry M. Lubliner, of Lubliner & Trinz; Alfred Hamburger, of the Hamburger Theatrical Enterprises, and Marcus Heiman, Joseph M. Finn and Asher Levy, of the Finne & Heiman Amusement Co.

Mr. and Mrs. Bryant Washburn, of Essanay; Mr. and Mrs. Max Goldstine, A. S. Clippinger and L. Y. Crump, of the Chicago office of Artcraft Pictures Corporation, and Bennie Zeidman, special publicity representative, were also present.

During the luncheon Manager Goldstine read the following telegram, which had been just received by him from Walter E. Greene, president of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation: "Just reviewed first Douglas Fairbanks Artcraft picture, 'In Again—Out Again,' and am extremely happy to announce that it surpasses our expectations. Thought you would be happy to know that the first Douglas Fairbanks picture will undoubtedly go over with a tremendous bang because inimitable Doug. is at home in his part. The story is admirably developed and the production is typically Fairbanksian."

Chicago Film Brevities.

On Thursday, April 12, Judge William Fenimore Cooper, of the Superior Court, held that the evidence presented by the city in the case of "The Tiger Woman"—a Fox production featuring Theda Bara, which was given only a "pink" permit by the Chicago censor board—was insufficient to prove the picture anything but clean and wholesome. He directed the jury to bring in a verdict finding the issues for the Fox Film Corporation. It was shown that seven members of the Chicago censor board had previously favored a general permit, and two a "pink" permit, and that Major Funkhouser had overruled the majority.

W. L. Hill, of the publicity department of the Chicago branch of the Famous Players Film Service, Inc., has announced that a pre-release exhibition of all the company's productions will be given Monday evening every week at the offices of the company, on the nineteenth floor of the Consumers Building. The first of these exhibitions, which are given solely for the benefit of the representatives of the daily and trade press, was given Monday evening, April 9.

Frank Rutledge, Chicago manager of the organization, is giving wide publicity to Roscoe C. Arbuckle's first comedy, "The Butcher Boy," which the comedian has pronounced "the best piece of comedy I have ever done in my life." A pre-release exhibition of this comedy and of "Reckless Romeo," the second Arbuckle comedy, was given at the Ziegfeld theater Friday morning, April 13, for the special benefit of exhibitors and press representatives.

Alfred Hamburger recently added the Easterly theater, Lincoln avenue and Diversey boulevard, to his circuit of picture theaters, making ten in all. The Easterly was opened Saturday evening, April 7, with Nazimova in "War Brides." The first week has been devoted to the showing of Selznick and Vitagraph features.

Ludwig Schindler, manager of the coming National Exposition, is bubbling over with enthusiasm. His first two weeks' work brought over $4,000 for space reservations in the Coliseum. Mr. Schindler is now arranging a contest, open to exhibitors only, for the best ideas or suggestions for making the Exposition more attractive and unique both to the industry and the public. He offers three prizes of $50, $35 and $25 for the three best ideas or suggestions, and urges every exhibitor to put on his thinking cap at once. Contestants can address Mr. Schindler at room 1413 Masonic Temple until May 1, after which date the address will be 1416.

G. S. Schlessinger, of New York, general manager of the Henry Brock Productions, has sold the Illinois and Indiana rights for "Enlighten Thy Daughter" to Aaron J. Jones, for the Central Film Co., of Chicago. The picture will open a run at the La Salle theater Sunday, April 15, after which it will be shown in outside cities under the direction of F. M. Brockell.

Ned Holmes, recently appointed general manager of the booking and exhibition of "Joan the Woman" in the territory purchased by Jones, Linick & Schaefer, left for Indianapolis April 11, to arrange for the premiere of the big Lasky picture at the English opera house, Indianapolis, April 22.

Hector J. Streychmans, after a stay of six months in Chicago, left for New York City Saturday, April 14, where he will open offices for the promotion of a new invention in electric traveling signs. The new sign is known as the Rotogram, and Mr. Streychmans believes it will supplant most of the present big electric signs, and that, in time, it will take the place of heralds and slides in moving picture theaters.

John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, recently issued an address to moving picture theater managers throughout the country, urging every possible patriotic effort in aid of the nation in the present war. He also sent the following message to President Wilson: "In behalf of the Mutual Film Corporation, an institution in intimate contact with the sixteen thousand motion picture theaters of the United States, I offer you our services in communicating your policies and the will of the Government of the United States to the people, through the medium of the picture screen."

After luncheon Miss Pickford held a reception and was introduced personally to the numerous guests.

"The Official British War Films," shown at the Auditorium Wednesday evening, April 11, made a tremendous hit. Ten thousand dollars was paid in admissions and fully $40,000 more subscribed, all of which will go to the Chicago unit of the American Ambulance Field Service in France.

Miss Louella O. Parsons, of the Chicago Herald, wrote about these pictures as follows: "'The Official British War Films' are unlike any previous war films. They are not only by far the best moving pictures I have seen of the war, but they are the most graphic description of present day war methods yet presented in any form, pictorial or fiction."

Here is another complaint on poor pipe organ playing in moving picture theaters, sent in by a subscriber of the Chicago News to that publication: "I find that a great number of my friends, like myself, have passed up the 'movies.' It is torture to sit and listen to careless, sloppy playing on one of those so-called pipe organs for an hour and a half."

The wise exhibitor will pay instant heed to such complaints. Execrable music as an accompaniment to moving pictures is even worse than poor pictures. The hurt goes deeper and is remembered longer.

The Jackson bill, which is intended to prevent exhibitions of pictures like "The Birth of a Nation" on the ground that they incite race hatred, was passed April 11 by both houses of the Legislature now sitting at Springfield. At a meeting of the Chicago School Board Wednesday, April 11, a resolution was submitted by one of the members protesting against the "lax manner" in which moving picture censorship is conducted, and urging that the city ordinance be strictly enforced to protect the school child against immoral influences, wrongful and improper practices, and reproduction of criminal and otherwise unwholesome conditions and scenes. The resolution was passed by a vote of 14 to 2.

Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Warner returned to New York last week after Mr. Warner had finished his work in "The Danger Trail." Mr. Warner will return to Chicago in the fall, and will engage in a series of well-known photodramas already selected for him by William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Co. A pleasant visitor at the World office last week was Benjamin Friedman, president of the Friedman Enterprises, Inc., of New York, owners of the United States rights to "A Mormon Maid." During his stopover of two days Mr. Friedman gave two special exhibitions of "A Mormon Maid" to Chicago exchangemen and state right operators. He reported that territory on the production is being sold rapidly. Mr. Friedman was also in Chicago in the interests of the Friedman Film Corporation of Minneapolis, which controls the bookings of "The Spoilers" and a number of other large productions in the northwest territory.

Paul C. Hinz, business manager of the Chicago office, has just received a letter from Frank A. Dempsey, a Chicago boy, now in France attached to the American Ambulance Field Service. Mr. Dempsey was formerly traveling representative out of Chicago for George Kleine. Mr. Dempsey writes that he had just been at the front for three weeks and had been busy night and day during that time. He states that the fighting had been terrific and that he had experienced some narrow escapes. One night a shell exploded so close that he was spattered with mud and stones, but escaped injury. On that occasion he drove twenty miles under shell fire, which left him in a condition that he describes as "mighty nervous." He lost his way twice at night during the three weeks, being in utter darkness, as no lights are allowed; and his predicament was rendered still more difficult by being unable to speak French. He has watched aeroplane fights all day at a time, and saw two German planes brought down the day before he wrote, also an observation balloon. He asks his friend Hinz to write him a line, as he gets "mighty lonesome" at times.

J. E. Willis, president and general manager of the American Bioscope Co., announces that within the next two weeks his company will have a series of single reel subjects ready for release. These releases will cover educational, scintific, fashion, travelogue, comic and patriotic subjects. Mr. Willis is editor in chief, C. E. Eckels, editing director, and V. R. Carlson and Roy Carni, cameraporters. Mr. Willis considers that these subjects belong to the first-run class in every neighborhood.

Java Imposts Heavy Tax on Film

Letter from H. Benis of Batavia Outlines Handicaps Under Which Film Men in Far East Work.

AN INTERESTING letter describing war time film conditions in Java and the Far East has been received by J. C. Graham, special representative of the Paramount producing companies, from H. Benis of Oriental Carnival Amusements, Batavia, Java. Mr. Benis states that on account of the war the moving picture business is in a deplorable condition in the territory in which he is interested. On account of the high duty, increasing taxes and scarcity of ocean shipping, he says, one is compelled to wait six or eight months to get film and supplies from Europe or the United States unless the buyer is so fortunate as to have a contract with the navy or military departments. Shipments are held up in transshipping either in Hongkong or Singapore.

In Java, Mr. Benis says, things are not much more favorable. While there are better shipping facilities by way of San Francisco, Seattle and Vancouver, the Dutch Government has imposed a heavy tax on all moving picture shows. Over half of the exhibitors have been compelled to close their doors. At the time of writing the tax was 20 per cent on gross earnings and 2 guilders and 50 cents for each show, or in United States currency $1.

All tickets must be carried to the Municipal Office and stamped and the 20 per cent tax paid before the tickets can be sold. A special form of books must be printed by the exhibitor to suit the Government taste. It is also announced that a new duty is shortly to be put into effect increasing the duty on films. At present the rate is 6 per cent, but the customs authorities set their own valuation. On new and second hand film for a single reel the assessment is 60 cents a meter; two reels, 90 cents; three reels, $1.25; 5 reels, $1.50. Serial films are assessed at $1.60 per meter. The authorities disregard the invoice valuation. There is also a tax of 3 guilders a reel on all film, and this must be paid before it can be exhibited in Java. This duty will be shortly increased.

Mr. Benis closes by saying the exhibitors and film renters have organized for the purpose of combating the exorbitant taxes and duties, and if their efforts prove to be successful the film business in Java will not be so bad.

Houdini For Pictures

Williamson Brothers Secure World Famous Handcuff King for Sole Appearance in Stupendouus Motion Picture.

A RUMOR has been current for some time to the effect that Houdini, hero of thousands of challenges and the creator of many miraculous escapes and inexplainable feats, has been approached for an appearance in motion pictures. It is now confirmed. The famous self-liberator has accepted the offer of the Williamson Brothers, and will be featured by them in an international drama of thrills in the air, on land, and under water, receiving for his services the largest sum of money ever paid to any one performer for a single motion picture.

Houdini.

An author whose virile fiction marks him as one of the greatest men of letters of the present day has been secured to prepare the story for this superpicture in which Houdini will be starred. At the offices of the Williamson Brothers in the Longacre Building, New York City, it was stated that the name of this prominent writer would be forthcoming within a week.

Has Houdini, called the superman, mastered the fourth dimension? Has he the power to project his material body through solids? An eminent scientist, J. H. McKenzie, in his latest book, "Spirit Intercourse," published by Simkin Marshall, Hamilton Kent & Co. of London, devotes considerable space to Houdini and declares that he can dissolve his body into "psycho-plastic matter" by the simple process of "dematerialization."

Whatever merit there is in this explanation it is to be put to a very definite test, the Williamson Brothers announce. When their big picture is taken in the clear waters of the West Indies, Houdini will endeavor to demonstrate that he can escape the Williamson tube without breaking through the two-inch glass, five and one-half feet in diameter, that forms the window of their steel chamber in which the camera operator sits. Houdini states that he can turn the trick without permitting any water to enter the chamber or the flexible metallic tube leading down to it; in fact, his challenge includes that condition.

Will he succeed? Can he overcome the enormous pressure of the water at a depth of sixty feet, where the tiniest pin hole will permit its entrance into the tube and chamber?

Time alone will answer that. If the test is successful and Houdini performs the impossible there will be photographic evidence of it incorporated into the picture of which he is the star.

LILLIAN WALKER STARTS WEST.

Lillian Walker, sometimes known to photoplaygoers as "Dimples," left New York on Saturday, April 14, for Ogden, Utah, where she will be the leading player of the newly organized Ogden Pictures Corporation. Miss Walker was accompanied by a number of supporting players. The party was in charge of Harry Revier, who will direct the pictures produced by the concern. Also in the group was Aaron Hoffman, the well-known playwright, who will not only write the scenarios for Miss Walker's portrayal, but will collaborate with Mr. Revier. The director is carrying with him a good part of his studio equipment, lighting sets, etc. The studio in Ogden is awaiting the arrival of the party.

Lester Park, vice president and general manager of the Ogden Company, returned to Utah with Miss Walker's party.

Exchange Men Gather at Banquet.

THERE was a get together gathering and banquet of film exchange managers, salesmen and bookers of Los Angeles at Christophers' on the night of Thursday, April 5. With 22 film exchanges in Los Angeles many of the dominant factors in the various departments had never met personally. When the film fellows were seated at the big horse shoe table, New Levi, assistant manager for the Mutual, who acted as chairman, called on each one present to stand up, state his name, and what exchange he was connected with. In this manner, each man received an introduction to the other. The seating was so arranged that no two men from the same exchange were seated next to each other. At the conclusion of the repast Mr. Levi made a few remarks regarding permanent organization along social lines. It was the consensus of opinion that the organization should be formed and the boys get together at least once a month. Short talks were made by M. H. Lewis, Progressive; S. L. Warner, Warner's; L. E. Kennedy, Pathe; R. P. Amador, Vitagraph; J. F. Churchill, Mutual; Harry Ballance, Metro; C. E. Parsons, Triangle; H. W. Stubbins, General; M. J. Cohen, Supreme; H. M. Lentz, Vitagraph, and J. Callicott.

On motion of E. H. Silcocks, K-E-S-E, the following committee was selected to formulate plans for a permanent organization: New Levi, chairman; M. J. Cohen, secretary; M. H. Lewis, C. E. Parson, E. H. Silcocks, H. M. Lentz, W. W. Dunlap, and J. A. Ruger. The committee will report at a meeting to be held Thursday, April 19.

Arthur Brick, K-E-S-E, rendered a number of songs to the delight of all present. Those present were C. E. Parsons, R. W. McKinney, Triangle; H. M. Lentz, R. P. Amador, Henry Davis, Greater Vitagraph; E. H. Silcocks, E. K. Lamson, H. I. Krause, A. Brick, K-E-S-E; M. J. Cohen, Supreme; W. W. Dunlap, L. E. Kennedy, G. L. Haines, Pathe; G. S. Gunderson, H. Frankel, Fox; J. A. Ruger, R. Smith, J. S. Hommel, H. W. Stubbins, General; H. McIntyre, Peerless; W. J. Quinn, C. N. Roos, Consolidated; S. L. Warner, Warner's; Harry Ballance, A. B. Jamb, R. G. Turner, Metro; New Levi, A. P. Patton, J. F. Churchill, Mutual; M. H. Lewis, C. J. Marley, D. K. Reed, Progressive-Paramount; W. E. Knotts, World; J. Callicott and W. A. Mead.

Another Large Studio for Culver City.

A new motion picture studio, on an elaborate scale, is to be started within the next few weeks in Culver City by the Feature Film Corporation, a company recently organized by Eastern and local capitalists. Plans for the plant are now being prepared by Edward Cray Taylor, a Los Angeles architect.

The studio will occupy a three-acre site fronting on Washington boulevard and will consist of a large main building, an administration building and a number of smaller structures. The mechanical equipment will be up-to-date in every particular.

The main building, of 190 feet frontage by 115 feet depth, will be two stories in height and will be built around a court. In it will be housed several of the important departments of the business.

The offices will be housed in the administration building, a smaller structure connected with the main building by an ornamental concrete wall.

Back of the principal buildings will be ranged inclosed and open air stages, scene decks, dressing rooms building, a property building and a garage. These will be hidden from the view of passers-by along the boulevard by the larger and more ornamental structures in front.

The designs of the main and administration buildings follow Spanish lines. The walls will be of white cement plaster exterior and the roofs of red tile. An arcade across the front will be one of the attractive features.

Recruiting Station at Universal City.

A United States army recruiting station has been established at Universal City as a branch of the Los Angeles recruiting station.

Sergeant L. E. Lee and an assistant came to the picture studio this week with application blanks and set up the station under the giant pepper trees adjoining the administration building.

Recruiting Station at Universal City.

The Stars and Stripes and a huge banner with the inscription "Men Wanted for the United States Army," attracted directors, actors and other employees of the studios. Many of the men said in the event of an invasion by a foreign foe they would immediately make application for service. Already a number of the Universalites are members of the Hollywood company of Coast Artillery and a number of the actresses are active Red Cross workers. Not a few of the men already have seen service in either the army or navy, and there are least two retired army officers actively engaged at the studio. They are Colonel J. E. Brady, in charge of the scenario department, and Captain Sterret Ford, in charge of the employment bureau.

Kalem Company Doings.

Ed Hearn, leading man in the Kalem series, "The American Girl," was the victim of a painful accident this week, which kept him from work for several days. While tusseling with one of the villains pursuing Marin Sais, Hearn fell to the ground near a heavily loaded wagon. The horses starting suddenly drew a wheel over Hearn's foot. Fortunately Hearn suffered no broken bones, but the ligaments in his foot were badly strained.

Harry Schenck, assistant to Director Al Santell of Kalem's Ham Comedy company, is recruiting a company of "home guards" at Glendale, where the Kalem studio is located. Schenck, who is a sergeant in the 17th Company of the Coast Artillery Federal Reserve, is acting on orders of his commander and will receive the commission of captain when the company is recruited.

When Director Al Santell was taken suddenly ill with ptomaine poisoning last week, Lloyd V. Hamilton (Ham) took up the directing reins and produced a one-reel comedy under the working title of "Bear Facts." Ham and Bud are supported by Edyth Sterling, Henry Murdock and John Steppling in this ludicrous story dealing with a bear which escapes from Ringworm's Circus. On Monday Santell resumed production of his two-reel comedy, the first of Kalem's new comedy releases. Several weeks were spent in preparation of this opener. Santell, who is making an enviable reputation as a manipulator of new comedy trick effects, is reticent regarding his story.

Douglas Fairbanks Coming Back to Los Angeles.

Negotiations have been started for a Hollywood studio for Douglas Fairbanks. Here work will immediately be started on the Western scenes of "A Regular Guy," under the direction of John Emerson.

This picture, started in New York, following the completion of "In Again—Out Again," will be continued in Los Angeles, and completed in the foothills of Wyoming. "A Regular Guy" was prepared for the screen by Anita Loos and John Emerson.

Among those who will make the trip to Los Angeles includes Director John Emerson, Anita Loos, her mother, Bennie Zeidman, "Doug's" personal publicity representative; Cameraman Victor Fleming, Billy Shay, assembling editor; John Fairbanks, business manager; his assistant, Florence E. Gribbon; James Hogan, his wife, Doug's secretary, Mathilde Kanes; "Buddy," the Fairbanks valet; Glenn McWilliams, Robert Nicholas, and Mrs. Douglas and John Fairbanks.

Starting a picture in New York, and completing it in the West is somewhat of a novelty, and this is exactly what Douglas Fairbanks will do in connection with the production of "A Regular Guy."

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

Abraham Carlos, manager of the William Fox studios in Hollywood, flitted away from the "lot" last Wednesday for a restful auto trip through Santa Barbara, Del Monte, San Francisco and way stations. This is the first vacation Mr. Carlos has had since assuming the reins in Los Angeles last June. He will remain away until the end of the week.

McGrew Willis, scenario writer, will accompany Mr. Carlos.

Venice will present on Easter Sunday a 1917 fashion show, somewhat different from the ordinary run of the fashion displays. The styles for the coming season in party gowns, evening dresses, sport, outing and afternoon dresses will all be there, but the additional features will make the show a most unique one.

Charlie Murray and Louise Fazenda will present the Keystone comedian and comedienne styles in vogue for 1917, while the Keystone police will show the proper regalia for real policemen.

The New York Motion Picture Company will present "Leads and Their Fashions," while Universal City has a style playlet; Kolb and Dill will have "The Hungarian National Costumes" in revue; military bathing suits, a Grecian dance by Venice juvenile stars.

Special musical programs by the Lew Lewis Orchestra and the la Monica Venice of America Band and elaborate scenic and decorative effects, as well as the filming of the event by several of the big motion picture companies, will make the day an interesting one. At 1:30 p. m. the big parade will come down the Ocean Front walk, and at 2 p. m. the style display will be held at the Venice dance pavilion.

A. Carlos, head of the William Fox Hollywood studios, was host at a dinner Monday evening to Louis Lurie and Howard Sheehan, San Francisco exhibitors.

The dinner was held at Levy's Tavern in Watts, Cal., and included among its guests, besides Messrs. Carlos, Lurie and Sheehan, William M. Crosier, assistant manager; Alfred Wright, company attorney, and John J. Glavey, comedy scenario editor.

Levy's Tavern opened on Monday this week in a blaze of glory. The entire Los Angeles film colony seemed to be present. Charlie Murray held the floor. This time the popular Keystone comedian used his talents to auction off a silver loving cup for $800, to Charles Varner, a local automobile dealer. The money will be used in establishing a Red Cross hospital in this city. Not satisfied with the auctioning of the cup, somebody shouted "fill it up with money," and it fairly rained silver dollars, halves and quarters on the dance floor during the next fifteen minutes, in which Grace Travers and Bessie Barriscale made themselves targets of the silver shower as they gathered the money in. Their total was $428 in addition to the original $800.

Essanay has completed the large Japanese feature production on which they have been working for some time at the Culver City studios. We were told by V. R. Day, special representative of George K. Spoor, that the picture would be shipped to Chicago within a few days.

Max Linder's third comedy, "Max in the Taxi," is now completed and titled. Linder's second picture, shown at Clune's Broadway theater, took extremely well, judging from the appearance of the laughter and applause in the house, and the crowd on the sidewalk trying to get in.

Some elaborate water stuff was shot by the American Film Company last week. It consisted in the burning of a ship and later its destruction by explosion. The scene was taken for a five-reel feature entitled "Periwinkle" in which Mary Miles Minter plays the leading part under direction of James Kirkwood. Some of the scenes for this production will be taken in San Francisco, and Director Kirkwood and his company will depart to the Bay City some time this week to remain there for about ten days.

A special train carried two complete Ince-Triangle companies to Norwalk, Cal. Director Reginald Barker and his company, including William Desmond, Clara Williams, Robert McKim and Dorcas Matthews, will be in Norwalk several days "shooting" scenes for a forthcoming play by J. G. Hawks. Charles Ray, Margery Wilson, Howard Hickman, Charles K. French, Jerome Storm and company, under the direction of Victor L. Schertzinger, will film many of their scenes aboard the scecial train to and from Norwalk.

A third Ince company has left the Culver City studios for Santa Cruz, several hundred miles distant, where they will remain until the completion of the forthcoming Ince-Triangle picture by J. G. Hawks, in which Wm. S. Hart is being starred. The company included Sylvia Bremer, Alma Reubens and Mildred Harris. Eight horses, a stage coach and buckboard were among the "props" taken on this expedition, and will make up the picturesque accessories of this new Hart picture.

Bessie Love has commenced work on her first picture under the Ince-Triangle banner. The story is well suited to Miss Love, and will present her in an entirely new characterization. Paul Powell will continue as her director. The first story for this dainty hundred pounds of Love was written by L. V. Jefferson, a new member of the Ince forces.

Director Lynn F. Reynolds and his Universal company have commenced work on a five-reel picture entitled "Back to the Primitive," featuring Myrtle Gonzales with George Hernandez and Jean Hersholt among the principal members in the cast. working with animals, and wild ones at that. In McRae's current production, "In African Wilds," Miss Sedgwick has appeared before the camera with lions, leopards, orangoutangs and with Charlie, the big Universal elephant.

The young actress declares it is a peculiar sensation to be chased by a live lion, and she admits that she feels much better when she is outside of the scene.

Taking advantage of the warm weather, the Ince-Triangle players recently held their first bathing party of the season, at Inceville Beach. The latest in bathing suits received their first wetting. A game of pushball was the first event, with each team composed of ten players, captained by the new star, Olive Thomas, and Bessie Love, and Business Manager E. H. Allen acting as referee. William S. Hart put his horse, Fritz, through many difficult water stunts, and was besieged by all the girls for a bareback plunge into the ocean with him. Dancing the one-step in the Pacific proved enticing entertainment, and the desire of the players to continue their amusement prevented many of the scheduled games from taking place. The Ince party included, besides those already mentioned, Clare Williams, Margery Wilson, Margaret Thompson, Sylvia Bremer, Margery Bennett, Gloria Hope, Mary McIvor, Josephine Headley, William Desmond, Jack Richardson, Jack Gilvert, Kenneth Harlan, Directors Reginald Barker and Roy Neil.

Betty Compson, Neal Burns and Ethel Lynne appeared in person at Jensen's theater, Los Angeles, last Friday night. The occasion was a meeting of the Parent-Teachers' Association of Los Angeles to view two specially selected pictures: The Paramount feature, "Snow White," and a Christie comedy, "His Baby," in which the above mentioned players appear. Neal Burns did a little musical comedy turn, Betty Compson played the violin, and Ethel Lynne sang. At the conclusion, the association, through its president, gave its hearty indorsement, not only to Christie comedies, but to the young people who came to entertain them as well.

Tom Forman, the Lasky Company juvenile, has been transferred to the Morosco studio to play as leading man for Vivian Martin, who at present is doing a picture there under the direction of Robert Thornby.

In the production of the ninth episode of "The Railroad Raiders," J. P. McGowan this week blew up a barge in San Pedro harbor. Although in his five years of making railroad pictures Director McGowan has had occasion to stage many explosions, this, he says, is the most spectacular thriller of its sort he has ever introduced into a film.

This installment, written weeks before the present war crisis presented itself, deals in a cursory way with the European situation. Producer McGowan is taking advantage of the 12-inch guns that are being unloaded at San Pedro and hauled to position for coast defense. Permission has been secured to make a number of scenes around the unloading of the guns which just fit in with the action of the story.

At the Lankershim studios of the Frieder Film Corporation, Directoress Lule Warrenton has finished this week "The Littlest Fugitive," a child's photoplay starring little Mary Louise Cooper and is beginning production on another play suitable for children, entitled "Hop o' My Thumb." Mrs. Warrenton's experience in producing with 200 children, Palmer Cox's roly-poly "Brownie" through the eastern states, and in directing children's photoplays, enables her to laugh at the irritations bothering other producers of kiddie pictures.

We had a little visit one afternoon this week with the fellows of the Progressive Motion Picture Company, a local distributor for the Paramount program. M. H. Lewis, the manager, in addition to being one of the youngest men in the game, is also one of the livest wires and is ably assisted in his work by L. W. Thompson, salesman, and V. E. Hampton, publicity manager.

Mr. Lewis informed us that he has gotten Manager C. F. Glimm's signature on a contract for the first showing of Roscoe Arbuckle's premiere Paramount release, entitled "The Butcher Boy," at the Garrick Theater opening April 16. Mr. Lewis showed us the only house organ gotten out by any exchange in Los Angeles. It is an eight-page sheet edited by V. E. Hampton and treats on matters relative to the various Paramount productions. It is published weekly under the title of "Straight Dope."

L. F. Sanborn, whose film laboratories are being built at Culver City, and J. E. Fiedler have leased the motion picture theatre of that town and will open with the best features available on the market.

M. D. Howe has succeeded Mr. Russell as lessee and manager of the Temple Theater at Santa Ana, and he announced that he will run Triangle and World features for his regular program.

Word comes from San Bernardino that improvements costing from $10,000 to $15,000 will be made to the Temple Theater during the next sixty days. The architect has already been secured by J. W. Roberts, one of the owners, to draw up plans for the complete remodeling of the house. The seating capacity will be increased by about four hundred additional seats.

The fashionable Southern California resort, Coranado, is to have a motion picture theatre, which is being built at a cost of $60,000 by John D. Spreckels. The building will be one story with an interior fifty-one by one hundred feet, and will have a seating capacity of eight hundred. Harris & Allbright drew the plans and the Wurster Construction Company has the building contract.

Architects Coates & Travers, of Fresno, are completing plans for a $125,000 motion picture theater building to be erected on Van Ness avenue. Excavating will start within the week and bids for the building will be taken shortly.

Despite all reports to the contrary, we have it from Blanche Sweet herself, that she will remain in Los Angeles and will shortly announce a new affiliation with a prominent local company.

Charles Poppe, the blond Horsley scribe, has departed from hence, bound for New York. We are very sorry that Charlie had to go, as he is some publicity shark. W. Reed Heustis, formerly of Fox, is now on the copy desk at Horsley's.

Wycliffe A. Hill likes publicity; all right we will do our part. He is the fellow that put the cliff in the hill. How is that, friend W. A. H.?

While strolling around the L-Ko lot yesterday, we ran into Al Cohn, the associate editor of the Photoplay Magazine, Sam Behrendt, and Norman Manning and W. A. S. Douglass from the Horsley studios. What's in the air, fellows, another amalgamation?

Murdock McQuarrie stopped us in the Alexandria the other night to spread the news that he is now enrolled in the forces of General Bernstein, and will play leads in all of the features promulgated by "Bernie" and Jack Pratt under the titles of "The Seven Cardinal Virtues."

Grace Cunard must have found the secret for which Ponce De Leon so diligently searched, as at the Static Club Ball she was not recognized by some of her friends owing to her extremely youthful appearance, and yet they say that married life doesn't agree with a person, eh what, Joe Moore?

Henry McRae, whose fame has been immortalized by Charlie Van Loan in his story, "The Thrill Shooter," was the hero in honest to goodness life last week when he saved Gypsy Hart from a nasty spill under her horse, caused by the stirrup strap breaking in the midst of a scene for a forthcoming Universal feature.

Sam Rork is to be with us again in about two weeks, after a prolonged slide along the slippery spots of old Broadway. Are you still talking "Mickey" or about the great little burg, friend Sam?

We ran into Ruth Stonehouse, Joe Roach and Chester Bennett, her leading man, in front of the Haas Building, one day this week. Ruthie is now doing Red Feather stuff for the big U. Some rise for a girl in less than a year.

Tom "Reckless" Mix is back at the old location at Silver Lake, grinding out his second scream for Fox. Same cast as in "Boots and Saddles" and same assistant, Bob Eddy.

William Robert Dailey informed us at the Alexandria the other night that comrade wife, Fritzi Brunette's special engagement at Selig, has developed into a contract which means an extended stay. Good for you, Fritzi.

Tsuri Aoki, since the completion a week ago of her work with the Essanay in their big feature directed by Frank Borzage, has been nursing her husband, Sessue Hayakawa, who has just been recovering from typhoid fever.

Carlyle Robinson, formerly publicity director for the Horsley studios, and lately personal representative for Warren Kerrigan, called at the World offices this week. Carl says he is going into business for himself this time and start a publicity bureau in partnership with our old friend Kenneth O'Hara. Here's our best wishes, boys.

The Bernstein Film Productions gave a "family dinner" last week at Cafe de France. Every one was there, from Director-General Jack Pratt to Harry Paulson, the cameraman. The affair was to celebrate the completion of the first Bernstein release, "Who Knows."

The entertainment was mostly extemporaneous, but it was sufficiently amusing to keep the patrons of the cafe in peals of laughter from the beginning of the dinner to its end. Several members of the company assisted the cabaret, and Lee Lorson, head of the technical department, invaded the kitchen with Jack Pratt, returning with doughnuts and hunks of pie.

Besides the regular members of the company there were present Jack Lippman, treasurer, with Mrs. Lippman; Al Norton, secretary; Caesar Cahen, company physician; Rosalie Ashton and Beatrice Morse, scenario writers, and last, but not least, Isadore Bernstein himself, with his usual cheerful grin.

Ben Blumenthal in New York

Europe's "Film Yankee" Clears for Action—Is in the Market for Big Subjects.

BACK on American soil after his fourth trip abroad since the European war started, Ben Blumenthal is now permanently located at 729 Seventh avenue, New York. As the Export & Import Film Company, Mr. Blumenthal is ready to bid for the foreign rights to any American film made—the bigger they come the better he will like it.

Although an American, Mr. Blumenthal has spent fifteen years in European business, about five of which have been devoted to films; he is known in every motion picture center from England to Russia as the "Film Yankee." He speaks most of the Continental languages and his aggressive operations have contributed much to film history, for he was the first to open wide exhibiting possibilities by introducing motion pictures in regular theaters on the Continent.

Ben Blumenthal.

It was Mr. Blumenthal who, with an associate, secured the world's rights to Cines' spectacle, "Quo Vadis," following later with "Cleopatra," and again with "100 Days of Napoleon," the last of which A. H. Woods bought for the United States. This was in the days when it required nerve and confidence to launch productions on such a scale.

From his headquarters in Paris Mr. Blumenthal saw film possibilities broadly enough to not only conduct branch offices in the large cities of Europe, but he also sent representatives to Mexico, Argentine and Brazil. He acquired the entire output rights to the products of Cines and Milano, which found him before the war to be the largest exporter in Europe. His last trip abroad was to arrange for several great Cines productions in America, the first of which he has already sold to A. H. Woods, but it is not policy to divulge its nature until the film arrives in this country.

Mr. Blumenthal is now negotiating for the complete outputs of a number of American manufacturers, and the Export & Import Film Compay is ready to market individual productions in Europe as well.

PHILIP ROSEN WITH GOLDWYN.

Goldwyn's latest technical acquisition is Philip E. Rosen, one of the best known camera men in the motion picture industry, who has left the Fox organization after three years' of service to join this newer organization. Rosen is known throughout the industry as the president of the Cinema Camera Club and likewise as Theda Bara's cameraman. He has photographed that star's most successful productions for Directors Brenon and Edwards. Rosen is working with Arthur Hopkins' company, which is making the second Maxine Elliott picture for Goldwyn. Rosen is a Machias, Me., boy and has worked with Edison, Universal, Fox and now with Goldwyn.

ED. MULLEN UNIVERSAL'S PUBLICITY MANAGER.

Edward B. Mullen has been appointed director of publicity for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, to fill the vacancy made by the resignation of H. H. Van Loan. Mr. Mullen was for some time Mr. Van Loan's assistant. He has had several years' experience in film publicity, and has a wide acquaintance among newspapermen. He was at one time a sporting writer on the New York Evening Sun. His newspaper career has included terms of employment on the staffs of such papers as the New York Evening Journal and Evening World. He left the fourth estate to join the publicity forces of the Mutual Film Corporation. Mr. Mullen resigned from Mutual when that organization moved to Chicago.

Dintenfass Company at Jacksonville

Featuring Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby in Subjects to Be Released by Pathe.

IN PURSUIT of favorable weather conditions and locations for comedy film productions, the Harry Myers-Rosemary Theby Company have been working in Jacksonville, Florida, for some months. During a recent visit of one of the staff of the Moving Picture World to Jacksonville, we were pleased to learn that Mark M. Dintenfass, owner of the Myers-Theby Company, has provided his artists and general staff with a studio and factory of modern construction and equipment.

The buildings, though compact, afford ample space for offices, studios, dressing rooms, carpenter shops, etc. The location is ideal. Within less than a ten-minute ride from either the railroad terminal or the steamship docks and just outside the city line, the studio is found on Riverside avenue, a residential section, and its exterior is entirely in keeping with adjoining properties. The buildings, about four hundred feet long, extend back to the shore of the St. Johns River, which in itself is a wonderful asset, the river affording a natural stage for almost any sort of aquatic scene.

The Meyers-Theby comedies, according to Mr. Dintenfass, will shortly be released through the Pathe exchanges.

The accompanying photograph quite plainly shows the buildings used in the production of the Myers-Theby pictures. The forward part houses the office, factory and inclosed studio in which two stages can be set. The rear end shows the open-air studio with a five-stage capacity.

Hanover Subject for Aid in Recruiting

"How Uncle Sam Prepares" Arouses Enthusiasm at Preliminary Showing in Boston.

THE Adjutant General of Massachusetts has been so impressed with the stirring qualities of "How Uncle Sam Prepares," the five-reel state right subject being released by the Hanover Film Company, that he has written to the patriotic societies of the state urging that use be made of the film to stimulate recruiting. The picture opened at Tremont Temple, Boston, on Monday, April 16, for an indefinite run. Already it had been shown privately in the Hub to the City Club and to the daily newspapers and was given hearty praise.

The making of the film was begun last summer when matters between Uncle Sam and Mr. Carranza began to look exceptionally squally. In spite of the two nations failing to come to grips the company went ahead with the work, under the auspices of the government officials. Pictures were taken in every branch of army and navy activity. It was a sort of "watchful waiting" on the part of the Hanover chiefs. When war with Germany was declared the film was released.

The film is now being sold on the state right basis. The Peerless Productions have taken the New England territory and has placed the patriotic subect in the Tremont Temple. An attempt was made to secure a big house in New York City, but it was unsuccessful, so the New York territory will be sold along with the rest of the country outside of New England. It is the belief of the Hanover officials that owing to the timeliness of the film as well as its enthusiasm-stirring subject matter it will prove to be an exceptionally popular picture. It is more than an entertainment. It is a picture with a purpose, and a most patriotic one.

Graham Off On Long Trip

Goes to Spain, France and England in Interest of Paramount Producing Companies.

JUST back in New York from a tour around the country visiting Paramount exchanges, J. C. Graham, special representative for Paramount Pictures Corporation, started on April 15 for Havana, from which port he was to sail on the 20th for Spain. Mr. Graham will be accompanied by Mrs. Graham and their daughter.

In the tour just finished Mr. Graham addressed in Chicago a large meeting of Paramount exhibitors. He explained to men from Pittsburgh, Detroit, Indianapolis, Minneapolis and Cincinnati the basis upon which Paramount was to release the Arbuckle-Paramount comedies to the trade, independent of the program; on the basis of broadcast booking. In Salt Lake City he met Herman Wobber, manager of the Progressive organization in San Francisco, and on the Coast—and Progressive on the Coast means Paramount—and consequently was enabled to cut short his Western trip by that much. Mr. Graham also visited Denver, Kansas City, Dallas, New Orleans, Atlanta and Washington.

Asked as to how he found business conditions, the Paramount special representative said much was being done. As to apprehension over the war, as to how approaching hostilities might affect the picture industry, he said there was nothing anywhere to indicate any concern among exhibitors or exchangemen. While in Salt Lake Mr. Graham attended a patriotic demonstration held in the big tabernacle. In the Middle West he was surprised at the degree of patriotic enthusiasm being manifested. This condition prevailed all the way to Salt Lake. Everywhere he went he heard praise for President Wilson and expression given to the conviction that the chief magistrate had done the only thing that could be done. He did not hear a single remark to the effect that the war would injuriously affect the motion picture business.

Upon Mr. Graham's return from his journey a consultation was held with Mr. Zukor, who had just returned from a trip to the Coast, and other officers of the Famous Players-Lasky Company. Mr. Graham suggested that as there were matters abroad to be taken up it might be desirable to make a personal visit. This view was accepted by the heads of the company. The first stop of the special representative will be at Corunna, Spain. It is Mr. Graham's intention to work through Spain and France and then to go to England. He said he would probably be away about four months. In England and France he will represent the Cardinal Film Corporation and take up matters in connection with "Joan the Woman," which spectacle he hopes to see presented to the people of those countries.

Asked as to what he heard of interest in discussing pictures with exhibitors and as to what the showmen were asking for, Mr. Graham smiled. "It seems to me to be more firmly established than ever," he said, "that the star stands out in the scheme of things. The exhibitor believes it is the name of the player that brings him in his money—that the personality of the actor is still the dominating attraction for the public."

MARIE CAHILL IN THREE MUTUAL COMEDIES.

Marie Cahill will appear in three comedies for the Mutual Film Corporation. These will be two reels in length and are scheduled for release as follows: "Gladys' Day Dream," April 30; "When Betty Bets," May 14; "Patsy's Partner," May 28.

Miss Cahill's name has long been associated with successes in straight and musical comedies and as a topliner in vaudeville. Among her most pronounced successes in recent years were "Molly Moonshine," "Nancy Brown," "Marrying Mary," "The Boys and Betty," "The Opera Ball," "Flirts" and "Judy Forgot."

H. B. WARNER COMPLETES "THE DANGER TRAIL."

H. B. Warner has just finished the Selig production, "The Danger Trail," to be released April 30 in K-E-S-E. "The Danger Trail" was written by James Oliver Curwood and Mr. Warner is supported in the story of the Canadian Northwest by such stars as Violet Heming and W. Lawson Butt.

Fox Opens New Exchange Quarters

Moves From Fifth to Tenth Floor of 130 West Forty-sixth Street—All Apointments Up to the Minute.

WILLIAM FOX'S New York exchange has opened brand new quarters on the tenth floor of 130 West Forty-sixth street, the transfer of activities taking place at the end of last week. The old offices were on the fifth floor of the same building. The present establishment represents the last word in safety and efficiency. On the afternoon of Thursday, April 12, a reception was held by Manager Jack Levy, at which were present Jane and Katherine Lee, the talented diminutive Fox artists, who entertained the visitors with a skit; Stuart Holmes, Kittens Reichert, June Caprice, who has completed her first year in pictures and in that time has made good the prophecy of Mr. Fox that he would make of her a leading player in spite of the fact that she had had no previous experience; Harry Hilliard, Virginia Pearson and Irving Cummings.

On the front or north side of the new exchange are the finance and auditing departments, the former in a well-appointed office in the northwest corner. On the east side, next to the auditing room, is the stenographers' room. Adjoining is the office of Manager Levy. The poster and advertising departments are in the southeast corner. These are large and, for that matter like the whole floor, flooded with light. Adjoining on the south are the film vaults, four of them, and each with a capacity of 1,400 reels. These are constructed in accordance with the latest specifications of the authorities, if not in advance of them. They are built like and look like vaults. On the southwest corner is the inspection department, with capacity for thirty inspectors. Adjoining on the west is the cashier's office. There is a large reception room in the center of the floor.

The arrangements for the convenience of exhibitors are worth while. Facing the booking lobby and handy to the film vaults and poster department are four windows, fitted with fireproof shutters and equipped with fusible links. There are fireproof doors and walls in every part of the floor.

Manager Levy remarked to a World man that he was inclined to believe he had in his new exchange about the best thing in its way to be found in the United States.

Universal Wins Latham Loop Suit

United States Supreme Court Reaffirms All Decisions of Lower Courts Against the Patents Company.

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Company's offices were the scene of much jubilation last week when the report that the United States Supreme Court had decided in the company's favor the suit brought by the Motion Picture Patents Company on March 18, 1915, to enforce its alleged rights under the Latham Loop patents became known. This case has been fought by the Universal without assistance from the trade at large and won on every point. Its winning by the Universal means much to the trade, for had the contentions of the Patents company been upheld all would have been paying tribute to that organization.

The Patents Company's suit was based upon the Latham Loop patent and the license agreement, which reads as follows:

"The sale and purchase of this machine gives only the right to use it solely with moving pictures containing the invention of reissue patent No. 12192, leased by a licensee of the Motion Picture Patents Company, the owner of the above patents and reissued patent, while it owns said patents, and upon other terms to be fixed by the Motion Picture Patents Company and complied with by the user, while it is in use and while the Motion Picture Patents Company owns said patents. The removal or defacement of this plate terminates the right to use the machine."

Acting upon this theory an action was commenced against the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, the Universal Film Exchange, and the Prague Amusement Company, which leased the Seventy-second street premises, charging them as defendants jointly with "having made, used and sold, and caused to be made, used and sold, and now continues jointly to make, use and sell, and to cause to be made, used and sold motion picture apparatus, which embodies the invention or discovery described and claimed in the patent in suit."

The case was tried before Judge Hough in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York and resulted in the complaint being dismissed on the ground that the limitation on the use of a patented article sold in the manner set forth is invalid. A petition for a rehearing was also denied the plaintiff. The case then went to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, which affirmed the decision of Judge Hough. Finally a writ of certiorari was granted by the United States Supreme Court to the plaintiff, which brought the matter before that body for review. After reviewing the history of the case the Supreme Court affirmed all the previous decisions against the Patents company, which effectually concluded the whole matter, freeing the motion picture business from any further menace from the Motion Picture Patents company.

Board of Legal Advisors Formed

Attorneys of All the Different Producing Companies Represented on the Committee to Handle Legal Matters.

AT A recent meeting held at the City Club of New York, a new board was formed made up of the attorneys of the different producing companies. The duties of this new body is advisory. It is to pass upon all legal matters that from time to time present themselves to the industry, and it will take joint action in regard to legislation pertaining to motion pictures.

Nathan Vidavor, counsel for the World Film Corporation, was elected chairman of the committee, upon which the following attorneys have been invited to serve: Albert H. T. Banzhof, D. W. Griffith Enterprises; I. M. Chadwick, Paul Cromelin, Cosmofotofilm Company; Arthur S. Friend, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Samuel Field, Mutual Film Corporation; Siegfried F. Hartman, Universal Film Manufacturing Company; E. J. Indvigh, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; James Cowden Meyers, Paralta Plays, Inc.; J. Robert Rubin, Metro Pictures Corporation; Gustavus A. Rogers, Fox Film Corporation; Walter H. Seligsburg, Triangle Distributing Company, and Louis L. Levine of Brooklyn and Judge A. F. Tugwell of Los Angeles, directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Secretary F. H. Elliott of the National Association entertained the attorneys present at luncheon at the City Club.

Mrs. Castle Engaged for Gold Roosters

MRS. VERNON CASTLE, who was established by the "Patria" serial as one of the foremost boxoffice stars of the day, has been engaged for a long term by Pathe to appear in Gold Rooster plays and also in serials.

Mrs. Vernon Castle.

Mrs. Castle will start work shortly in her first Pathe feature, under the direction of George Fitzmaurice.

"I consider the engagement of Mrs. Castle one of the most important steps we have taken," stated J. A. Berst, vice president and general manager of Pathe exchange. "This is in line with our new policy of engaging only the biggest stars with an established boxoffice value. 'Patria' has shown beyond the possibility of a doubt that Mrs. Castle belongs in the front rank of the great stars of today. She is first of all an actress of unusual talent. She has youth, beauty, charm and grace. She can play any kind of a part from society drama to serial 'stunts' and this assures a wide variety of pictures."

The Castle pictures will be produced by the Astra company, which has a long list of successful Gold Rooster features and serials to its credit. In addition to Mr. Fitzmaurice, another prominent director has been engaged. The two directors will work alternately so that exhibitors will be assured of Castle pictures at regular and frequent intervals.

Mrs. Castle will be presented in some of the great literary and stage successes, as well as original stories. The productions will be on a lavish scale.

Flora Finch's First Fun Film

THE H. Grossman Distributing Company announces the first release of the Flora Finch Comedy Company, to whose product they have the distributing rights for the world. The initial offering is a travesty on "War Brides," in which the well-known tragic story of the feature drama and its characters are given humorous treatment.

Flora Finch.

Miss Finch herself appears as Joan, the role made famous on the screen and in vaudeville by Mme. Nazimova. The comedy Joan in the art of Miss Finch becomes a patriotic, biscuit-baking Joan, who cheerfully rejects the hand and crown of the widower king of the empire to remain at the dough-pile and do her "bit" for the boys at war. All goes well with her sweetheart's regiment until a pinochle game is started in the trench, but even then luck is with the boys, for the cannon-balls only kill the men who hold poor hands.

As a war bride this Joan also becomes a war mother, and drama runs high when, through an error, the tot in the crib turns out to be rather ebonyhued. The costumes, locations and other features of the play are all according to the play, different from it; that is, the reverse English on a good deal of it stamps the first Flora Finch offering as true travesty. This release is scheduled for April 17, and the rate of release thereafter will be two two-reelers per month. Each production carries special two and one sheet posters, and a line of feature advertising matter.

Mildred Manning

IT WAS no less a personage than D. W. Griffith himself who first recognized sterling screen material in Miss Mildred Manning, the "easy to look at" young person who is featured in the General Film Company's series of O. Henry pictures which just now are creating a sensation in the film world. Miss Manning was playing in a musical comedy, "Oh, Oh Delphine" at the New Amsterdam Theater, when the famous creator of "The Birth of a Nation," then a director with the Biograph Company, wandered in to look over the show, as he was then, as always, in search of players who would screen well. He picked out Miss Manning at once and asked the manager of the company if he could go back after the performance to have a chat with the actress. This was arranged with the result that at the end of her season in the musical show Miss Manning reported at the Biograph Studios and was given a small role in a picture. She was successful at once and since then has been playing continuously in pictures for various companies.

Mildred Manning.

In addition to "Oh, Oh Delphine," Miss Manning appeared on the musical comedy stage in "Dancing Around" with Al Jolson, "Over the River" with Eddie Foy and "Little Nemo." On the screen she has played important roles in such successful features as "The Charity Ball," "Poor Relations," "Concentration," "My Man's Law," "The Chieftain's Sons," "Unjust Suspicions," "Her Old Teacher" and "A Chance Deception." Miss Manning is fond of all outdoor sports, rides a horse, drives a machine and is a good rifle shot. She is a descendant of one of the Crane Brothers, who traded with the Indians for the land on which the city of Newark now stands. She will be seen in all of the O. Henry pictures.

STATIC CLUB BALL A GREAT SUCCESS.

At the Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles, Saturday evening, March 31, a most elaborate function was given by the people of the film world, the occasion being the annual ball of the Static Club of America, an organization of camera men of the Pacific Coast. The entire membership of the club comprised the reception committee and Al Cawood, the president, and Eddie Ullman were the glad-handers doing duty at the entrance. Among the notables present were E. H. Allen and Mrs. Allen (Margaret Thompson), H. O. Davis and Mrs. Davis, E. G. Patterson and Mrs. Patterson, Ruth Stonehouse, Betty Schade, Fritzi Ridgeway, Chester Bennett, Mabel Condon, Bessie Eyton and husband, Grace Cunard, Joe Moore, Franklyn Farnum, Alice Lake, Ella Hall, Emory Johnson, Eileen Sedgwick, Lee Moran, Eddie Lyons, Ethel Davis, J. C. Jessen, Ernest Shields, J. G. Blystone, William Piltiz, Dan Russell, Edith Bolgiano, Neal Burns, Ethel Lynne, George Melford, Roy Clements, Mrs. Lule Warrenton, Alexia Durant, Sam H. Comly and many others.

The most popular features between dances seemed to be the elaborate buffet supper served in the balcony and some very good dancing specialties.

As a graceful compliment each dance was named after the prominent local producing companies.

We wish to congratulate the Static Club upon the success of the ball, and also to express our appreciation of our invitations.

Eileen Percy in "A Regular Guy"

FOR "A Regular Guy," his next production to be released by Artcraft following "In Again—Out Again," Douglas Fairbanks has engaged Eileen Percy, who for the past year has attracted particular attention on New York rialto in the Orange Grove and at present in "The Century Girl" show.

Eileen Percy.

Miss Percy just recently passed her seventeenth birthday and is an unusually attractive little girl of Irish birth, although she has spent the greater part of her life in this country. In "The Bluebird" about nine years ago, she made her theatrical debut, which was followed by many other successful engagements, including those with "The Pied Piper of Hamlin," "Pickwick Papers," "The Arab," "The Lady of the Slipper," "Stop, Look and Listen" and "The Man Who Came Back."

Elsie Janis, now appearing in "The Century Girl," recommended Miss Percy to Mr. Fairbanks, who after an interview and photographic test immediately engaged her to appear opposite him in his second picture for Artcraft. Miss Percy has left with the Fairbanks organization for California.

Pathe Breaks Records

Under J. A. Berst the Company Has Had Successful Period—Bonuses Given Employees.

FOR the first months of the new year all records have been broken by Pathe. Results never before equaled in the history of the company have been attained under the administration of J. A. Berst, and the largest bonuses ever distributed to the company's employees followed on the great increase in business.

Every branch of the company reflects this increase in efficiency, the purpose of which is better service for exhibitors. The production and distribution of all pictures released by Pathe have reached a stage in their development which proves the wisdom of Mr. Berst's policy of building on solid rock.

The adoption of the box-office star system brings under the Pathe banner players who have proved their popularity on the screen. Pearl White, Mollie King, Mrs. Vernon Castle, Florence LaBadie, Gladys Hulette, Baby Marie Osborne, Creighton Hale, "Lonesome Luke," Harry Meyers, Rosemary Theby and Frederick Warde are stars with whom it is possible to reach the highest stage of efficiency in production. They draw patronage at the box-office, as has been proved in hundreds of theaters. Yet the supporting casts in Pathe pictures have become synonymous with the best that the screen affords.

With Pearl White in "Pearl of the Army," Mrs. Vernon Castle in "Patria," and Mollie King in "Mystery of the Double Cross" breaking all serial records, there can be no doubt as to the strength of Pathe's $5,000,000 serial program. Announcement will soon be made of a new serial featuring the very popular star Ruth Roland. Pearl White and Miss King are now at work on new serials and important announcements from Pathe with regard to stars is expected at any time.

Florence LaBadie's Thanhouser features have proved of strong box-office value. "The Fear of Poverty," "Saint, Devil and Woman," "Divorce and the Daughter," "The Pillory," "Her Life and His" and "When Love Was Blind" have been universally commended.

Other Thanhouser pictures which have come up to the high standard set by the Pathe program are: Gladys Hulette in "The Shine Girl," "Prudence, the Pirate," "Her New York" and "Pots and Pans Peggie"; Valkyrien in "Hidden Valley"; Jeanne Eagels in "The World and the Woman"; Frederick Warde in "King Lear"; Valkyrien in "The Image Maker"; Vincent Serrano in "A Modern Monte Christo"; Doris Grey and Wayne Arey in "Her Beloved Enemy."

Baby Marie Osborne, recognized as one of the greatest drawing cards on the screen, has been seen in "Little Mary Sunshine," "Shadows and Sunshine," "Joy and the Dragon," "Twin Kiddies" and "Told at Twilight."

The Arrow Film Corporation's production of Fedor Dostoieffsky's famous book, "Crime and Punishment," with Derwent Hall Caine as the star, is another strong feature.

The "Lonesome Luke" comedies have proved so successful that they are heretofore being released in two-reel lengths. Harry Meyers and Rosemary Theby will soon be seen on the program in comedies of a new and original kind.

At the request of hundreds of exhibitors a number of Max Linder's best comedies have been reissued. "Max's Vacation," "Max in a Difficult Position," "Max's Feet Are Pinched" and "Max and the Fair M. D." are now playing to big success.

The Pathe scenics have always had the reputation of being the best on the market. Since the addition to the program of the famous Combitone Scenics there can be no doubt about this.

Proclamation for Lobby Display.

Here's a chance for every exhibitor to show his patriotism, his Americanism and his love of country by hanging one of these beautiful Fac-Simile Paintings in his lobby. The President's face is done in water colors and oils and the American Flag is worked up beautifully in artistic reproduction of the proper shades of red and blue, giving in all a permanent display for the lobby, of the most important contribution since Lincoln's time to the literature of Freedom and Democracy, as great a document to-day for the people of the world as the Declaration of Independence was for the American people one hundred and forty-one years ago.

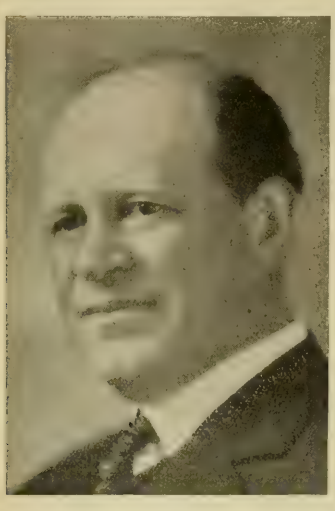
The size of the picture is 30 x 40 inches, in a 3-inch gold frame and sells for $10.00 by the Kraus Mfg. Co., 220 West 42d St., New York.

Rodgers Deposit Plan

Form of Agreement That Has Been Indorsed by the Northwest Exhibitors' Corporation.

IT REMAINED for David G. Rodgers, of Minneapolis, to bring forth a plan on advance deposits generally suitable to exhibitors and exchange men both. While exhibitors were voicing complaints and exhibitors' organizations were adopting resolutions of condemnation against the advance deposit system, Mr. Rodgers took the bull by the horns in his characteristic manner and evolved a working plan for discussion.



David G. Rodgers.

Dave Rodgers, by the way, was the first president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of Minnesota, which is now known as the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest.

He has been a director on the executive board ever since and is chairman of the convention committee for the Northwest gathering scheduled for Minneapolis May 1, 2, 3.

The advance deposit plan of David G. Rodgers was unanimously adopted by the Motion Picture Exhibitors of the Northwest in meeting assembled and is as follows:

THE RODGERS PLAN ON DEPOSITS.

This Agreement made by and between the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corp. of the Northwest, party of the first part, and....., party of the second part, Witnesseth:

Whereas, party of the first part is an association of motion picture exhibitors through the Northwest and the party of the second part is engaged in the manufacturing, exchanging or releasing of motion picture films:

Now, Therefore, in consideration of the sum of One Dollar and other good and valuable considerations, in hand paid to said party of the second part by party of the first part, receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, the party of the second part hereby agrees not to demand or require any deposit from any of the members of the party of the first part by reason of the renting or leasing of any motion picture film from said party of the second part by such member of the party of the first part,—provided, however, that such member is of financial responsibility—and it is further understood and agreed that in the event the member of the party of the first part has no financial standing and is not considered a good financial risk, then the party of the second part may demand deposit in advance from such member, not to exceed ten days' rental of the film sought to be leased by such member. Said deposit may be either made in cash or by giving of a surety bond or in the nature of a guarantee executed by two other parties of financial responsibility, but that said deposit, bond or guarantee shall be either returned or canceled by the party of the second part upon the fulfillment of such member of the terms of the contract of leasing, and it is further agreed that party of the second part shall enter into an agreement in writing with said member whereby party of the second part agrees to fulfill their part of the contract and that said contract shall provide that in the event of the failure of said party of the second part to perform all the terms and conditions of said contract on their part to be performed, said deposit, if any, shall be immediately returned to such member and in the event that a bond or guarantee was given, that the same be null and void.

It is further agreed that if any member of the party of the first part contracts for or rents a certain film to be run on a certain day or days at his theater, such contract cannot be canceled and said member will be required to pay the rental on such film whether the same is run or not; unless such member shall give party of the second part not less than ten days' notice in advance of his intention to cancel said contract of rental. It is further understood and agreed by and between the parties that in the event any film or picture or series or serial is prohibited by either the mayor, police or council of any city, town or village, the member of the party of the first part exhibiting such film or picture shall be required to pay as rental for such film or picture only for the time film or picture has been actually exhibited, on the basis of a daily average rental of said film or picture, for the time contracted to run the same.

It is further agreed between the parties that where a member of the party of the first part contracts for a serial or series of pictures running for a period of several weeks or over, in episodes of two or more reels each week, the same shall be considered as one picture or film and the same cannot be canceled by such member within less than ten days of the running or exhibiting of the first series or episode, and such member shall be required to pay for all unrun episodes or pictures after entering upon the exhibition of any part thereof.

Party of the second part further agrees to return to all members of the party of the first part all money now held by party of the second part, its agents, branches, or exchanges, as deposits heretofore received from members of the party of the first part, by party of the second part, and the party of the first part agrees that it will at all times assist the party of the second part in enforcing its contracts made with members of the party of the first part, provided the same are in accordance herewith and to co-operate with party of the second part in any manner whatsoever, for the mutual benefit of both exhibitor and producer.

In Witness Whereof, we have hereunto set our hand and seal this 28th day of February, A. D. 1917.

Williamsons Announce Independent Release

Extensive Trade Advertising Campaign for "The Submarine Eye" Has Been Launched.

THIS issue of the Moving Picture World carries the initial advertising for the first submarine film attraction that has been independently produced by the Williamson Brothers. The title of this timely production is "The Submarine Eye." The brothers have been strongly influenced by the great world war in the preparation of this masterly drama, taken partly on land and principally beneath the water. The inverted underwater periscope from which the story gets its name points the way to effectual preparedness against skulking submarines and deadly mines, and shows how easily it could be adapted to Uncle Sam's defensive warfare. All of the underwater scenes in "The Submarine Eye" were taken in previously charted locations among the West Indies.

A musical score has been adapted to any number of instruments from piano to an augmented orchestra of sixty pieces. The score provides two themes, one accentuating the love story and the other the deep-sea tragedy. These were composed by M. L. Lake.

Marvelous as are the underwater effects, they have not been dragged in by the heels nor allowed to overshadow the continuity of the romantic love story that leads up to the dramatic climax staged at the bottom of the sea. An excellent cast of motion picture favorites including Barbara Tennant, Chester Barnett, Lillian Cook and Eric Mayne was taken to the West Indies under the supervision of J. Ernest Williamson. The direction was in the hands of Winthrop Kelley, with Harold Sintzenich behind the camera.

As to the marketing plans of the Williamson Brothers for this latest achievement nothing definite has been given out, but it is understood "The Submarine Eye" will be exploited in the leading capitals of the world simultaneously. The Williamson Brothers assure protection to every individual or firm that contracts for the future exploitation of their third sub-sea attraction, by reason of their policy of releasing subsequent pictures at least six months apart.

Goldwyn for Open Booking

President Goldfish Says All Productions of His Company Will Be Released on That Plan.

GOLDWYN Pictures Corporation will offer all of its productions to American exhibitors on the "open booking" plan. This statement is issued by Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, who says:

"For a second time in a fortnight the exhibitors themselves have dictated a Goldwyn policy. Our first adherence to exhibitor advice was in deciding to own and operate Goldwyn's own branches throughout the country.

"Now we decide in favor of open bookings because the exhibitors themselves prefer it. We feel that we have a correct understanding and appreciation of the exhibitors' resentment over being compelled to take many pictures they do not want for the sake of obtaining the few popular stars in a group that they can play at a profit.

"Exhibitors will have the opportunity to see Goldwyn productions well in advance of release and decide, after seeing them, whether they wish to rent them for their theaters. It is, of course, the basic principle of salesmanship in almost all other industries—the principle of selling over the counter to the customer something the customer has seen at close range and examined.

"I am confident that the Goldwyn productions will stand up under this close-range test of their values."

Ethel Clayton has sufficiently recovered from her injuries sustained in an automobile accident to allow her to work in "The Stolen Paradise" at the Peerless studio in Fort Lee. "DOUG" LEAVES FOR THE WEST.

"Doug" Fairbanks, the smile doctor of screenland, with a suit case of new laughs, departed from New York Tuesday, April 10, enroute to Los Angeles, where he will introduce a series of new thrills in his second Artcraft production, "A Regular Guy." "I'll be glad to get back to California," said "Doug," before boarding the train, "where I can have my bucking broncho and breathe some real fresh air. I'm a fanatic on the open air idea—a regular gypsy proposition.

"We recently finished 'In Again—Out Again,' and started a new picture, 'A Regular Guy,' before leaving New York, which we hope to complete in Los Angeles. Gosh, I'm all sore—rode a horse on Fifth avenue—and I hadn't been in the saddle for over a year. This picture is somewhat of a novelty, if we don't ruin it in production. Taking seventeen people West with us this trip. A majority of the party have never been west of Broadway. Expect to remain in California for about three months—then we hope to go to Honolulu, if the war doesn't prevent the trip."

"Sunshine and Gold," Five-Reel Baby Marie Osborne Picture, Installment 14 of "Patria," and No. 7 of "Mysteries of the Double Cross."

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"Sunshine and Gold."

THE scenario of "Sunshine and Gold," the latest five-reel Baby Marie Osborne picture, made by Balboa, is considerably behind its predecessors in point of merit. The story opens with a birthday party at which the children give a performance of Cinderella. Little Marie acts the heroine of the glass slipper, and her performance serves to emphasize the fact that the instant she attempts to act in the accepted meaning of the word she becomes self-conscious and all her charm vanishes. Happily, this part of the picture is soon over and, in her proper person, the child's work becomes a reality to her and a delight to the onlooker. She has an adventure in a gypsy camp and more adventures with a grouchy old man, who turns out to be her grandfather. She wins him over and helps to end a quarrel that has estranged him from her father and mother. It isn't much of a story, at best, but Marie believes in it and lives it, and that is the main thing, after all.

As usual, Henry King and Daniel Gilfether are her leading male support. King also directed the picture.

"The Border Peril."

No. 14 of "Patria," the Pathe serial starring Mrs. Vernon Castle, is called "The Border Peril." The enemy advances on the army commanded by Donald Parr, and an example of mimic warfare is given that apparently falls but little short of the real thing. A line of trenches is used that is a counterpart of the genuine article, and the size of the forces on both sides and the skill with which they are handled keep the supply of thrills undiminished. Artillery is used with telling effect, and Patria brings the number to a close by fighting a duel in midair with one of the enemy's airmen. She fires the winning shot and the rival aeroplane falls to the earth. This effect is well handled.

"Into Thin Air."

"Mystery of the Double Cross" serial adds a new mystery to the story in "Into Thin Air," the seventh installment. The father of Philippa Brewster is attacked by Bridgey Bentley and the blame is cast upon Peter Hale. While Peter is clearing himself of the charge, the body of Mr. Brewster disappears from his home, and no trace of it can be found. The Masked Stranger does not fail to appear at the right moment and makes matters more perplexing than ever.

Paramount Shows Two Good Subjects

Blanche Sweet Featured in "The Tides of Barnegat" and Pauline Frederick in "Sleeping Fires."

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

IN "The Tides of Barnegat," an adaptation of the book by F. Hopkinson Smith, released by the Lasky company on April 12, we have a story containing few surprises; there is a sensing of the action to come. There is real strength in the ending, however. It is the touch that makes the picture. The script was written by Eve Unsell, and the direction was by Marshall Neilan.

Blanche Sweet portrays the role of Jane Cogden, who, to protect Lucy, an erring and extremely selfish sister, assumes the motherhood of a child whose unwedded father had been drowned at sea. Miss Sweet enters into the spirit of the character. Her work will be liked. Elliott Dexter is seen as Dr. Cavendish, the lover of Jane. Mr. Dexter gives us a wholesome characterization. Norma Nichols is Lucy, the sister concerned about her own happiness and about no one else's. Tom Forman is Bart, the betrayer of Lucy. Then there is little Billy Jacobs, always interesting. Others in the cast are Walter Rogers, Harrison Ford and Lillian Leighton.

The story carries the atmosphere of the seashore. Mr. Neilan has done well in his selection of backgrounds to simulate the New Jersey shore, not an easy matter in southern California.

"Sleeping Fires."

The Famous Players will release on April 16 "Sleeping Fires," a story by George Middleton. The subject is directed by Hugh Ford. Pauline Frederick has the leading role, that of Zelma Brice, a wife tied to a husband who bears that relation in name only. It is a story of the battle of a mother for the custody of her child, of a wife who has submitted to many indignities at the hands of a man whose name she bears. The picture has interest, enhanced by the portrayal of Miss Frederick, and strength as well.

Thomas Meighan is David Gray, a lawyer who by accident meets Mrs. Brice and becomes her counsel and her friend. Mr. Meighan has a personality that fits the role. He makes a splendid opposite for Miss Frederick and plays his part with marked skill. John Sainpolis is Brice, the husband who, after the departure of his wife from her home, installs his "secretary" as his "housekeeper." Mr. Sainpolis makes of Brice a good, all-around, polished reprobate, deserving sympathy of no one. Helen Dahl is the unscrupulous "secretary," who, in a scuffle with Mrs. Brice, so guides a pistol that when discharged it kills the head of the house. Joseph Smiley is the detective whose testimony at the trial of the wife brings about her acquittal. Maury Steuart is the child of the mismated pair.

There are situations that stand out. One of these is the suggestion to the attorney by the husband that the interest displayed by him in Mrs. Brice may not be wholly professional. It is an invitation to break the peace—and the invitation is accepted. The court scene is well staged. It is likely, though, that had the script been written by a lawyer he would have had a second attorney in charge of the case of the defendant. The first one was so deeply concerned in the outcome that he was not in a mental attitude to get the best results for his client. It is all interesting, nevertheless, even to the spectacle of witnessing Miss Frederick in a submissive, non-combative mood—something of a novelty.

is marked throughout by inconsistencies. It is wishy-washy and never rings true, and the leading characters are not real. This is not the fault of the players, for the film attests that they have struggled to their utmost with their roles. Miss Walker succeeds fairly well, but falls down once or twice when she overdoes the business of being cute. The leading characters are a girl waitress in a cheap beanery, and a young brother of an English Lord who comes to New York. Some of the things that each are made to do on the screen are highly improbable and not in keeping with their stations in life.

The picture might be generally classified as comedy-drama, but there is very little real comedy and very little real drama in it. Its only hope for any kind of success is the personality and popularity of Lillian Walker.

Director Wilfrid North has been responsible for several rather good local-color bits, and the production details throughout are moderately good. Inasmuch as the story needed considerable padding to bring it up to five reels, Mr. North has chosen the best padding material that he could find.

Heading the support to the lead is Don Cameron. Eulalie Jensen is seen as a vampire. Others in the cast are Thomas Mills, William Shea and Mrs. West.

The story tells of the attachment that springs up between the hash house queen and the young Englishman. This attachment is broken up by the plottings of the waitress' crook suitor, and a tough woman who can look like a lady. Things are brought to a happy adjustment when the waitress, doubling as a maid, shows the "lady" up as a crook. To clinch matters in the last fifty feet the English youth becomes a Lord through the death of his brother.

"The Butcher Boy"

Roscoe Arbuckle's First Two-Reel Paramount Offering Is a Whale of a Comedy.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

IF ONE laugh weighed an ounce, "The Butcher Boy," the first two-reel comedy made for Paramount by Roscoe Arbuckle, would weigh as much as "Fatty" himself. Crammed full of laughs and chuckles, the offering justifies the wide preshowing bookings of the Arbuckle comedies. Surrounded by a group of expert funmakers, "Fatty" comes up to even the most optimistic expectations. Evident all through the film are the comedy touches that have made Arbuckle a comedy name to be conjured with.

"Fatty" is first seen as a butcher boy in a small country store. He puts over a lot of comedy work in the store, and later takes a place behind the counter of the general section. It is here that one of the best comedy battles yet staged is seen. The main ammunition is flour, and what don't happen in that store when the flour-bombs begin to fly is hardly worth mentioning. The inevitable pie finishes the fight. Molasses is also used.

After the clouds of battle roll away the pretty daughter of the proprietor is sent to a seminary. "Fatty," love lorn, follows disguised as a girl. Can you imagine "Fatty" in the role of a sixteen-year-old girl, Well, he's just what you expect, only more so. "Fatty's" rival also disguises as a girl and goes to the school. In the school is where the comedian's dog proves himself as high in the canine world as his master is in the film comedy world. The dog might well be featured with his master.

Scene from "The Butcher Boy" (Paramount).

Al St. John is seen as the clerk. Josephine Stevens, a beautiful girl with an engaging personality, is seen as the cashier. "Buster" Keaton does some excellent comedy falls. Others on the screen are Arthur Earle and Agnese Neilson.

The picture then takes up the subject of how the United States makes the necessary preparations when going into war. The manner of training used in all branches of the service is shown. The army, from the mustering in of recruits to the daily tasks of the seasoned soldier; infantry, cavalry, airmen, signal corps, the making of big guns—all are shown. In the naval branch of Uncle Sam's defenders the same thoroughness of illustration is given. Battleships, submarines, the new fleet of submarine chasers, torpedo boats, and the way in which the men are prepared for their duties aboard these different ships are reproduced with the aid of the actual craft and their officers and men.

The reels are unflagging in interest, and furnish an excellent

"Darkest Russia"

Alice Brady the Star of a Five-Reel Peerless Screen Version of a Melodrama Showing Conditions in Russia That Happily No Longer Exist.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

WHEN H. Grattan Donnelly, some twenty years ago, wrote "Darkest Russia" the incidents of the story were more or less true to fact. A brother and sister of Jewish parentage incur the enmity of two powerful Russian officials. Ilda, the girl, is loved by the son of Count Paul Nazimoff, and Ivan, her brother, wins the heart of the daughter of Constantine Karischeff, Minister of Police. When these facts are disclosed Ilda and young Nazimoff are sent to Siberia and, through a quarrel between the Count and the Minister of Police, Olga Karischeff is also exiled. The manner in which the plot is brought to a happy ending calls for considerable credulity on the part of the spectator.

"Darkest Russia," which is in five reels, produced by Peerless and released by the World Film, is frank melodrama. All the situations are intended to be played at high pressure, vigor of action taking the place of any real study of character or depth of thought. The spoken drama accomplished its purpose well enough, but the screen version is not quite so successful, mainly because the director has allowed several members of the cast to overact. Norbert Wicki is the worst offender.

Alice Brady as Ilda Barosky acts with feeling and commendable restraint, but her violin playing shows lack of training. J. Herbert Frank and Jack Drumier are the most proficient members of the support. Lillian Cook and John Bowers also do

"The Easiest Way"

Seven-Reel Screen Version of Eugene Walter's Realistic Drama Presents Clara Kimball Young as the Unhappy Heroine—Selznick Pictures Release.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE uncompromising truth was the watchword of Eugene Walter when he wrote "The Easiest Way." A seven-reel screen version of this vital drama has been produced by the Selznick company, with Clara Kimball Young in the role created by Frances Starr. If there are any moving picture exhibitors not familiar with the story, it may be stated that the heroine is an actress, an attractive young woman, who finds the struggle for existence too hard for her, and accepts the protection of a wealthy broker. Later she meets a penniless young reporter, and they both fall in love. Both are honest about their past lives and agree to overlook whatever has happened. The girl ends her affair with her protector and looks forward to the day when she and the reporter shall be married. While waiting for her lover to make a fortune in the West, she becomes disheartened by her struggle to secure an engagement, and goes back to her former companion. She makes him break his word to his rival, and the play ends with both men leaving her. The last seen of her in the version shown at the Rialto theater, New York, she has found another elderly protector. Another ending has been prepared. In this one she attempts suicide, is rescued, taken to a hospital and dies in the reporter's arms.

Only one thing could make such a story acceptable to people of intelligence and the right moral outlook—its truth. As a page from life, the life of temptation and bitter disillusion that many women are forced to lead in the struggle for a livelihood, "The Easiest Way" effects no compromise with fact. Weakness of character alone wrecks the happiness of Laura Murdock. She does not do wrong for love of the wrong, but from lack of will power to vanquish it. Such a woman is never outside the pale of human compassion.

The picture version adheres closely to the stage drama. A regrettable number of the skilful touches by which the author made clear the acts of his characters have been left out, but enough of the original material remains to hold the interest at all times, and to point the moral. Albert Capellani's direction is excellent throughout, and Clara Kimball Young succeeds admirably in indicating the moods of Laura Murdock. Joseph Kilgour is seen in his original character of the broker—a flawless piece of work. Rockcliffe Fellows as John Madison, Louise Bates as Elfie St. Clair, Frank Kingdon as Burgess and Walter McEwan as Jerry contribute superior quality impersonations.

THIS two-reel episode of Kalem's "The American Girl" series, "The Man from Tia Juana," is a moderately good Western number, with a surprise finish. The story was written by Frederick R. Bechdolt, and the picture was directed by James W. Horne. The usual company of Kalem players is seen. There are several hold-ups in the two reels, much good and exciting horse riding, and enough melodramatic incident to satisfy anybody's taste for the wild and woolly.

The cashier of Roger King's bank plots with the "man from Tia Juana" to rob the ranch superintendent of bonds. He finally succeeds, but it develops that the "man from Tia Juana" is a celebrated cowboy detective, who arranged the plot to bring the cashier to justice.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

CRITICISM will undoubtedly be aimed at "A Jewel in Pawn," the April 16 Bluebird release, because it lacks drama. It does lack drama, but as a whole the writer believes it to be the sort of a picture that goes well with the majority of picturegoers. This is true, first, because the human interest appeal is uppermost at all times, and when we are brought in sympathy with a young girl—especially when she is beautiful and has a winning personality—we cannot help but be interested in what happens to her. Pathos there is in the picture, but it at times becomes rather shallow. This shallowness is only apparent, however, when one stops to analyze, and as the picture is projected on the screen the several shallow spots are bridged to entertainment level by the high quality of production—the heart is temporarily neglected for the eye.

Ella Hall in the featured role is happily cast, and has been surrounded by a group of capable players. Walter Belasco does a quite good character bit as the old pawnbroker. Others in support are Antrim Short, Mrs. Maie Hall, Jack Connolly, George Pearce and Marshall Mackaye.

The story was written by Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude, and put into scenario form by Maie B. Harvey. It tells of a girl who is put in pawn by her mother, who married against her wealthy father's wishes. The girl wraps herself around the heart of the pawnbroker, and his heart-strings are broken when the grandfather of the girl finally finds her and brings her to his pretentious home. School makes a finished debutante of the girl, but when her grandfather objects to her pals from the shady side of the city she leaves him for the pawnshop. Here she marries the youth of her choice, and everything ends happily.

The production given the picture by Jack Conway is all that could be asked. The photography, lightings and film tinting are excellent.

"Her Temptation"

Gladys Brockwell in Fox Five-Reel Emotion Drama, Based on Hypnotic Influence, That Contains Many Theatric Situations.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE five-reel Fox screen drama, "Her Temptation," is full of emotional opportunities for the star, Gladys Brockwell. A belief in powers of hypnotism that are nothing short of marvelous and a readiness to accept the author's explanations at any and all times are necessary, however, to the enjoyment of the spectator. The situations are full of theatric effect and ride roughshod over most of the laws of probability. For example, we are asked to believe that a physician possesses such a command over his fellow beings that he can hypnotize a fatally injured sailor into forgetfulness of his pain, and yet he permits a rival who practices the same art to carry off his sweetheart and lead her to the altar, notwithstanding the fact that he (the physician) is able to work his will with the bridegroom, just as the wedding ceremony starts and make him proclaim that he is a murderer.

The conditions of the will left by Ralph Stuart is another example of machine made motive. He is too generous and too fine a nature ever to have given his entire fortune to his wife's sister.

Gladys Brockwell has the part of the young woman who marries an elderly admirer out of gratitude and discovers that the love she bore another man will not be denied. Miss Brockwell is an excellent type for emotional roles, and a beautiful woman. She has much to learn about acting for the screen, however, lack of the right kind of repose being her greatest need. The director has used altogether too many close-ups of her. She photographs well, but is shown so often staring into space with exactly the same expression that it becomes monotonous.

Ralph Lewis, Bertram Grassby, James Cruze and Beatrice Burnham are equal to their several roles.

"The Lonesome Chap"

House Peters and Louise Huff the Stars of a Pallas-Paramount Picture That Is Wholesomely Entertaining Through All Its Five Reels.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

EVERYBODY is going to accept "The Lonesome Chap" for a friend and take him and his little sweetheart into their affections. This five-reel Pallas-Paramount picture is so wholesome and entertaining it is impossible to resist its charm. We've often had the story before. "Daddy Longlegs" is only one of "The Lonesome Chap's" many brothers, but this version of the familiar story is told with such simplicity and naturalness, and the little girl and the big fellow she loves are both so likeable that to watch the plot unfold is like going back to some clear spring in the woods for another drink of refreshing water.

You remember how the little orphan girl finds a friend in the big-hearted chap, and, after she grows up to be a beautiful young woman and keeps on adoring her benefactor, he just won't see that she's as much in love with him as he is with her and gets to feeling awful lonesome until she takes matters into her own hands and shows him what a big stupid he's been? Well, it's all in the picture! And House Peters and Louise Huff fit into the two parts perfectly.

As Stuart Kirkwood the personality of House Peters is his strongest asset. The acting of the part does not call for any unusual talent, but Mr. Peters gives it thorough attention. Louise Huff as Renee d'Armond is called upon to portray a fourteen-year-old girl in the earlier scenes. She does it most convincingly, without resorting to any of the soubretish attempts to be "cute" that too often afflict childhood on the stage and on the screen. Little Miss Renee, reared in a Western mining town, is the child of her surroundings, a thoughtful little body, grateful of soul and quick to realize the kindly heart of the young mine owner and of his staunch old friend, "Doc" Nelson. And this is the way Louise Huff sees and suggests her.

John Burton is an ideal Doc and Senor Buzzi is equally well suited as Victor d'Armond. Eugene Pallette, J. Park Jones and Betty Jonson round out a satisfying cast. Most of the scenes were taken in the Sierras; the consequent gain in picturesque appeal is of great value.

"The Hero of the Hour"

Five-Reel Red Feather Production Features Jack Mulhall in Conventional Story of East and West.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

BRIGHT photography and attractive landscapes are the most appealing features of this production. They do much to strengthen a thin and familiar type of story concerning a young man who goes into the West to seek his fortune. The tale, written by E. B. Lewis and produced by Raymond Wells, is too slight of itself to hold the attention closely, but there is an irresistible appeal to the eye. The cattle round-up, for instance, is a memorable feature; also the feeding of the pigs and other "big ranch" scenes.

Jack Mulhall plays the part of Billy Brooks, a son of a Wall street magnate. His aesthetic tendencies alarm his father, a hard-headed business man, and when Billy becomes a perfumery salesman his sire turns him out of house and home. Billy, determined to make good in his own way, starts West as traveling salesman for the perfumery house employing him.

While crossing the plains on the rear end of an observation car, in company with two pretty girls, he meets with a surprise. When the train draws up at a small station he is pulled off of it by a band of wild-eyed cowboys. They take him on horseback to ranch headquarters, where he is stripped of his Eastern garments and forced to wear cowpuncher attire. There is a girl in the case, named Mildred, who takes a liberal interest in his education.

It develops later that Billy's father is a party to the scheme, and the son turns the tables when his father comes West on a trip. This feature of the story is loosely constructed and lacks the suspense it might have had.

Others in the cast are Wadsworth Harris, Fritzie Ridgway, Grace MacLean, Noble Johnson, Fred Burns, M. K. Wilson and Eugene Owen.

Triangle Program

"Cheerful Givers," Featuring Bessie Love; "The Desert Man," with William S. Hart, and "Her Nature Dance," Two-Reel Keystone.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"CHEERFUL GIVERS" is a humanizing story by Mary H. O'Conner, directed by Paul Powell, with a very sweet and attractive characterization of a cheery little girl, admirably impersonated by Bessie Love. Interest centers entirely upon this philosophic and big-hearted mite, upon her bright view of the struggle for existence and her generous sympathies. She is one of two daughters of Parson Deady (Spotteswoode Aitken), housekeeper and mother in a tiny way for the family of three, until it becomes augmented by seven children from an orphanage on which a mortgage has been foreclosed by an indurated money lender, a woman of no sentiment named Mrs. Gray. Mrs. Gray needs a servant, but not one of her own sex, as she has a susceptible son. Bessie needs the money to pay for her sister's musical education, and gets the job by disguising herself as a boy.

She wins the heart of Mrs. Gray, before her sex is discovered, by her economical management of the money lender's household, and the heart of young Gray, as well, all of which involves a pretty story, but the author is up against the inartistic necessity of making the play fit the cast, instead of the cast fit the play, and the seven children are literally dragged in, compelled to participate in the final melodrama, transported in a body to the money lender's house and utilized to discover who robbed the safe of a large sum of money, all of which is studio-made stuff of the kind which contributes little of interest to the story. The exquisite characterization gets over through skillful direction and acting and gives the release high value.

"The Desert Man" starts out with a tremendous possibility in the way of story interest, ranging high in prospective value, but it soon falls to a mere vehicle for Mr. Hart, and is bruised in the fall. Mr. Hart does almost exactly the same things he has done in other vehicles of this sort, and he contributes the leading line of interest through intense personality alone, but it is mere repetition to see him hold up a gang of border ruffians single handed while he effects a rescue. His acting has steadily improved, exhibiting a greater refinement of self-revelation to such an extent that one instinctively longs to see him in a really human characterization, instead of being perpetually presented as the dime-novel hero. It would be no loss to the producers if 10 per cent of what is paid this very interesting personality were paid for genuine plays of a quality in proportion to his capabilities.

It is only suggestive criticism to indicate that finer opportunity for this star might easily prove a source of profit to the producers and of greater satisfaction to those who enjoy Hart's interpretations of character. It is down to a question of superior artistry in character portayal by authors who have story interest in mind, rather than outworn devices for putting a star in the limelight who can portray intense emotion and high flights of feeling such as are brought to the surface in actual conditions of real life. Outside of the Desert Man there is not a single strong characterization in the piece, simply a lot of feeble foils for one flaming hero of the old school. Interest in the play is confined to the unquestioned artistry of one actor playing to the galleries.

"Her Nature Dance" is a lively comedy depicting the adventures of a delicatessen proprietor of genuine terpsichorean talent who neglects his wife and children to become the leader of a body of ladies devoted to Greek outdoor dancing. There is some pretence to a story in this farce and enough ingenuity of incident to fill a five-reel feature. The funmaking throughout is fast and furious. The play will keep an audience convulsed with laughter.

"The Great Bradley Mystery."

Alma Hanlon Featured in Five-Reel Mystery Drama Produced by Apollo for Art Dramas.

Reviewed by Ben H. Grimm.

AN ACCEPTABLE offering in its class and of its type is "The Great Bradley Mystery," a five-reel drama produced by Apollo Pictures, Inc., for release on the Art Dramas program on April 19. The pictureplay, in which Alma Hanlon is featured, was written by Edward Ellis, who also plays a prominent part. There is a certain amount of suspense and sustained interest to be found in the picture as directed by Richard Ridgely—enough to keep the spectator's interest alive during the running of the five reels.

The chief fault with the production is that there is no absolute centralization of interest—the four leading characters command about equal attention, and one's sympathy with one character is constantly being switched to one's feeling of animosity toward another. This may make for added mystery, but it allows the viewer's consciousness to get off the main theme occasionally. However, the characters are so well drawn by the players that this may be permissible. Another inadvertency is that one of the character's relation to another is not registered early enough.

The story brings on the screen a few clever touches. It tells of two business partners who are rivals for the hand of a girl. Intrigues are many. The senior partner is the father of the unborn child of his Italian stenographer. The stenographer is the daughter of the janitor of the office building. The girl is logically led to believe that the junior partner, whom she favors, is the guilty one. He goes West and the senior partner marries the girl. She learns from the lying stenographer that her husband is the guilty one. The stenographer's father vows vengeance, and as he goes to kill the senior partner he sees the man lying dead in the office. The janitor is accused, but is saved by the story of the junior partner. It develops that the senior partner was accidentally killed during a fight with the junior partner.

Alma Hanlon is both beautiful and capable. Edward Ellis does his usual good work. Florence Short and Bigelow Cooper are both good in character parts. Edward Earle works satisfactorily. Andy Clarke is also in the cast.

"A Magdalene of the Hills"

Mabel Talliaferro in Five-Reel Rolfe Photoplay of the Tennessee Mountains Has Congenial Role in Well Made Screen Drama—Released by Metro.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE familiar story of the Southern mountain girl and her wealthy lover from the North is told again in "A Magdalene of the Hills," a five-reel photoplay, produced by Rolfe and released by Metro Pictures corporation. Any want of novelty in the theme, however, is largely compensated for by the concise manner of its telling and the quality of the acting of Mabel Talliaferro in the leading part. The production, also, is a thoroughly good one. The scenes were taken in the exact locations called for by the scenario, and are often of rugged beauty.

A few minor incidents are not in keeping with the line of conduct to be expected from some of the characters; but, in the main, the plot is handled consistently, and, as the darky preacher declared about the sun, "It do move."

Renie Mathis, the young mountain girl, earns her title of Magdalene because she is led to believe that her marriage to an educated young Northerner was not legal. Renie goes through a deal of unhappiness before matters are cleared up, a charge of murder being the last burden fate loads her with. Mabel Talliaferro is appealingly human in the part and acts her dramatic scenes with much power. The touch of natural refinement she gives to Renie is greatly in the girl's favor. William Garwood as Eric Southard and Frank Montgomery as Renie's father are both excellent.

Two-Reel Pathe Preparadness Picture Shows Uncle Sam Making Ready for War.

It gives a comprehensive and highly interesting insight into the method by which the United States Government is making ready the army and navy for their part in the conflict with Germany and Austria. All the different branches of the service are shown at work, from the moment the raw recruit is sworn in until he becomes a first-class fighting man. The reels have been selected with care, and their timeliness should make them doubly interesting.

THE MYSTERY OF ROOM 422 (Kalem).—A one-reel number of the "Grant, Police Reporter" series that has evidently been on the shelf for some time. The story is not much in this reel, but the thrills are good. Grant reaches a hotel room by a dangerous swing on the rope that he cuts away from a scaffold. Later he leaps across an areaway to a fire escape. He solves a murder mystery. George Larking is supported by Director Robert Ellis and Ollie Kirkby.

BANDIT, BEWARE! (Kalem).—A quite good Ham and Bud comedy reel. Henry Murdoch does his share of the funmaking. Ham and Bud run across a bandit. They steal his clothes and the automobile which the bandit took possession of. Ham meets a pretty girl. Her jewels are swallowed up by the vacuum cleaner in her home. The bandit comes into the house and Ham puts him in the refrigerator. Later Bud and the girl's father come into the house. The jewels are discovered and everything is all right.

MR. BINGO, THE BACHELOR (Selig).—A fairly good comedy reel with John Lancaster and Lyllian Leighton in the leading roles. Bingo, the bachelor, has a hard time ducking insurance solicitors, but Nifty Nettie leads him a merry chase. She finally gets him into a compromising situation and threatens to scream unless he signs "the papers." He signs.

LOCAL COLOR (Essanay).—A thoroughly enjoyable two-reel drama. The story tells of a young writer who in search of local color gets it. He runs across a band of crooks and turns them over to the authorities, and incidentally finds the one girl. Webster Campbell is cast as the young writer. Also seen on the screen are Alice McChesney and U. K. Houpt.

THE MAN FROM TIA JUANA (Kalem).—A moderately good two-reel number of "The American Girl' Western series. There is a surprise finish. There is much good riding and exciting incident. The cashier of Roger King's bank plots to rob the ranch superintendent of bonds. He is successful, but it develops that his colleague is a cow-boy detective. A review is printed on another page of this issue.

THE DAUGHTER OF GAS HOUSE DAN (Selig).—A worth-while two-reel drama played by a capable cast. The reel tells of the daughter of a shady politician who is educated in France, but kept in ignorance of her father's method of making a living. A forged cablegram informs her of her father's doings. She comes to America and is responsible for his reformation. There is love interest, too, in the film.

THE GREAT BRADLEY MYSTERY (Apollo), April 19.—A five-reel mystery drama featuring Alma Hanlon—an acceptable offering in its class and of its type. A JEWEL IN PAWN, April 16.—A five-reel offering with Ella Hall in the featured role, that should go well with the majority of picture-goers. The human interest element is uppermost at all times. There is little drama in the piece, but it is, nevertheless, an entertaining photoplay. Production details are excellent. Reviewed in this issue.

THE GREAT SECRET (Metro), April 16.—Chapter 15 of the Metro serial is called "The Test of Death" and chapter 16 "The Crafty Hand." They are both full of action and are reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

A MAGDALENE OF THE HILLS (Rolfe), April 16.—Mabel Talliaferro is featured in this five-reel photoplay of the southern mountains. The story is well told and the scenes were taken in the locality mentioned in the plot. The picture is acted cleverly by the star and her support. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

THE LOVE DOPE (Metro), April 30.—Ralph Herz is the leading funmaker in this one-reel farce, written by Jack Gormon. As the title implies, a wonderful medical discovery enables the hero to make every woman he meets fall in love with him. The reel is broad farce and well adapted to the methods of the star.

MUTUAL TOURS NO. 23 (Gaumont), April 10.—The subjects contained in this number of the series are "Parks and Gardens of Paris," "Lisbon, Portugal" and "Volendam, Holland." The illustrations are all interesting, while the Holland number is perhaps the most attractive in detail. A full review of these subjects will be found in the Motion Picture Educator of our issue of May 5.

MUTUAL WEEKLY 119 (Gaumont), April 11.—Interesting items of this number show interned German soldiers at Atlanta, Ga., Uncle Sam's dreadnoughts at Hampton Roads, hill climbing by motorcycle at Capistrano, Cal., Miss Jean Rankin, first woman to take her place among the nation's lawmakers, citizen soldiery at New York demanding real rifles instead of wooden ones, and at Venice, California, women joining the naval militia.

HER HERO (Strand), April 11.—This is a pleasing one-reel comedy featuring Billie Rhodes. The story treats of what happened to a certain young man who in donning a borrowed coat leaves his wallet behind. The result is that when he reaches the country club with the girl he adores and her chaperon he finds himself without the necessary cash to carry out his part of the bargain. In rescuing the young lady's purse from a thief he slips a twenty-dollar bill out of it into his own pocket, and is arrested for trying to pass counterfeit money. The situation is amusing and the comedy is well carried out.

THE GYPSY PRINCE (Cub), April 12.—A slapstick comedy featuring George Ovey. In the picture Jerry, mistaken for a thief because he has accidentally picked up a wallet dropped by the real thief, is arrested and escapes on one of the police horses. In his flight he lands in a gypsy camp and is captured and made a prince by the gypsies. But when he sees the homely woman to whom they intend marrying him he seizes the youngest and prettiest gypsy maid, mounts his horse and flies. The pursuit and consequent fight afford amusement.

WHEN MARY TOOK THE COUNT (Strand), April 18.—Billie Rhodes is the featured member of the cast in this one-reel comedy, assisted by Jay Belasco. As a bit of legitimate comedy the picture is very fair, and shows how a young woman becoming estranged from her lover is tricked by lover and father. Discovering that she is advertising in the paper for a husband, the father summons the lover and between them they hatch a plot whereby the young man is to disguise as a count and answer the advertisement. The young woman accepts him, but on the day of the approaching marriage summons her former lover. At the altar the disguise is cast off and all is well. Rather amusing.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

JOLTED JUSTICE (Vogue), April 14.—Rather an amusing farce comedy in which a certain judge becomes infatuated with a dancing girl employed at a side show at the beach. His wife, a very stern member of her sex, is always in his wake, and is on hand when the girl and her companions are being tried before the judge for appearing on the beach without stockings. A pair of trousers that have been accidentally extricated from the judge in one of his maneuvers on the beach, by a jealous rival, is the cause of considerable trouble in the court, and also of his being severely trounced by his wife.

THE CURE (Chaplin), April 16.—To lovers of Chaplin comedy "The Cure" will appeal, not as the best Chaplin effort, but as contrasting favorably with previous efforts. It cannot, for instance, compete with "Easy Street," but contains in the second reel some excruciatingly funny moments, particularly in the scenes at the baths. "The Cure" is a hospital resort where people go to recover from various nervous diseases, including the drink habit. The throwing of some bottles of liquor into the pool which is supposed to containing healing waters causes the inmates to become intoxicated. The final scene shows the comedian disappearing forever in this pool.

ENVIRONMENT (Mutual Star Production), April 16.—A five-part production featuring Mary Miles Minter. The picture does not in any way do justice to the ability of this attractive star, and is based on what is intended to be a story, but which sifted down is nothing more than a series of incidents in which the child of a drunken father is always the central figure. An attempt is made to play up the charms of Mary Miles Minter. Frequent closeups and much padding is the result.

SHORTY LAYS A JUNGLE GHOST (Monogram), April 16.—The 14th number of "The Adventures of Shorty Hamilton," in which he takes a trip to the Philippine Islands in search of his sweetheart, Anita Kellar, is one of the best of the serial. Here he discovers a plot headed by a spy to steal certain Government plans and to raid the island. Shorty is instrumental in working vengeance against the "ghost" of the jungle, who is also supposed to have killed Anita.

THE RAILROAD RAIDERS NO. 2 (Signal), April 16.—"A Double Steal" is the title of this number of the serial. The story number centers around the stealing of a collection of valuable jewels. Hearing that the owners are passing through on a certain train two different parties plan to steal the jewels. One of these parties has duplicates made of the collection and boards the train intending to drop the real jewels out of the window to the pawnbroker. The game miscarries, however, and the jewels are dropped into an ice cart instead. The railroad raiders also enter into the game but are foiled by Helen's manipulations.

Paramount Pictures Corporation

THE SCHOOL FOR HUSBANDS (Lasky), April 5.—As pointed out in the review printed last week, this is an excellent picture, a bright comedy. Fannie Ward is the featured player, and she is well supported by Jack Dean, Mabel Van Buren and Frank Elliott.

THE COST OF HATRED (Lasky), April 9.—A tragic story, with an impressive denouement. Theodore Roberts splendidly portrays a role of hate, induced by great wrong. Kathlyn Williams, too, is strong in a dual characterization. The subject was reviewed in our issue of last week, on page 448.

THE TIDES OF BARNEGAT (Lasky), April 12.—An adaptation of the book by F. Hopkinson Smith. Blanche Sweet is featured, under the direction of Marshall Neilan. The subject is well made. It will measurably interest. The ending is strong, there being a touch of real drama. It is reviewed in another column.

SLEEPING FIRES (Famous Players), April 16.—Pauline Frederick is seen in this subject as a wronged wife and plays her role with her usual strength and reserve power. Thomas Meighan also has a good role and plays it in fine style. It is a good picture, as is pointed out in a review in another column.

THE LONESOME CHAP (Pallas), April 19.—Everything about this five-reel picture is in its favor. House Peters and Louise Huff are the stars. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Pathe Exchange Inc.

THE BORDER PERIL (International), April 15.—Number 14 of "Patria" shows a lively clash between Patria's army and the foes across the border. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

ROBBERS AND THIEVES (International), April 22.—A Katzenjammer Kids cartoon comedy, the twins play a number of novel and amusing tricks on the captain with the help of a vacuum cleaner. Tree Surgery, an interesting educational, is on the same reel.

OUR FIGHTING FORCES (Pathe), April 29.—A timely two-reel picture showing the preparations being made by this government for war, it is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

IN AND AROUND SAN DIEGO (Pathe), April 29.—The sixth number of the Combitone series is particularly interesting. It shows Balboa Park, the seals on Coronado Island and the method by which sea weeds for potash is gathered in the Pacific Ocean.

THE HORNETS OF THE SEA (International), April 29.—These interesting views of the speedy boats that are intended to combat the enemy's submarines are on the same reel with a Krazy Kat cartoon, "The Cook." The latter is very amusing.

INTO THIN AIR (Astra), April 29.—"Mystery of the Double Cross" serial, number 7, adds a new complication that will be difficult to unravel. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

FLORENCE ROSE FASHIONS, NO. 29 (Pathe), April 29.—"Smart Modes' is the appropriate title of this number of the Florence Rose Fashions. It is on the same reel with "Across British India," a well-taken educational showing Madras, the holy city of Benares, and other famous spots.

MAX WINS AND LOSES (Pathe), April 29.—A one-reel Max Linder comedy, the picture is amusing but its chief merit is the beauty of the winter scenes taken in Switzerland. It will please wherever shown.

SUNSHINE AND GOLD (Balboa), April 29.—Another of the Baby Marie Osborne comedies, this five-reel picture is not as well supplied with a plot as the former releases, but the little star is as charming as ever. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Universal Film Mfg. Company

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 67 (Universal), April 11.—Patriotic themes in this country are given particular attention in this number, which bristles with war views. Billy Sunday in New York is also a feature.

THE HOME WRECKERS (Nestor), April 23.—A comedy number, by C. B. Hoadley and F. A. Palmer, featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Edith Roberts, Fred Gamble and Lydia Yeamans Titus. The young men pose as "home wreckers," furnishing lady vampires to lure away husbands. The idea is a good one for a burlesque, but does not get over with any degree of strength. A fair subject.

THE THOUSAND-DOLLAR DROP (Victor), April 4.—An amusing domestic comedy, featuring Ralph McComas, Eileen Sedgwick and Milton Sims. The hen-pecked husband studies hypnotism in order to subdue his wife, but his instructor is a faker and he fails. This works up to a funny close.

TWIXT LOVE AND DESIRE (Laemmle), April 25.—A story of the French Latin quarter, by E. M. Ingleton, featuring Irene Hunt as a young model who toys with the love of two men. This is slight in plot, but well handled. Miss Hunt plays with vivacity and intelligence. The close is quite pathetic. Richard Ryan and Leo Pierson are also in the cast.

THE TOWNSEND DIVORCE CASE (Rex), April 26.—A pleasing court story, by Bess Meredyth, featuring Gretchen Lederer, Jean Hersholt and Roberta Wilson. Mrs. Townsend has brought suit for divorce against her husband, naming a young girl as corespondent. His story comes out during the court action and reveals that his interest in the girl was simply a fatherly one. This is well constructed and makes a pleasing subject.

THE WOODS ARE FULL OF 'EM (Victor), April 27.—A farce comedy located at a mountain summer resort, by Harry Wulze. Ernie Shields, Yvette Mitchell and others appear. The action centers about the report of an escaped lunatic. Various guests are suspected and numerous chases follow. The movement is swift and some fairly humorous situations arise.

THE LEAK (Joker), April 28.—A comic number, by Jack Cunningham, featuring Wm. Franey, John Cooke, Milburne Moranti, Lillian Peacock and Wilton Uhl. Franey plays the part of a hobo who drops off in a small town and plays the part of detective in order to round up the local barber for bootlegging. The sale of booze in the barbershop makes the best feature of this. A fair number of the type.

THE DEATH WARRANT (Imp), April 22.—No. 6 of "The Voice on the Wire" series. Another absorbing episode, in which an old man named Carns is killed in the home of Shirley by the mysterious Japanese heart punch. This time the full figure of a man, with muffled face and attired in black, is seen in the act of committing the murder. The mystery is baffling and well protected, and the installments are notable for their excellent suspense.

THE MARKED ROOM (Universal Special), April 23.—No. 7 of "The Voice on the Wire." Detective Shirley, after his escape from the "death punch" in the Pullman car, succeeds in releasing Polly from her captors. She is suspected by the police of being an accomplice of Red Warren's gang. Later, after Shirley proposes to her, she is again abducted. The "voice" warns James Welsh to beware of death. This is a characteristically mysterious number and continues the interest strongly.

THE FOREST NYMPH (Gold Seal), April 23.—A picturesque three-reel number featuring Bartine MacDonald as a girl of the wilds. Other characters are a half-witted boy, a rough character named Luke, and a stranger who is pursued by the law. The girl falls in love with the latter, and they meet with some stirring adventures. There is a wealth of charm in the settings and the photography is excellent. The bathing scenes are frank, but carefully handled and should not offend. The story itself is entertaining and well presented. A very good offering of the outdoor love story type.

THE HERO OF THE HOUR (Red Feather), April 23.—A five-reel number written by E. B. Lewis and produced by Raymond Wells. Jack Mulhall is featured as an Eastern youth who goes West as a perfumery salesman. He is taken in hand by a bunch of cowboys, who break up his "ladylike" tendencies and make a man of him. The story is very conventional. It is, however, brightly pictured and has a number of interesting light touches in it. From a scenic standpoint it is unusually pleasing. It is not an unusual production, but strikes a happy average. Others in the cast are Wadsworth Harris, Fritzie Ridgway, Grace MacLean and M. K. Wilson.

HER WAYWARD PARENTS (Victor), April 26.—A two-reel number by Clover Roscoe featuring "Daddy" Manly, Mrs. Benson and Loraine Otto. The aged couple are delightful in this, and the opening scenes, where the daughter upsets their quiet life with her hygienic notions, is very amusing. A flash or two of the bathing scenes would be sufficient. The close could have been stronger, but, as a whole, the production is unique and entertaining.

THE TRAIL OF HATE (Bison), April 28.—A two-reel number featuring Jack Ford, Jack Lawton, Duke Worne and others. Part of the action, which is spirited, occurs in the West, and the story then continues in the Philippines. The construction is a little jerky in places, but certain scenes lift it out of the ordinary, such as the stage holdup, the ambush, attack on fort, etc. The plot concerns an unfaithful wife, whom the husband rescues only to send her back to her false lover.

Selznick Pictures

THE EASIEST WAY, April.—A seven-reel version of Eugene Walter's famous realistic drama. Clara Kimball Young has the leading part. The story is a powerful one and has been given a worthy production on the screen. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Triangle Film Corporation.

HER NATURE DANCE (Mack Sennett Keystone), April 8.—A lively farce from beginning to end, one in which there is a vast amount of amusing ingenuity, a winner in any audience.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"TWO-DOLLAR GLOVES" (Selig).

"Two-Dollar Gloves" is the latest of Selig multiple reel dramas to be announced for release in General Film service. It is written by Ade Ford Pitney, and directed by Otis B. Thayer.

"Two-Dollar Gloves" tells the story of a close-fisted small town merchant who refuses to permit his daughter, Cleo, to spend any money. The girl, seeing her friends wearing nice clothing and seeing them well supplied with spending money, resolves to do likewise and draws her savings. Her action results in a love romance. This drama carries clear-cut photography, plenty of action and some good scenery.

"Romance and Roses" is the title of the latest Selig farce comedy, announced by General Film service. Among the stars who enact this comedy can be mentioned John Lancaster, Lyllian Leighton, Wm. Scott and Irene Wallace.

BESSIE BARRISCALE ON TRIANGLE PROGRAM.

Perhaps the most interesting announcement in connection with the Triangle feature releases for May 6 is the news that Bessie Barriscale will return to the program. After an absence of several months, during which she is said to have completed nine big productions, Miss Barriscale will be shown in an unusual Kay Bee drama, entitled "The Snarl," written by Leona Hutton and Lambert Hillyer and directed by Raymond B. West under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince. On the same release date, Elmo Lincoln and Carmel Myers will be featured in a Fine Arts comedy dramatic action, known as "Might and the Man," written by F. M. Pearson and directed by Edward Dillon.

As the star of "The Snarl," Bessie Barriscale will play a dual role. The story, which is the essence of unique drama, tells of the strange happenings which destiny held in store for twin sisters, both beautiful, but absolutely unlike in character. One is earnest and self-sacrificing, the latter selfish, vain and egotistical. How both girls become entangled in the affairs of a young millionaire, with love and loyalty finally triumphing over mockery and stealth forms the basis of an absorbing plot. Miss Barriscale gives two splendid impersonations of the sisters, the distinctions in characterizations being brought out with vivid and incisive skill.

In "Might and the Man," Elmo Lincoln takes the part of a physical trainer at a millionaire's sanitarium. One of his patients is a wornout business man, suffering from indigestion and nerve strain. By a vigorous course of training, during which he rules the millionaire with a hand of iron, Lincoln finally gets the money king in first-class condition. This so pleases the latter, that he takes the trainer home to live with him. Here Lincoln is instrumental in foiling the plans of a gang of swindlers who seek to secure data regarding the manufacture of war materials from the rich man's private safe. The debutante daughter of the house, played by Carmel Myers, falls in love with the young Hercules. But he prefers the cook, who has won his heart with her surpassing pies. How Lincoln jilts the beautiful heiress to marry this culinary marvel adds both suspence and laughter to the plot.

CHANGE IN FLORA FINCH TITLE.

The H. Grossman Distributing Co., Inc., which controls the releases of the Flora Finch Comedy Films Corporation, announces that it will be impossible for them to issue the first release under the title advertised. The first of these comedies has been given to the trade as a travesty on "War Brides." The company has received a communication from Lewis J. Selznick, through his attorneys, threatening suit if the title of the Nazimova production should be used, in view of his holding the copyright and the motion picture right in accordance with the vaudeville sketch entitled "War Brides," in which Mme. Nazimova recently appeared. For this reason Miss Finch's first comedy vehicle will be entitled "War Prides." The trade may feel safe, however, that the change in the title does not interfere with the fun in the picture. The war prides in the story are Franco Supo, Sandy Hook and Little Bo-Peep. Miss Finch's wardrobe, which represents the choicest selection from the Woolworth 5 and 10 cent stores, will not be affected by the new title, nor has the change in title necessitated augmenting the cast with recruits from the Bronx Zoo. Those parts of the story relating to astronomy, political economy, and the raising of babies and wood alcohol remain just the same as ever. It is further announced that the two colored children in the picture will remain black in spite of the change in the name of the play.

"THE MILLIONAIRE'S DOUBLE" (Metro).

A new Lionel Barrymore picture will be released on the Metro program April 30. This will be "The Millionaire's Double," written by June Mathis and directed by Harry Davenport. It is a different sort of story from this popular star's most recent success, "His Father's Son," written by Channing Pollack and Rennold Wolf, but at the same time has much of the humor and action noted in that picture. B. A. Rolfe presents "The Millionaire's Double," which has been produced by Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., for Metro Pictures Corporation.

Evelyn Brent has the part of the "widow." Miss Brent's piquante personality is well known to screen patrons. She has appeared for Metro in a number of Popular Plays and Players releases, including "The Iron Woman," "The Strength of the Weak," and "The Lure of Heart's Desire."

The principal villain part is in the hands of Harry S. Northrup, who is seen as Richard Glendon. Mr. Northrup has been seen in Famous Players, Triangle and Vitagraph releases, and has long been a favorite figure in Broadway productions with such stars as E. H. Sothern, Henry Miller and William Faversham. John Smiley and Louis Wolheim are other well-known members of the cast of "The Millionaire's Double."

Metropolitan scenes of interest and activity are shown in this feature production, among them being glimpses of New York harbor and a New York telephone exchange in operation.

Week's Work at Fox's

Five Subjects Finished and Others Started—Fox Still at Western Studio.

THE week just past marked the completion of five new photoplays in the William Fox studios. Four of the subjects were made on the West Coast and one in Fort Lee, N. J. Chronologically, this is how the entries finished:

On Monday, Frank Lloyd completed a new William Farnum feature. Tuesday saw Richard Stanton putting the final thrills into Dustin Farnum's second William Fox production. Thursday was the last day of work on R. A. Walsh's new picture starring Miriam Cooper. And by Saturday sundown, the crank had turned its last on Otis Turner's forthcoming George Walsh vehicle. In the Eastern Fox plant, director John G. Adolfi finished another June Caprice subject, "A Small Town Girl," and like his brother film-makers, immediately set to work on a new story.

William Farnum's photodrama will be his third super de luxe picture of the year and will be released for the week of April 30 under title of "American Methods." "A Small Town Girl" will also be issued on that date. In Mr. Farnum's supporting cast will be Jewel Carmen, Bertram Grassby, Willard Louis, Alan Forrest, Josef Swickard, Lillian West, Genevieve Blinn, Florence Vidor and Marc Robbins. The story is founded on George Ohnet's widely read novel, "The Ironmaster."

William Fox himself is still at the Hollywood, Cal., studios, and announces that he has engaged C. M. Franklin to direct Gladys Brockwell's next screen drama. Mr. Franklin is one of the two Franklin brothers (Sidney A. is the other) who have always worked together on each of the many productions they have directed in the past. This will be the first time that either has supervised a picture alone. The largest glass stage in the world is now being erected at the Fox plant in Hollywood. It measures 400 by 100 feet and when completed will be entirely covered with glass plates.

In the East, June Caprice celebrates this week her first anniversary in motion pictures. It is just one year since William Fox himself discovered her in Boston. During the time that has passed since then, Miss Caprice has starred in seven films. "A Small Town Girl" is her eighth.

Both Miss Caprice and Stuart Holmes will be well under way on new subjects by next week. The casts will be completed by tomorrow, Harry Blakemore has been chosen for a part in the Caprice feature, and Wanda Petit and Dan Mason have already been selected for Stuart Holmes' next production.

"THE FLASHLIGHT" (Bluebird).

The Bluebird set for release May 21 carries many details of advertising interest to the exhibitor and his public, prime importance attaching to the fact that "The Flashlight" brings Dorothy Phillips forward for her regular monthly appearance in the series. Another interesting item is the fact that Ida May Park, Bluebird's new woman director, furnishes in this feature her first production. Miss Park has always worked with her husband, Joseph De Grasse, furnishing scenarios for Scene from "The Flashlight Girl" (Bluebird).

Bluebirds as well as assisting in the direction—but in turning out "The Flashlight" she has worked entirely alone in providing both the scenario and direction.

Albert M. Treynore's magazine story, of the same title, furnished the basis for the photoplay. Miss Park took her company into the Sierra Nevadas and combed the mountains for some of the most picturesquely beautiful setting a Bluebird has ever carried. As the action takes place largely out-of-doors, natural settings were required to frame the scenes in appropriate and impressive surroundings. Weeks were spent in finding proper locations, and the result promises to lend a delightful appeal to the eye while the interesting story progresses through sensational scenes to a "surprise" finish.

Lon Chaney and Wm. Stowell will, as usual, lead Miss Phillips' supporting company, other players including Evelyn Shelby, Mark Fenton, Chas. C. Jackson, Clyde Benson, Geo. Berrill and Alfred Allen.

"DARKEST RUSSIA" (World Film).

The current release of World-Pictures Brady-Made bears the exceptionally timely title, "Darkest Russia," and is the screen version of a stage drama which enjoyed a remarkably successful career throughout the United States and Canada. The spoken play was written by H. Grattan Donnelly and Sydney R. Ellis, and it was everywhere regarded as a particularly graphic and faithful reflection of the oppressive conditions which prevailed in the Czar's empire—conditions which continued to exist until the recent revolution.

In the motion picture drama Alice Brady personifies a young Jewish girl who is loved by the son of rich and powerful parents in Petrograd. Several drunken soldiers pursue this girl into her home, and when her aged father seeks to defend her from their caresses, he is shot to death by one of their number.

This outrage and the impossibility of securing redress fills the orphaned Jewess with resentment against the tyranny of those in power, so that she refuses to play an air in honor of the Czar when bidden to do so at a great entertainment where she is engaged as a violin soloist.

For this act she is taken before the noble who is giving the entertainment, and upon her continued rebellion he lashes her publicly with the knout. It is the son of this noble who loves the young Jewess and rescues her from his father's wrath.

Subsequently the lovers are arrested as Nihilists, although neither is really associated with that creed, and they are sent away to Siberia, where their sufferings are great until the opportunity arises for them to make a bold dash for liberty. Overcoming the sentry they seize a sledge drawn by three spirited horses and make off for the frontier.

Compelled to abandon this vehicle, they find shelter for the night in an abandoned hut, where they are captured at daylight and are stood up to be shot. At this critical juncture the young man's father, who has finally secured his pardon, halts the execution and gladly consents to the union of the lovers.

Sharp pictorial contrast is afforded between the scenes of affluence and splendor in Petrograd and the wretchedness and squalor of the Siberian mines, while the long flight in the sledge over the snowy roads adds a picturesque out-doors feature which is exceedingly effective.

Miss Brady's characterization of the heroine has been the subject of unmixed praise by observers admitted to the advance showings of this photoplay. John Bowers, who is her principal assistant, also is the recipient of merited praise.

INCE STARTS ON NAVAL TRAINING FEATURE.

For ten days a corps of Triangle directors and camera men, sent out by Thomas H. Ince, have been working at the United States Naval Training Station at Goat Island in San Francisco Bay on the film that is to be presented to the United States Government as a patriotic gift to assist in the recruiting of the Navy.

This is the first and only film ever made that shows in complete detail just exactly what Uncle Sam does when he takes a sturdy young American in civilian clothes, from his civilian environment, and turns him into an able seaman and first class fighting man afloat.

Captain Durrel in command of the Training Station, and the sixteen hundred apprentice sailors in the three separate training camps that have been established on that island, together with Lieutenant Commander Shoup, Lieutenant Gaddis, and Chief Bo's'n's Mate Miller who is the Adjutant, acting under instructions from the Navy Department at Washington, suspended the regular program for the week to the necessities of the film and provided apprentice seamen by sections and companies and battalions to illustrate the various phases of training.

"THE MYSTIC HOUR" IS UNUSUAL STORY.

At the Apollo Fort Lee studios work is progressing rapidly on "The Mystic Hour," the Art Drama for release on May 17. This is from the story by Agnes Fletcher Bain, and it is being made under the direction of Richard Ridgely.

Alma Hanlon stars in this picture, while prominent in her support are John Sainpolis, Charles Hutchinson and Florence Short. Miss Short has distinguished herself in several previous Art Dramas.

The story of the play is based on the studies of dreams and their meanings, which are attracting the attention of the scientific and lay world at present. Sigmund Freud, the renowned psychologist, claims that dreams are the result of suppressed desires, and that these desires form complexes which obsess the mind until insanity results, unless they are got rid of in some way.

Paramount Program.

Marguerite Clark in "The Valentine Girl" and Vivian Martin and Jack Pickford in "The Girl at Home" Are the Features for Week of April 23.

PARAMOUNT'S Program for the week of April 23 is the most spectacular and intersting this organization has issued for many weeks. Marguerite Clark, whose wonderful recent successes, "Snow White," "The Fortunes of Fifi," "The Prince and the Pauper," and "Molly Make-Believe," will next be seen in the Famous Players production of "The Valentine Girl," to be released this week. The production is an original story, and was directed by J. Searle Dawley, who has been responsible for a large majority of Miss Clark's successes. In this picture Miss Clark will take the role of a very young girl, the type of character she has been portraying with such unprecedented success and infinite delight.

The other five reel feature for this week will be the first production in which Jack Pickford appears since his transfer from the Famous Players studio in New York, to the Lasky studio in Hollywood, entitled "The Girl at Home" in which he will co-star with Vivian Martin. This production also marks Miss Martin's first appearance under the Lasky management.

The first of the Paramount Arbuckle comedies, featuring Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle in two reelers, will be released this week, and will be shown simultaneously in over four hundred and fifty theaters the first week of its existence. The first release is entitled "The Butcher Boy."

In "The Valentine Girl" Miss Clark plays the part of Marian Morgan, but Marian Morgan's personality is so different from the other little girls that Miss Clark has played upon the screen that her admirers will find in this characterization a new Marguerite Clark.

Frank Losee, who has appeared with Miss Clark in several of her pictures, and who has won the reputation upon the screen as being one of the most famous character actors before the camera, plays the important role of John Morgan, Marian's gambler-father. Others in the cast are Edith Campbell Walker, Adolph Menjou, Maggie Halloway Fisher, Katharine Adams and Richard Barthemess.

The story of "The Girl at Home" was written by George Middleton, the well known playwright, and adapted for the screen by Beulah Marie Dix, being staged under the direction of Marshall Neilan. James Neil, Edythe Chapman and Olga Gray play important roles in this production, which is a rare combination of comedy and drama, with always a subdued note of pathos in the background. Jack Pickford is Jimmy Dexter, an only child whose mother is in such financial straits that she cannot afford to send him to college as she had always planned to do. Vivian Martin is Jeanne Hilton, the ward of a neighbor of the Dexters, and a youthful sweetheart of Jimmy's. Jeanne makes her home with the Dexters, and when she learns that Mrs. Dexter cannot afford to give Jimmy a college education, she persuades her to accept sufficient funds from her own small income, to enable her to send Jimmy away, but swears her to secrecy concerning the source of her new found wealth.

Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle makes his debut as a star under the Paramount banner this week. The first Paramount Arbuckle comedy entitled "The Butcher Boy," which is conceded to be Mr. Arbuckle's greatest picture, will be the big added attraction to the program this week. This two reel comedy will be released by Paramount to all exhibitors throughout the country. Almost 200 prints of "The Butcher Boy" will be released simultaneously, and there have been almost 3,000 contracts already signed for the showing of this picture, which is the greatest amount of business that has ever been done on any production prior to its actual release.

"The Butcher Boy" is a screamingly funny story, in which Mr. Arbuckle and his cast of players are given unlimited opportunities for creating much hilarious fun. "Fatty" naturally is the hero of the rapid-fire comedy, but there is also given ample opportunity for displaying the talents of no lesser stars, such as Al St. John, the tumbling comedian, "Buster" Keaton, the well known acrobat, formerly of the Three Keatons in vaudeville, and Josephine Stevens. This marks the first appearance of both Miss Stevens and Buster Keaton in motion pictures.

"The Butcher Boy" is one of the most elaborate comedies that has ever been produced, and Mr. Arbuckle has openly stated that it is undoubtedly the greatest piece of work he has ever done. "Fatty" has not appeared in nor had any other pictures released since August, 1916, and during the past seven months he has accumulated a wonderful amount of material for himself to do. He also appears in practically every scene, but directs every portion of the picture, and from start to finish, it is a high type of Arbuckle comedy, he having lived up to his slogan "Worth His Weight in Laughs." Exhibitors everywhere have been clamoring for this series of Arbuckle comedies which Paramount will release on the open market plan, irrespective of their present feature program.

The single-reel pictures for this week includes the 63rd of the series of the Paramount-Bray Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen; the 64th of the series of trips personally conducted by Burton Holmes, the world's greatest traveler, in which he takes his fellow-journeyers "Among the Holy Hindus," and a clever comedy, entitled "Ballads and Bologna," in which Victor Moore plays the leading role.

In the 63rd edition of the Paramount-Bray Pictographs, four interesting subjects are treated, including "Abalone Pearl Fishing," "How Mines Are Laid to Destroy Submarines," "The Visualizing of Ye Old-Time Coon Hunt," and another of Sam Lloyd's Picto Puzzles.

From the Ganges to the Himalayas, is the sort of journey that no one ever forgets, though a lifetime might pass since the journey was made. India is always India; still within its borders there are so many types of humanity, so many different kinds of religion, so many political parties, and so many diverse degrees of temperature and climates, as to make every part of India distinctly different from its neighbors.

To go among the holy Hindus is indeed one of the most interesting trips anyone could take, and the way Burton Holmes takes his fellow travelers in the 64th of his weekly trips around the world is one of the most interesting on which he has ever taken his journeyers.

Victor Moore outdoes himself in a hilarious, side-splitting one-reel comedy, "Ballads and Bologna," which is also released this week. He plays the part of the delicatessen storekeeper who has his heart and hands full, gathering in the money, so that his wife, a potential highbrow, may have sufficient to spend on the non-necessities of life. There are hundreds of clever stunts pulled in this comedy, and it is full of laughs from start to finish.

VIGNOLA GOES OUT AFTER ATMOSPHERE.

In his desire to have absolute authenticity in staging the courtroom scenes in Pauline Frederick's next Paramount picture, "Her Better Self," Director Robert Vignola has devoted a great deal of time to the study of actual court procedure and of court conditions. In the first place, he and William Scully, his assistant, spent nearly three weeks visiting the night court every evening for the purpose of getting the proper atmosphere and an authoritative idea of the methods of procedure in a court. Not content with this, however, Mr. Vignola obtained permission to have the courtroom of the Supreme Court, Trial Term, Part One, in the Criminal Courts Building photographed by a Famous Players cameraman. These photographs were strictly adhered to by the scenic artists in building an exact replica of the courtroom at the studio.

"PASS THE HASH, ANN" (Essanay).

Marguerite Clayton is starred in this short production. It is a Black Cat feature presenting a homely comedy-drama based on life in a cheap boarding house. Ann, the serving maid, is a millionaire's daughter incognito studying economic conditions. She falls in love with a rich youth, there on the same mission. Edward Arnold is the leading man. The situations are well worked out, with the suspense holding until the final scene. There are plenty of good scenic effects, and the photography is up to Essanay's standard. "Pass the Hash, Ann," has a screen time of twenty-nine minutes.

Director W. W. Beaudine of the Universal Joker company is nearing the completion of "Twenty Thousand Legs Under the Sea," a burlesque of the big Universal spectacular production, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea." In this laugh-maker, which is being made in two acts, Gale Henry, William Franey and Milburn Moranti have the leading roles.

Rambeau Leads Mutual for April 23

Jackie Saunders Tomboys in "The Wildcat"—Helen Holmes, Shorty Hamilton, Jimmie Dale Comedies and Other Subjects Round Out Week.

RELEASED by Mutual during the week of April 23 is Marjorie Rambeau in "The Debt," a Powell-Mutual production in five parts, portraying a curious role of a woman in an international romance, beloved by a husband, beset by a suitor, tangled in obligations, and saved by tragedy. The Mutual exhibitor will find a strong angle for advertising in this picture's expose of the mother-in-law problem, its swiftly graphic treatment of a rapidly shifting plot, involving big life questions: "What is the refuge of a wife falsely accused?" "Can ilicit love be honorable?" "When does adventuring virtue cross the line to sin?"

The story, while carrying considerable foreign locale, is strongly American in character and treatment. Photographically it presents some striking effects in controlled lighting, and there are a number of big sets of scenic splendor.

The cast supporting Miss Rambeau includes a number of actors of special note, among them T. Jerome Lawler, Agnes Eyre, Anne Sutherland, who plays the mother-in-law; Robert Elliott and Henry Warwick. The picture was directed by Frank Powell, and carries the characteristic Powell touches.

Jackie Saunders appears in "The Wildcat," the second of her series for Mutual. This might be called a modern version of "The Taming of the Shrew." Jackie again is seen in one of her hoydenish roles. This will be a splendid feature for a family program or for a special performance for the children. It is a comedy drama with many unusual situations which bring hearty laughs from all ages in the audience. "Inside Treachery" is the title of the third chapter of the new Signal-Mutual serial, "The Railroad Raiders," in which Helen Holmes is featured.

"Shorty Unearths a Tartar" is the title of the fifteenth story of "The Adventures of Shorty Hamilton," scheduled for release on April 23. An Egyptian mummy comes to life and makes Shorty Hamilton her slave. A crocodile saves a man's life.

On April 27 comes the sixth of the "Jimmie Dale, Alias the Grey Seal," stories, entitled "Below the Deadline." In this story the Grey Seal comes to the rescue of an old pushcart man who is being robbed of all his savings.

The Strand comedy for April 25 is "And in Walked Uncle." Eillie Rhodes is the featured comedienne in the story, which is made up of three love themes. The Cub comedy, "The Ransom," in which George Ovey furnishes most of the laughs, will be ready on April 26.

"A Plaster Feud," the Vogue contribution to the funmakers, scheduled for April 28, features Paddy McQuire, assisted by Rena Rogers, John Oaker, Larry Bowes and Harry Huckins.

The three one-reel Mutual-Gaumont releases are typical of the spirit of the times. The first reel for the week, "Mutual Tours Around the World," released April 24, contains pictures of Moscow, the "holy city" of Russia, where the Czars were crowned; Sarajevo, the Bosnian capital, where the present war started, and Brest, the most western fortified seaport of France.

The Mutual Weekly, April 25, pictures all the most important phases of war activity. "Reel Life," issued April 26, has pictures of "A Tabloid Bungalow," "Red Clay Workers of Barbados," "An Altiscope Rifle for Trench Warfare," "Cargo Boats of Tomorrow," an animated view of the future "Metal Spinning," and "Native Industries of the Senegalese in the Soudan."

JOSIAH PEARCE & SONS TO HANDLE ART DRAMAS.

Southwestern Art Dramas, Inc., has just signed contracts with Josiah Pearce & Sons, of New Orleans, whereby the Pearce firm will become the exclusive distributors of the Art Dramas program for the state of Louisiana. Josiah Pearce is one of the best known exhibitors in the Southwest. He is the owner of many large theaters in New Orleans and other cities. He was formerly in the exchange business.

This arrangement will enable the Southern exchanges to give much better service to all the theaters in New Orleans, as well as for the entire state. The contract is considered by Harry Raver, president of Art Dramas, to be another milestone of onward progress, as he believes the new alliance will benefit the program over the entire country.

Mr. Pearce and the others in his company made a thorough investigation of the program before contracting to handle it. The firm has a reputation for business sense and discrimination, and no higher compliment could be paid to Art Dramas than that this big firm sees in it a splendid proposition.

MASTBAUM HOUSES BOOK O. HENRY SERIES.

Following the announcement that the Strand theater would play the entire O. Henry series now being distributed by General Film Company, the exchanges of this company report tremendous bookings from various parts of the country. The Stanley, Palace, Great Northern and Family theaters of Philadelphia and the Colonial theater of Atlantic City, all Mastbaum houses, have booked the series, and John H. Kunsky, in Detroit, has just closed for first run for the O. Henry's at his Madison theater.

Fichtenberg Talks of Paralta

Says He Is in a Business Proposition and Stands Behind All Paralta Plans.

HERMAN FICHTENBERG, the chairman of the board of directors of the new Paralta Plays Corporation, who took up his residence in New York the past week, says in reference to the new venture on which he has entered—"Let there be no false impression of my motive in entering the film producing and distributing business at this time.

"While I am approaching this proposition primarily from the standpoint of desiring to be of benefit to my fellow exhibitors, whose difficulties I well know, for I have been through them all, there is no philanthropy or sentimental nonsense in it. I do not intend to stand in any aspect of offering something for nothing, for something for nothing always means nothing for something. I expect to give generous value for what I receive, and I expect to receive full value for what I give. I mean that the world Paralta shall stand for full and broad equity in this industry.

"The Paralta plan of production will mean good plays as well presented as talent and generous outlay will permit. Our plays will not be photographs of a star five to six thousand feet long. The star will have a conspicuous place in each story, of course, but we propose to make productions that will give opportunity for other talent to be seen. We do not propose to kill our stars in public interest by overrunning them in our screen stories. Valuable players may be completely effaced in this way.

"As to the Paralta plan of distribution, that is the outcome of my years of experience as an exhibitor. It has been formulated and taken shape during the past two years. It represents my idea of what is right, and it is submitted by the Paralta Corporation for what it is worth.

"I have thought sufficiently well of it to merge my chain of theaters in the south and leave my business there to give my whole time to Paralta interests. I desire it plainly understood from the start that Paralta plays and plans are launched strictly from a business standpoint, to be conducted on strict business principles, as well as on the theory of John Wanamaker—'the customer is always right.'

"We intend to satisfy every customer—every business connection—and give all the service within our power. We intend to show the exhibitor how he can make his own energy and his own enterprise work directly for his own pocket and exclude all possibility of waste. This is an important part of the Paralta plan, which I shall work just as hard to make a success as I have worked during the past twelve years to make a success of my theaters in the south.

"The publication of our plans and details of Paralta plays was begun in extensive trade paper advertising in editions dated April 28, which were issued April 10."

"THE DEEMSTER'S" STATE RIGHT REGISTER.

State rights buyers are evincing much interest in the great Hall Caine photoplay, "The Deemster," which had its initial New York showing at the Broadway theater Sunday afternoon, April 15, to a crowded house. Many prominent film men, together with a large contingent of the theatrical folk of Manhattan, were present and signified their approval by vociferous applause.

Prominent buyers who called at the Arrow Film Corporation and either closed or opened negotiations for the big Hall Caine feature were B. Amsterdam, president of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, Philadelphia, who bought the rights to "The Deemster" for Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and District of Columbia; E. V. Johnson, of Turner & Dahnkin, 942 Market street, San Francisco; Mr. True Thompson and father, of Dallas, buyers for Texas and a group of Southern states; E. R. Hass and Sidney Miller, of the Hy-Art Film Company, Washington, D. C.; M. M. Feeley, for Wichita Feature Film Company, and H. P. Wolfburg, of Pittsburgh.

The engagement of "The Deemster" at the Broadway theater presages big bookings for the state, and, according to Louis J. Selznick, who controls the rights to the Empire State, it will reap a golden harvest.

"THE LOVE DOPE" (Metro).

Metro's comedy release for April 16 is "The Love Dope," by Jack Gorman, a Metro-Rolma production with Ralph Herz as star. The story concerns Archibald Smart's yearning to be loved. Unfortunately, he has a faculty of making himself generally disliked. His young friend the chemist, Stephen Weisenheim, is just the opposite. He is happily married, and everybody likes him. Weisenheim invents a love tablet. One of these tablets will make the person who swallows it irresistible. He advertises his invention, and Smart calls for a demonstration.

After one tablet Smart makes violent love to Weisenheim's wife and she returns his embraces. The chemist throws him out of the house, but he has bought a bottle of the tablets, and goes forth to conquer. Even a lion in an African jungle succumbs to the magic power of the invention, and comes and licks Smart's hand. "The Love Dope" changes the whole course of Smart's life, and makes him a happy man.

A Train of Carrs.

TRAIN OF SIX CARS AND NO SLEEPER.

Seldom, perhaps never before, have seven members of one family appeared in the same picture. In the accompanying illustration are shown Mrs. Mary Kennevan Carr, who took the part of Alluna in "The Barrier," while in the school scene are six of Mrs. Carr's children. There are three boys, John, age thirteen; Steven, eleven; Thomas, ten, while the girls complete the steps, Luella being seventeen, Rosemary six and Maybeth a tender four. Individually and, now and then, in pairs these embryo actors have appeared in other pictures, notably with Nance O'Neil in "The Plans of Johannis" and "The Great Divide" and "The Evangelist." Little Miss Luella has very "sot" ideas on the silent drama, and has gathered together material from her fifteen years on the stage in a screen drama which she hopes some day to present, playing the lead personally.

Some wag has suggested that the picture be captioned "A Train of Carrs," because each Carr is trained (for the stage), and that, although six car-trains are run on many lines, this is the only specific line upon which six trained Carrs are run, and not one of them a sleeper.

Mrs. Carr is now screening with "The Auction Block," which Larry Trimble is directing for the Rex Beach Pictures Company.

WARREN TO GIVE TRADE SHOWING.

Edward Warren will give a special trade show of "The Warfare of the Flesh," the first of a series of big state right attractions to be released under his own trademark, at the Broadway theater Thursday, April 19, 10 a. m. This is the production that has been heralded for the last four weeks, and, because it marks Mr. Warren's debut as a manufacturer-producer-director, has created considerable interest in the trade. It has been in preparation twelve weeks. The staging, it is said, is very elaborate and the cast is one of the most distinguished ever assembled for a single feature. The players include Sheldon Lewis, who starred in "The Iron Claw"; Walter Hampden, who starred in "The Servant in the House"; Charlotte Ives, now starring in the Morosco Broadway hit, "The Brat"; Marie Shotwell, appearing in "Enlighten Thy Daughter"; Harry Benham, of "The Million-Dollar Mystery," and Theodore Friebus, for years the idol at the Castle Square theater, Boston.

Along about May 1 Mr. Warren will start on his second attraction. He has just signed a long lease on the Life-Photo studios, where so many of the best William Fox attractions have been staged. The second Edward Warren production deals with a big vital theme, and special cast is now being engaged. Like the first production, "The Warfare of the Flesh," the making cost will run up into six figures.

TO MOBILIZE THE BLACK HUSSARS.

The mobilization of the Pennsylvania State Mounted Police, popularly known as "The Black Hussars," for military purposes during the present crisis lends added interest and timely value to the E. I. S. Motion Picture Corporation's production of "Trooper 44," which was directed by Dixon Boardman, president of the E. I. S. concern, and is a drama of the hills, with the dashing troopers lending atmosphere and color. Thanks to the cordial co-operation of Major John C. Groome, superintendent and founder of the force, Mr. Boardman is said to have obtained a picture which is unusual in every respect.

For three months before the picture was started in the making George Soule Spencer, who plays the title role; Roy Gahris, who was associated with Mr. Boardman in its direction, and W. W. Black, who portrays the heavy role, lived with the troopers in their barracks at Greensburg, Pa., the headquarters of Troop A. They participated actively in some of the work of the force, notably in the capture of a desperate murderer who, from his shack in the Allegheny Mountains, defied the whole troop and succeeded in dangerously wounding Captain Lynn G. Adams, who appears in the picture, before he was captured.

Joseph A. Miles, of 220 West Forty-second street, sole sales agent for "Trooper 44," reports that franchises are being eagerly sought by state right buyers, but some territory is still available.

SELZNICK'S "THE LAW OF COMPENSATION" READY.

With "The Law of Compensation" ready for release, Miss Norma Talmadge is rapidly completing her third Selznick-Pictures production, an adaptation from the fascinating novel, "Poppy," by Cynthia Stockley. This picture is being directed by Edward Jose, and from all appearances it promises to create a sensation surpassing that of the book.

"Poppy" is a novel that possesses all the potential elements of a motion picture success. Romance, action, surprise, suspense and all the component parts of drama vie for supremacy on every page of this bewitching story. Miss Talmadge, in her portrayal of Miss Stockley's heroine, Poppy Destin, the child of nature over whose trials and tribulations the world has wept, is expected to prove the greatest triumph of her screen career.

The story itself holds such a variety of scenes and so many sharply defined characters of the deepest interest that Director Jose has found the only difficulty in determining what to eliminate. In the process of screening the romance, the inspiration that the petite star felt for the character was communicated to the director, with the result that Poppy became no longer a figure of fiction but a living, breathing being, fragile as the flower bearing that name.

The indication of the strength of the cast surrounding the star may be had from the names of the players in the two principal male roles, Frederick Perry and Eugene O'Brian, both known to every theatergoer in America.

BIG PUBLICITY PLAN FOR O. HENRY SERIES.

A co-operative scheme that will be a nationwide advertising campaign for the O. Henry series of two-reel pictures being distributed by the General Film Company has been planned by the executives of Doubleday, Page & Co., the Review of Reviews Company and the General Film. As the O. Henry pictures, which are all founded on the short stories of this famous writer, are issued, Doubleday, Page & Co. will arrange window displays of the volume of O. Henry stories from which the current picture was taken in every book store in every city where the pictures are being shown. These displays will be changed from week to week to keep the window displays current with the pictures.

The Review of Reviews plans an even more comprehensive campaign, as they will circularize every city of 100,000 and less where the pictures are shown with pamphlets containing scenes from the O. Henry pictures and, of course, advertising the volumes of the stories. In addition, the tremendous newspaper and magazine advertising campaign of these two publishing houses will from now on cover the O. Henry series. By these mediums and the extensive campaign now being waged by the General Film Company the O. Henry series will undoubtedly have more publicity and advertising than any cycle of short subjects ever placed on the market.

Collins on War and Pictures

McClure Pictures' President Does Not Believe War Will Affect Patronage—Compares Magazines and Films.

AMERICA'S entrance into the war will in no way harm the motion picture industry, and indications are that the business actually will be benefited by present conditions, according to Frederick L. Collins, president of McClure Pictures, who has just returned from an extended trip to the Pacific Coast.

"Manufacturers on the Coast are not planning to let up in the slightest degree because of the war," Mr. Collins said. "I find, upon my return to New York, that the same condition exists here. We are all proceeding just as if there had been no declaration of war.

"Motion picture producers will not expect to pay as large dividends as before, for, of course, we all must contribute a war tax, and, as long as this tax is a reasonable one and the motion picture industry is not singled out to bear unfair burdens, business conditions will remain prosperous.

"I do think that the war will stop the rise of 'fly-by-night' producers, and that a number of the unfit will be eliminated, for the simple reason that investors will be more cautious, and will not be so ready to lend money to companies of no standing. The more of these that drop out the better conditions will be.

"In Europe the conflict has increased the percentage of motion picture fans among those at home. The business in England, for instance, has been affected only because there are now no facilities for production, for so many of the workers in the industry are at the front.

"A state of war stimulates the desire for amusement, and motion picture producers will be the first to use all our facilities for inspiring patriotism and encouraging recruiting.

"Entire different conditions exist in Canada. The market there for films made in the United States never has been good. With the exception of New York, Canada is the most provincial territory in the world. They don't like imported things. Canada herself doesn't produce motion pictures worth while, and, since they don't like to use our pictures, the photoplay never really has taken hold up there.

"Canada, for instance, doesn't furnish a good market for magazines published in the 'States'—magazines of the sort that have the same appeal to Canadians that they have to us in the United States. They just don't like any product but their own. Australia, lacking this provincialism, is a much better market for American magazines, comparatively, than Canada.

"The fact that we have entered the war may help destroy the prejudice. Now Canada may welcome our films.

"Exhibitors throughout the country realize that the war will not harm their business. In Los Angeles and Chicago, for instance, they are finding that war dramas, such as 'Sloth,' one of 'The Seven Deadly Sins,' are drawing to the theaters persons who usually never patronize the motion pictures.

"War will not keep the regulars from attending, and, in addition, will draw in an entirely new class of patrons who will go, first, to see war pictures, and most of whom will be converted into regular patrons of the photoplay."

Mr. Collins returned from California with new plans for the new series of five-reel photoplays that is to be released by McClure Pictures to follow "Seven Deadly Sins."

Definite announcement regarding the new series will be issued by McClure Pictures within the next few days.

MILITARY DRAMA FROM UNIVERSAL.

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company will present on April 30 an extraordinary five-part military drama entitled "The Birth of Patriotism," from the story by A. R. Wylie, in which Irene Hunt and Leo Pierson are the featured players. The production by E. Magnus Engleton is a rare film achievement and ranks as one of the best works of this director. The scenes are laid in war-stricken Europe, and deals with thrilling situations on the battlefront "somewhere in France." The story is full of genuine pathos, intermingled with romance, love of country and patriotism.

The action depicts the sacrifices the British women have made since the great war began. The story tells of Anne, a barmaid in an English public house, who becomes the inspiring motive which causes many of the hangers-on at the little ale house to enlist and do their bit for their country. She becomes the guiding spirit for a man whose home life is wrecked through misunderstandings with his wife, and who finds himself in the turmoil and havoc of the battlefield.

The battle scenes are realistic and convincing, the photography excellent and the cast a brilliant one. "The Birth of Patriotism" is a different type of war drama, with an appealing theme devoid of all melodramatic situations. It is a play which should prove unusually popular.

MUTUAL TAKES BIGGER QUARTERS IN BUTTE.

The Butte office of the Mutual Film Corporation has been moved to larger quarters at 124 West Granite street. The new location is in the Independent Telephone Building, a modern fireproof structure. The change was made necessary by the growth of Mutual business. W. A. Coughlin, manager of the Butte branch, is welcoming exhibitors at his new office.

Hearst-Pathe News Increases

Large Gains In Business Noted Since Consolidation of International Weekly and Pathe News.

THE consolidation of the Pathe News and the International Weekly on January 8 has already been productive of results of the most gratifying nature. This is illustrated by figures which have just been compiled which show that the Hearst-Pathe News in February did an increased business of over 26 per cent. This increase in business is naturally most pleasing to J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, and to E. A. MacManus, general manager of the International Film Service, since it is a definite proof that their logical expectations of a greater, better and more successful news weekly as a result of the amalgamation are already being realized and that within a remarkably short space of time.

Showing the great value of the backing of the Hearst newspapers in their territory the Pathe exchanges in Atlanta shows a 33 per cent. increase in business done on the Hearst-Pathe News; the Chicago office shows a 50% increase; the New York office a 45% increase; the Los Angeles office a 50% increase, and Boston and San Francisco 16% and 10% respectively. The close co-operation between the newspaper and the news weekly has proven itself to be profitable to both.

As for the Hearst-Pathe News itself, through the great news gathering facilities of the International it frequently approximates with its speed in showing pictures of an event the publication of the news story in the papers. Many an exhibitor, by special advertising, has taken advantage of this fact and has found in the Hearst-Pathe News a drawing power comparable to that of a first class feature. In fact, the trade paper advertising on the News frequently carries the slogan "The only one-reel feature."

It is obvious that with the United States at war the value of the Hearst-Pathe News as a box-office attraction should be materially increased. Motion pictures show conditions as they are and the News in war time will draw to see it many persons who will pay their admission fee to see it alone. It is believed that the exhibitor advertising on the Hearst-Pathe News will thus cease to be sporadic and become continuous, and that the exhibitor will see the value to his box-office of real display advertising upon it.

The News Weekly is a hobby of Mr. Berst, as he created the first American Weekly for Pathe over eight years ago. He has seen the recognition of the value of the idea through the competing weeklies which have sprung up and is strong in his faith as to the future of the Hearst-Pathe News. Today every first class theater realizes the value of the news reel, and it is believed that with the perfection of the co-operation between the Hearst newspapers and the Hearst-Pathe News, the 26 per cent. increase in business will b elargely augmented in the future.

"THE WEB OF LIFE" GOING GOOD.

The Gold Medal Photoplayers are meeting with very gratifying success in the distribution of their first feature, "The Web of Life," a five-part drama now being distributed through independent exchanges. The story is an absorbing portrayal of the struggle of a young country girl to hold her dissipated husband and win him away from his evil companions. It is the old problem of the fight between innocent and childlike trustfulness against the sinfulness and faithlessness of a weak man.

The principal parts are played by Hilda Nord, James Cruze and George Spencer, supported by an excellent cast of players.

In New York the picture is being distributed by the Pioneer Feature Film Company, and, though the picture has only been offered to exhibitors a very short time, an unusual number of houses have arranged for bookings. It will first be seen in a number of theaters in Loew's circuit and in prominent neighborhood houses.

In eastern Pennsylvania the Electric Theater Supply Company has purchased the distribution rights, and the picture will be shown first over the Stanley circuit.

The company is already engaged in the production of another feature to be distributed on the states rights plan.

MANY INQUIRIES ON "POKES AND JABS."

A large number of inquiries from exchangemen in all sections of the country was the result of the recent announcement by the Jaxon Film Corporation that its single-reel "Pokes and Jabs" comedies had been withdrawn from the General Film Company program, and would hereafter be distributed on the open market. According to an official of the Jaxon company, practically every exchange of any consequence in the country has made application by letter, wire or by personal call to handle the comedies.

As yet no contracts for franchise rights have been closed. It is the intention of the Jaxon company to arrange for the distribution of its pictures throughout the entire country at the same time. Arrangements have already been completed, however, for representation in a large percentage of the territory, and it is expected that the company will be able to announce its exchanges for the whole country in a short time.

MOON COMPANY MAKING COMEDIES.

The Moon Producing Company, with headquarters in the Ordway Building, Newark, N. J., have entered the producing field and are at present making one-reel comedies featuring Oscar Johnson, "the man of a thousand faces." The company has already completed its first offering, which is entitled "Professor Phaces Phancy."

F. Harry Smith is writing the stories and directing the pictures. Harry B. Papier is another intimately concerned with the affairs of the concern, which announces that its offerings will be devoid of slapstick and will be among the best comedy material obtainable.

UNIVERSAL'S PREPAREDNESS RELEASES.

First among the series of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company's preparedness releases is "Uncle Sam at Work," a complete motion picture of all branches of our government, based upon the celebrated book of Frederick J. Haskin's, "The American Government." It shows the entire working of the army and navy, and is presented in eleven episodes.

The Universal serial, "Liberty," in twenty episodes, which has proved one of the most successful and profitable motion picture serials ever released, in which Marie Walcamp is the featured star, is another preparedness motion picture which is taking the country by storm. It realistically portrays our recent troubles along the Mexican border.

Other Universal pictures of the same nature are "The War Waif," a two-reel special, featuring Allan Holubar, Zoe Rae and Claire McDowell; "The White Feather Volunteer," a two-reel war drama based on the English slackers, featuring Rupert Julian and Elsie Jane Wilson; "Court Martialed," a stirring three-part war drama produced by Stuart Paton, and "If My Country Should Call," a five-part patriotic drama starring Dorothy Phillips, who is supported by a strong cast which includes Lon Chaney, Jack Nelson, Vola Smith, Frank Whitson and others. This photodrama is from the original story by Virginia Terhune VanDerwater.

"UNDYING FLAME" FIRST PETROVA PICTURE.

It is announced by the Lasky company that Madame Olga Petrova will make her first appearance under its management in "The Undying Flame," a dramatic story of ancient and modern Egypt in which Madame Petrova plays, first, the daughter of a Pharaoh, and then, in the second part of the story, the young daughter of an English army officer. The mere fact that Madame Petrova was to star in a picture assured its success from a histrionic standpoint, and the engagement of Maurice Tourneur to stage the production is a guarantee of originality, lofty conception and power in presentation.

The interior settings of the picture were staged in the newly acquired Fort Lee studio of the company, and the exteriors were taken in the sandy wastes of Florida, where Madame Petrova and her company spent several weeks.

Mahlon Hamilton, who has appeared in other Paramount pictures, plays the role of Paget in support of Madame Petrova.

FIRST FORUM FILMS PROGRAM.

The first program of Forum Films, Inc., includes "The Half Back," a picturization of Ralph Henry Barbour's story of school life and football; "Captains of Tomorrow," showing a dress parade at West Point; "The Dinosaur and the Baboon," presenting a group of animated manikins; "The Sea Horse," a short study of a little known fish; "A Vanishing Race," a scenic taken on the Blackfoot Indian Reservation, and "Puss in Boots," a fairy tale told in silhouette. An adaptation of Robert Louis Stevenson's "Kidnapped" is among the early releases.

RAPID BUYING OF "GOD'S MAN."

The Frohman Amusement Corporation's production, "God's Man," in which H. B. Warner, through his wonderful delineation of the character of Arnold L'Hommedieu has placed himself among the most eminent screen artists, is being accorded a remarkable reception by both territorial rights distributers and exhibitors alike.

Within a few hours after the trade showing of the production last week the Frohman offices were practically besieged by offers for the outright purchase of the negative of this subject with rights for the entire world. Despite these offers the Frohman company has proved the sincerity of its intent to build a business for permanency and has declined to deviate from its original intention of marketing "God's Man."

During the past week, and within less than four days after the beginning of the quotation of prices, Manager Joe Farnham has disposed of twenty of the forty-nine states and has under consideration offers for practically every country in the world.

From present indications it is possible that in the disposition of territorial rights for "God's Man" the Frohman corporation will set a record for rapid distribution.

NEW LINDER COMEDY FROM PATHE.

Max Linder in a one-reel comedy never before released is announced by Pathe for the week of April 29. It is entitled "Max Wins and Loses."

Reports from exhibitors are that the Max Linder comedies which Pathe has reissued have been extremely successful. Therefore, great things are expected of this new comedy, which is said to contain a laugh a foot.

The story deals with Max's side-splitting antics as a crime detector.

PATHE TAKES OVER OFFICIAL WAR PICTURES.

That Official War Pictures, Inc., of which W. K. Vanderbilt is president and H. P. Davison, of J. P. Morgan & Co., is treasurer, will release through Pathe and not the General Film. This means that Pathe exchanges will take over all bookings on the official British war films showing the American ambulance, aviation and other corps already engaged in fighting for the Allies, and that Pathe exhibitors will be given first preference in booking these attractions, which have scored tremendously wherever shown.

A. J. CORCORAN, INC., CHANGE OFFICE ADDRESS.

As a matter of convenience A. J. Corcoran, Inc., will remove their offices now at 11 John St., New York, to the factory, number 761 Jersey Avenue, Jersey City. This change will take place on May 1, and will afford the Corcoran company better facilities for handling their business and showing their large line of goods of which the manufacturing of tanks and racks for moving picture laboratories is only a part.

"ENVIRONMENT" (Mutual).

Mary Miles Minter possesses an extraordinary genius for supplying the little human touches that go to make the success of her pictures. In "Environment," latest of the American-Mutual star productions, this power of perception on Miss Minter's part is well exemplified. In a play that develops situations which might pall, because of the sordidness of the life that "Liz" must lead as the daughter of a drunken father, it is the quick turn of the head—the sudden transition from grave to gay—the regular sunburst smile of "Sunny Mary" that swings the fate of the play.

Summer Bluebirds

Selected List of Releases Until August Announced—Bluebird Roster Strong.

BLUEBIRD is ready for the summer campaign with a selected list of releases sufficient to last until August. The word "selected" is used advisedly, for the reason that Bluebird has the choice of double the number of features that ultimately find their way to the program. More than a dozen productions are now completed and ready for exhibition, giving the Bluebird forces opportunity to prepare thus far in advance for the next theatrical season.

"A Doll's House," to be presented by Dorothy Phillips, with Lon Chaney and William Stowell chief in her suport, is the latest feature that has been definitely programed. June 11 will bring this great work of Henrik Ibsen for the first time to the screen, although it has been a medium of great artistic success upon the stage for such stars as Mrs. Fiske, Duse and Nazimova in seasons past. Joseph De Grasse made the production from Ida May Park's scenario.

"Bringing Father Home" is another announcement just made. This piece was written by H. O. Davis, general manager of Universal City, Cal., where the Bluebirds come from, and was prepared for the screen by Bess Meredyth. William Worthington directed and Franklyn Farnum and "Brownie" Vernon are the featured ones. The settling of a political dispute between the "wets and drys" in a Western community are related in comedy-drama. June 4 has been set as the release date.

Lynn F. Reynolds will furnish the attraction for May 28 in "Southern Justice," a story of Kentucky without crime or villainy. Like all of the Reynolds Bluebirds, the scenes have been largely made out of doors, reflecting the beauties of nature as embellishments to an interesting narrative. Myrtle Gonzalez and George Hernandez, leaders of the Reynolds forces in all of his earlier Bluebirds, will again be the featured players in "Southern Justice."

Apart from the always interesting appearance of Dorothy Phillips, the release for May 21 will be conspicuous because it is the first effort of Bluebird's new woman directress, Ida May Park. Since Lois Weber has left Bluebird to go "on her own" as a producer, Miss Park has been chosen to give to the series the feminine touch that Miss Weber brought with such abundant success to the maintenance of the program. "The Flashlight" will give Dorothy Phillips fine opportunities, and Lon Chaney and William Stowell, who are always featured in Miss Phillips' support, also have good roles.

While Bluebird has not announced definite dates for productions beyond "A Doll's House," on June 11, notice comes that there are many other features complete and ready for distribution. Among the lot are mentioned "The Little Belgian," to be offered by Ella Hall; "The Car of Chance," for Franklyn Farnum and "Brownie" Vernon; "A Kentucky Cinderella," for little Zoe Rae and Rupert Julian, and "Fires of Rebellion," which will serve to present Dorothy Phillips in her regular order as a Bluebird attraction.

MUTUAL WEEKLY FOLLOWING WAR AFFAIRS CLOSELY.

Not so much latitude is now allowed news cameramen, because of the war censorship, but the Gaumont company is managing to give a martial air to its issues of the Mutual Weekly, which makes this a highly valuable reel for exhibitors. Just at this time the interest of the entire nation is upon things military, and the exhibitor who does not satisfy this interest will find that he is playing into the hands of a rival theater. The Mutual Weekly is the best method of stimulating enthusiasm, because it presents pictures of persons and events which will have places in history.

The current issue of the Mutual Weekly is rich in pictures which will aid in recruiting. They show the ready response of the men who are already in uniform. Any exhibitor who will make a weekly feature of this single reel, which gives news of the world as it happens, will find that he is developing a steady patronage which he can count upon week after week. It is a mistake to regard a single reel as a "filler." It should be selected with as great care as a five-reel photodrama. When there is a judicious arrangement of the day's program every reel is of equal strength.

Recognizing that there is a steady demand for single reels of a quality which equals the best photodrama production the Gaumont company has specialized in this field. The result has been that it now furnishes pictures which are unsurpassed in interest and variety. Another notable reel that is issued weekly—the day following the appearance of the Mutual Weekly—is "Reel Life," Gaumont's Mutual Magazine in Film. It also has pictures that reflect the war situation.

FROHMAN CORPORATION ESTABLISHES SERVICE DEPARTMENT.

With the appreciation of the augmentation of the essentials of success which a more active co-operation between manufacturer and the territorial broker of super-productions will make possible, the Frohman Amusement Corporation proves itself wide awake to conditions with the announcement from that office of the establishment of a special service department. 'It is the plan of the Frohman corporation that this department shall be that connecting link between its organization and the handlers of Frohman products, which will do much to eliminate the possibility of a buyer's contention that he "doesn't seem to be able to get the real money from the production."

The Frohman service department will aim primarily toward an aid in the proper methods of exploitation of super-productions. It is the intent of the company that this service department shall be ever on the ground visiting the exchanges handling the Frohman product. The service department will keep in constant correspondence, offering suggestions for the improvement of booking business and will at all times be eager and anxious to receive and act upon suggestions.

MAE MURRAY IN "THE PRIMROSE RING."

"The Primrose Ring," an adaptation of Ruth Sawyer's story of the same name in which Mae Murray is starred by the Lasky company, is a delightful mixture of the fantastic and prosaic. Tom Moore appears opposite Miss Murray in the role of Dr. Robert MacLean. Little Billy Jacobs, who has been scoring personal successes out of all proportion to his diminutive stature in support of Fannie Ward, Blanche Sweet and other players, has one of the most delightful and sympathetic roles in this picture—that of a little cripple boy.

"The Primrose Ring" is the story of a crippled girl who is cured of her affliction and devotes herself to the nursing of younger children who are also subject to the same disease.

In handling this production Director Robert Leonard has been given opportunity to show his talent in producing not only realistic effects in the hospital scenes, but the presentation of remarkably fantastic and eerie scenic effects in picturizing the fairy tales which Miss Murray tells.

QUO VADIS TO BE RE-ISSUED.

"Quo Vadis," film classic, which stands as a beacon light amongst motion pictures, and which is credited with having blazed the way for the multiple reel feature in the United States, is to be revived on a gigantic scale by George Kleine, who first showed this film in this country.

The revival of this famous picture should not be regarded as an ordinary re-issue, Mr. Kleine states, but may be accepted as a new "Quo Vadis," inasmuch as the film will be re-edited, new titles provided, new scenes added, and the entire film story strengthened with a splendor that cannot help but enhance its value.

Mr. Kleine's decision to revive this classic, and his pledge that it will be presented on an even more magnificent scale than the orginal, will excite more than ordinary interest. No one is better versed than Mr. Kleine in the art of presenting wondrous pictures.

SCIENTIST PRAISES PICTURE.

"The Mystic Hour," the Apollo Art Drama in which John Sainpolis makes his debut on this program, is rapidly nearing completion at the Fort Lee studios. The story, which is based on investigations of dream psychology made by Dr. Sigmund Freud, was recently commended by a famous professor of psychology, who said it was scientifically correct, as well as being an absorbing story. Considering that the Freudian theories are just now occupying the attention of scientists, as well as of laymen, throughout the world, this picture should have a wide appeal. Richard Ridgely is in charge of the direction.

ART DRAMAS MAKES CORRECTIONS.

An item appearing in some of the trade papers last week stated that Edward Ellis was to play the lead in "The Mystic Hour," an Apollo-Art Drama. Mr. Ellis does not appear in "The Mystic Hour." The leading roles are played by Alma Hanlon, who is starred; John Sainpolis and Charles Hutchinson.

Another note was printed to the effect that Edward Earle played the lead in "The Great Bradley Mystery." This should have read "juvenile lead." Edward Ellis plays the lead in this picture. This is also an Apollo-Art Drama.

Universal Features Jack

In "The Hero of the Hour" He Leads the Program for Week of April 23.

JACK MULHALL, who has rapidly grown to be one of the most popular juveniles on the screen, is the star in the Universal Special Attraction, "The Hero Of The Hour," which leads the Universal program for the week of April 23. This is the best five-part production in which he has appeared, and is a comedy drama of novel theme and ludicrous situations. It was written by Eugene B. Lewis and produced by Raymond Wells. Most of the action takes place on a Western ranch and the stunts that the cowboys do to the tenderfoot from the East played by Mulhall will bring a laugh to the most hardened picturegoer.

In the cast supporting Mulhall are Fritzie Ridgway, Grace MacLean, Noble Johnson, Fred Burns, M. K. Wilson and Eugene Owen. "The Hero of the Hour," will appear on Monday, April 23. On the same day the Nestor comedy, "The Home Wreckers," featuring that irresistible trio, Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts, will be released.

The feature for Tuesday, April 24, is the Gold Seal three-part mountain drama, "The Forest Nymph," with Bartina Burkett in the leading role. Many of the scenes for this picture were taken in the heart of the Sierra Nevada Mountains, and the background forms a beautiful setting for the action of the story. "The Thousand Dollar Drop," a Victor comedy, written by Tom Gibson and produced by Allen Curtis with Eileen Sedgwick in the stellar role is the other Tuesday release.

The L-Ko two-part comedy, "Little Bo-Peep," with Dan Russell creating the bulk of the laughs, is the chief offering of Wednesday, April 25. The other releases of that date are the Laemmle one-act drama, "Twixt Love and Desire," with Irene Hunt and Leo Pierson, and the regular issue of the Universal Animated Weekly with all the latest news events.

"Her Wayward Parents," a two-part Victor comedy drama, written by Clover Roscoe and produced by Norval McGregor, with Jay Belasco as the featured player, will be presented Thursday, April 26. This is a delightful romance full of many surprising turns. The Rex drama, "The Townsend Divorce Case," with Gretchen Lederer and Roberta Wilson, and the Big U drama "The Warrior's Bride," with Wallace Reid, will also be released on Thursday.

A tense story of intrigue and mystery is offered Friday, April 27, when the Imp two-part drama, "The Rogue's Nest," featuring Edith Roberts and Lee Hill will be presented. This is an absorbing photodrama of crook life written by Arthur Maude and Constance Crawley and produced by Donald McDonald. The Universal Screen Magazine, No. 16, and the Victor comedy, "The Woods Are Full Of 'Em," with Ernie Shields in the principal role, are other releases of this date.

The Bison two-part drama of Saturday, April 28, is a gripping story of Army life in which Jack Ford appears to excellent advantage as Lieutenant Brewer, an officer who rose from the ranks. The Joker comedy, "The Leak," with William Franey and the Laemmle drama, "A Woman of Clay," with Leah Baird in the leading role will also appear on Saturday.

The Powers split reel, "Under The Big Top," and "In the Heart of China," a Dorsey Educational, and the Rex two-act drama "David Creig's Luck," starring Matt Moore and Jane Gail are the releases of Sunday, April 29.

The seventh episode of the Universal mystery serial, "The Voice on the Wire," entitled "The Marked Room," will appear during the week. This episode carries Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber through many harrowing adventures.

"THE NIGHT WORKERS" (Essanay).

Essanay is photodramatizing the serious side of a big city's night life. The production will bear the title, "The Night Workers." Marguerite Clayton, who has just finished the highly successful series, "Is Marriage Sacred?" is being featured. Jack Gardner is appearing as her leading man. The picture, which will have a screen time approximately of 1 hour, 15 minutes, will be released through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service on May 21.

"The Night Workers," as the title implies, will portray the lives of people who work at night. The base of the plot is laid in a metropolitan morning newspaper office, and unfolds many interesting details in the making of a great public journal. It deals, however, with all kinds of night workers. J. Bradley Smollen, for years a newspaper man in New York and Chicago, is the author of the play. Its direction is under the eye of J. Charles Haydon.

The play does not deal with the pleasure seekers of the night. Its theme is confined to the unnaturalness of the lives of those compelled to earn their bread in the hours of darkness. It takes up persons who arise to undertake their daily tasks when most workers are laying them down. The unfilled lives of these people form a tragic angle that even they themselves will not admit.

No attempt is being made to accomplish a serious or tragic preachment against the theme. The play will be a thoroughly interesting exposition of a condition that will never be eradicated. There always will be night workers.

"THE TWISTED THREAD" (Balboa).

Balboa's forthcoming serial, "The Twisted Thread," promises to set a new standard in continued photoplay production. Those who have had the privilege of seeing the opening episodes are enthusiastic about them.

Especial interest attaches to "The Twisted Thread" because it will introduce to the screen Kathleen Clifford, the latest celebrity recruited from the stage. This petite favorite is known far and wide. For a long time she has been bombarded with letters from her admirers, asking when they would have the pleasure of seeing her in the films.

"The Twisted Thread" is unlike anything that has yet been offered as a serial. It starts with a gripping story of mystery, romance and adventure, as conceived by H. M. Horkheimer. A notable cast has been provided to unfold the story.

For the production of "The Twisted Thread" a $30,000 stage was specially constructed at the Balboa studio. On it have been erected some of the most artistic sets ever put up for any film production. This is conceded by representatives of the motion picture trade press admitted to see them. Practically no limit has been placed on the expenditures for this production.

Asked as to who would release "The Twisted Thread," President Horkheimer said that would not be announced for a few days, as he has several overtures under consideration. "This is going to be one of the surprises of the trade," he continued. "You know we now have several outlets for our productions. 'The Twisted Thread' will probably be distributed by one of the biggest of all agencies active today—one that has never handled a serial before."

INTEREST IN PATHE'S "NEGLECTED WIFE" SERIAL.

Widespread interest has been created by the announcement that Mabel Urner's famous stories, "The Journal of a Neglected Wife" and "The Woman Alone," that have probably been read by more millions than any other stories by an American author, have been put into pictures and will soon be released by Pathe in serial form. "The Neglected Wife" will be the title of this serial, the production of which has been completed by Balboa. Ruth Roland, who played the lead in Pathe's "Who Pays?" series and the more recent "Red Circle" serial, is the featured player. She is supported by Roland Bottomley, the distinguished English actor.

"The Neglected Wife" is in fifteen episodes of two reels each. The story is a natural one, and many men and women watching it unfold on the screen will be surprised to see how nearly their lives or the lives of acquaintances have been paralleled by the writer. The story itself has sufficient strength to sustain interest from episode to episode. In addition each chapter has at least one big effect.

Paralta Plays Explains its Plan

New Organization Will Manufacture and Distribute—Co-operation to Be Keynote.

PARALTA PLAYS, INC., the new distributing company formed by Carl Anderson, Herman Fichtenberg, Nat I. Brown, Robert T. Kane and Herman Katz, has begun to make known the policy on which it will do business. The new enterprise will have two interests—producing connections on the one side, whose productions it will absolutely control, and a distributing organization of national scope on the other.

The distributing end has been designed especially to cut out that useless expense and waste which, to many such companies, has meant the difference between profit and loss. By minimizing this waste the company says it will be able to offer better terms to exhibitors. The keynote of this is co-operation.

The plan on which Paralta will distribute the productions it controls has had practically two years' demonstration. All the men concerned in this company studied motion picture conditions for over a year, seeking each definite evil and its corrective. They then formulated a plan which was given eight months' test in Southern and Western theaters. It proved a success and the Paralta plan became a fact.

General Manager Brown, who is a firm believer in the doctrine that the greatest results in all things come from sincere co-operation, has worked into the distribution plan many co-operative features designed especially to establish unshakable equity in the division of financial results.

Through co-operation waste in distribution will be reduced to a minimum. This saving will be turned to the advantage of the exhibitor and not used to increase the profits of the producer or the main distributing corporation.

The interests of the producers of the Paralta plays and the general distributing company will be protected on the basis of fixed returns on specific outlay. In this way the theater manager will be given every possible advantage in booking.

A special feature of the plan will be the booking with one exhibitor in a specific territory. This feature will give that exhibitor full control of an attraction for a definite time in a defined territory. Should he run it for three days, or a week, and spend considerable money in advertising it, the picture cannot be run at a lower price against his house a few weeks later and another exhibitor reap benefit from his work

He controls the picture absolutely in his own territory and can run it as often as he may be able to make it pay, practically without greater expense than he now pays for his first feature run.

One of the worst conditions the exhibitor has to meet, and one that has proved a constant leak and source of waste, is the high rentals charged on one-day bookings. The exhibitor has spent what he could in advertising and paid big rent on his attraction, but before he can possibly get the advantage of cumulative interest "the show has come and gone."

Two Paralta studios are now in operation in Los Angeles under the direction of Mr. Kane. The same policy of economy and elimination of waste will be the keynote of operations in the Paralta studios.

Several states rights men of prominence who have inquired into the new distribution plan and who have talked with Mr. Brown express satisfaction with its details—especially with the very equitable break it gives the local exchangeman in connection with the parent corporation and the local exhibitor.

In view of the fact that the work of detailing the plan to exhibitors will be largely educational at first, the company is having prepared several pamphlets and other communications treating of the new system and other features of interest in the moving picture production and exhibition industry.

PATRIOTIC BLUEBIRD'S CENTERING ATTENTION.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., have frequently evidenced marked timeliness in their releases, and now that war has come the attention of exhibitors is being directed to several subjects, of past release, that might have been made with the situation in mind that now confronts the nation. There is a call to loyalty and love of country in "Treason," to be released May 14, and three attractions, distributed last fall, are as useful now as though they were newly produced for the occasion.

"The Eagle's Wings" is an especially important screen structure just now, for the reason that "industrial preparedness" is its keynote, and because, in the progress of its plot, there are shown pictures of actual operations in munition factories, scenes in government arsenals, forts and military reservations that could not be photographed now for love nor money. Industrial preparedness is the backbone of the present crisis in national affairs, and the general public is eager to know all the details. "The Eagle's Wings" supplies this educational demand in authentic details.

"Treason," the Bluebird programed for May 14, was directed by Allen Holubar last December, and is issued at a time when its lessons of loyalty will stir the enthusiasm of the multitudes. Mr. Holubar and Joseph Girard are the featured players, with Lois Wilson the leading woman. "The Bugler of Algiers," featuring Rupert Julian, Ella Hall and Kingsley Benedict, and "Behind the Lines," with Harry Carey and Edith Johnson featured, are Bluebirds of last November and December, but they are even more timely now than they were when first released. The battle scenes and military character of these attractions will serve as inspirations to patriotic enthusiasm in these days when the government so gravely needs the support of every interest that may serve to inspire love of country and loyalty to the cause our nation has elected to uphold.

BOOKINGS ON "THE BARRIER" BREAK RECORDS.

One of the heaviest bookings ever placed at one time has just been completed by the General Film Company's New York Exchange for "The Barrier," the first feature of the Rex Beach Pictures Company, which achieved such sensational success when it was shown at the Broadway theater. This booking includes the entire Loew Circuit of twenty-five houses, the Keith and Proctor Circuit of fourteen theaters, twelve Fox theaters and the Poli chain of nine theaters.

Seldom before has one feature been booked at one time in this great group of sixty theaters, comprising every big picture house in the East. The booking covers 205 days and breaks another record on the Poli Circuit, where it is the first picture to ever be booked over the entire chain of houses for a week's showing in each theater.

"The Barrier" is now being shown in all of the principal Coast cities, including Los Angeles and San Francisco, and is still running as a dollar production in Detroit and Pittsburgh. The tremendous demand for this picture is all the more remarkable when the fact is brought out that "The Barrier" is the first big feature ever produced without a well-known star. When the picture opened at the Broadway theater in New York there was not a single name in the cast that had ever been played up in a leader.

INCE PRODUCTIONS GETTING BUSY.

Ince Productions, Inc., the new organization headed by Ralph and John Ince, has begun active executive work in temporary offices at 1600 Broadway, where they will remain until their newly equipped headquarters in the Fulton theater is ready for occupancy. A meeting of general interest to states rights and independent exchangemen will be held at the Broadway offices next Wednesday, at which time Ralph Ince, who is to preside, will outline the policy of the organization, render full details as to the productions which will characterize their early efforts and the general plan of the company and what is to be expected of its distributing affiliations.

The meeting will not be in the nature of a selling propaganda. This, according to Ralph Ince, is unnecessary. Already a sufficient number of highly important buyers have signified their willingness to enter into the Ince project, to assure at least a 75 per cent representation throughout the country, and the territories unsolicited for by buyers can easily be arranged for.

At the gathering all details essential to the knowledge of buyers and turn exhibitors will be divulged by Mr. Ince and his brother and plans laid for the immediate exploitation over the country of their forthcoming twelve special productions.

"REEL LIFE" IMPORTANT GAUMONT RELEASE WEEK OF MAY 6.

Among the important releases of single-reel pictures from the Gaumont studio the week of May 6, issued through Mutual, none is more entertaining than "Reel Life No. 54." This reaches the screen May 10 with five entertaining sections. The editors of "Reel Life" have recognized the interest the public has been aroused to take in a city's dependents, and have secured pictures of the manner in which New York cares for feeble minded children.

A second section of the reel shows how a powerful steel crane which is used to lift 100-ton locomotives is manipulated with the utmost ease. The military part of this issue of "Reel Life" shows a new sleeping bag which has just been adopted by the army. There will be millions of people curious to know how it is used, and many a young man will get upon the screen the first sight of the covering to which he is so soon to become accustomed.

Pictures of how oil is pumped from the bed of the ocean takes spectators to a point off the coast of California. Here the navy secures some of the fuel with which our battleships are supplied. Another section of the reel shows how grape juice is made.

TRADE SHOWING OF "BAR SINISTER" APRIL 18.

Edgar Lewis' new production, "The Bar Sinister," will be given a special trade showing at the Broadway theater, Forty-first street and Broadway, New York, on Wednesday, April 18, at 10 a. m.

The story of "The Bar Sinister" was written by Anthony P. Kelly and is a powerful heart interest drama laid in the South. Mr. Lewis cast his picture in New York, selecting many of the artists who worked under him in "The Barrier." Mitchell Lewis, Hedda Nova, Victor Sutherland, Jules Cowles, W. A. Williams, W. I. Gross and Florence St. Leonard have prominent parts. He took his complete company South and used the turpentine stills of Thomasville, Ga., as the background for many of his most important scenes. Every part in "The Bar Sinister" is a distinct character, giving both the director and his actors splendid opportunities for clever character drawings, while the intensely dramatic nature of the subject treated gives them unusual chances for tense scenes and thrilling climaxes.

PATHE TO ISSUE "OUR FIGHTING FORCES."

Pathe will issue on April 29 a timely and patriotic two-reel picture called "Our Fighting Forces."

This picture shows every side of Uncle Sam's army and navy, the regular infantry, cavalry, artillery, signal corps, ambulance corps, transportation service and commissariat, the same branches in the National Guard, and also shows the Marine Corps, the navy, both ships and men; the Annapolis "middies" and the West Point cadets. The training of the recruit is illustrated from the time he enlists until he is a seasoned fighter for Uncle Sam. In view of the national interest in recruiting both army and navy up to the necessary size, it is felt that the picture will be of great aid to the government, showing, as it does, the value to the individual of the course of training pursued.

ZACK HARRIS BUYS UNDERSEA PICTURE.

Zack Harris, a film man of the middle west, has just purchased from the Universal Film Manufacturing Company the rights for the state of Iowa for the Universal feature, "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea." The price paid for this exclusive territory is said to exceed $30,000. Mr. Harris' plans opening offices for the exploitation of the picture next week at 918 Locust St., Des Moines. He is completing arrangements for a tremendous advertising and publicity campaign in connection with the showing of the picture throughout Iowa.

COHEN TO COAST TO ESTABLISH SELZNICK EXCHANGES.

In line with Lewis J. Selznick's avowal that "Selznick pictures will no longer be sold by exchanges which handle cheaper goods," Ben S. Cohen, who has organized many of the Selznick branches, has left for the Pacific Coast. He will establish headquarters in San Francisco, opening exchanges in that city and Los Angeles and Seattle for carrying out the Selznick "quality" idea. Another point where this plan will be carried out is Boston.

"This simply means tightening my lines," says Mr. Selznick. "I have employed the principle of controlling the pictures in most of the branch exchanges I have established in twenty-two cities. I am now going to make it an absolute, fixed rule. This does not mean that my branches will handle nothing but Selznick pictures. It does mean that they will be permitted to handle nothing that does not come up to my standard of quality."

CHANGES IN JOHNS-MANVILLE PERSONNEL.

J. D. Vail, former manager of the Salt Lake City office of the H. W. Johns-Manville Company, has been appointed manager of the building materials department of that company's branch at Chicago. In the future the Salt Lake City office will be under the management of C. F. Cate. The Great Falls, Mont., office will be managed independently of Salt Lake City by J. H. Roe.

GEORGE OVEY HIMSELF.

George Ovey in "Somewhere in the Mountains" appears on the screen as George Ovey minus all character make-up for the first time since his association with the Cub comedy.

Scene from "Somewhere in the Mountains" (Cub).

In this picture, which was released through Mutual on April 19, Ovey enters a picture show and on the screen sees himself playing his character of Jerry in a story which takes him into the moonshine country, where he has a series of thrilling adventures. In support of George Ovey appear George George, E. A. Browne and Claire Alexander.

STATE RIGHTS MARKET STRONG.

That the state rights market was never in a better condition and was never so eager to absorb a novel offering is proved by the quick and enthusiastic response made to the Cinema War News Syndicate's advertisement in this paper last week. Mail and wire inquiries for territory have flooded their offices since the early part of last week, and they have already closed several of their territories, although the greater part of the country is yet to be sold.

Judging from the demand for this news service, which is being marketed on a basis of high quality and not of low price, there can be no doubt that "Womanhood," "How America Prepares" and other war features are also going very strong.

All of this bears out the assertion, heard on all sides recently, that the state right market was never in a healthier condition.

"SUNSHINE AND GOLD" NEXT BABY OSBORNE PICTURE.

Admirers of Baby Marie Osborne—and they are legion—will be interested to know that Pathe announces "Sunshine and Gold," the latest picture in which she stars, for release on April 29. "Sunshine and Gold" is described as a typical "Little Mary Sunshine" picture, full of the child's inimitable pranks and remarkable charm. It was produced by Balboa.

Fredericton, N. B., May Add to Theater Tax

City Council Favors Increasing Tax on Theater Seats from Two and a Half Cents to Ten Cents—What some Other Cities Are Asking.

By F. F. Sully, the La Tour, St. John, N. B.

FREDERICTON, N. B.—The Fredericton city council has just passed a resolution, by a six to three majority, favoring the increase of yearly taxation on motion picture houses from 2½ cents a seat to 10 cents. The movement has met with considerable opposition from the motion picture exhibitors operating in the capital city of New Brunswick, and strong protests have been voiced by Dave Richardson, of the Gem, and G. W. W. Fennety, of the Gayety. Compared with the taxation of some of the other cities in the provinces, the tax is a very reasonable one. In St. John all theaters pay an annual tax of 30 cents a seat for the first 1,000 chairs, and 15 cents for each additional seat.

In introducing the motion Alderman Lemont said it was nonsense for the exhibitors to say they could not afford any increase in the tax unless they increased the price of admission. There seemed to be an impression that the 10-cent admission was a sacred thing which could not be interfered with, but people who wanted to attend the picture shows would willingly pay more, if asked. He moved that the tax become effective May 1. The motion was seconded by Alderman Baxter. The mayor expressed the opinion that the moving picture people should be given opportunity to be heard before the motion was put. The mover of the motion did not think that this was necessary, as the matter had been well thought up already. Alderman Burnett favored an increase in the rate of tax, as he thought the moving picture men showed evidence of considerable prosperity, and could well afford to pay the increase. The motion was carried, on being put, by a six to three majority.

Both Mr. Richardson and Mr. Fennety feel that the new tax, which is to become effective May 1, is unjust and unfair, and are afraid it may necessitate their withdrawal from business. The matter has been laid before the officials of the Maritime Province Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, but the league is powerless to act.

George F. Perkins Opens St. John Office.

St. John, N. B.—George F. Perkins, president and owner of the Perkins Electric Company, and recent purchaser of the Standard Film service, was in the city to open his new branch office, which is to continue business, as formerly, under the name of the Independent Film and Theater Supply Company. Offices of the company are now located in Toronto, Winnipeg, Montreal and St. John.

Mr. Perkins has bought the Canadian rights for the Art Dramas. While in the city he gave complimentary screenings to members of the trade and their friends of "Rosie O'Gradie," "Pride and the Devil" and "The Adventurer."

Cailie Warfield Raises Prices.

Bridgewater, N. S.—Cailie Warfield, one of the oldest exhibitors in this section of the Dominion and owner of the Orpheum theater here, has changed his scale of prices from 5, 10 and 15 to 10, 15 and 20 cents. This is to become effective with the introduction of two Famous Players releases a week in the very near future. Mr. Warfield advertises on an elaborate scale, but he also introduces many novel and original ideas into his methods.

New Empress Theater at Amherst.

Amherst, N. S.—Operations have already been started on the erection of a new Empress theater to replace the one destroyed by fire a few weeks ago. John J. V. Moore, proprietor, is erecting a new house that is to represent an investment of about $40,000. It will have a seating capacity of approximately 1,000. Fred G. Spencer will again take it over as soon as it is completed, which probably will be the latter part of July.

Praise for Alice Fairweather's Page.

St. John, N. B.—According to statements of members of the trade, Miss Alice Fairweather, editor of the motion picture page of the St. John Standard, is the only woman editor of such a page on any daily published in Canada. The paper has devoted a large amount of space to the moving picture industry in Canada. Miss Fairweather attends all screenings of pictures in the private projection rooms, and takes considerable pains in her efforts to make the page attractive and educational.

St. John, N. The many admirers of little Mary, who were anxious to see her in one of the new productions, all contributed toward good business at a 25-cent scale of prices.

Bangor Will Have Two New Picture Projects

Spring Will See a New 1,000-Seat House in the Morse Building to Be Made By L. D. Mathis—Old Palace Theater to Reopen.

From John P. Flanagan, 151 Parkview Ave., Bangor, Maine.

BANGOR, ME.—With the coming of spring, two new moving picture projects are reported in Bangor. L. D. Mathis, an amusement man of long experience in making bowling alleys and skating rinks, is transforming his skating rink in the Morse building in Bangor into a moving picture theater. It will seat at least 1,000 people. The hall was built about two years ago, and was then equipped with moving picture booths. As the walls are decorated in fine taste, and as but little remains to be done except to install seats, it will not take very long to arrange the house for moving picture purposes.

The other project reported is the opening of the old Palace theater on Exchange under new management. Full details have not been secured, but it is understood that the new manager is prepared to make a bid for local picture patronage. The Palace, smallest house in town, has been closed for several months. John Goodwin of the Acme Amusement Co. was the last manager.

Quality of Chaplin Comedies in Court.

Portland, Me.—Charlie Chaplin's comedies in which he plays as a fireman and as a floorwalker entered into the testimony of witnesses examined in Portland last week during a hearing in superior court. The Mutual Film Corporation brought suit against Abraham Goodside of Bangor alleging that the defendant had canceled his contract for 12 releases of films known as Charlie Chaplin Specials to be shown on specific days at the Empire theater in Portland without sufficient cause.

The technical point of law was the validity of the contract. Testimony regarding the relative merit of the reels was introduced to show cause or reason of the desire on the part of the defendant to cancel his agreement for the other 10 pictures.

A witness for the defense was Miss Helen Cole, Portland representative of the New York Board of Review, a voluntary organization which aims to assist theatrical men in maintaining a high standard of moving pictures. In her opinion the films in question were not of high standard. She was impressed by only one scene in each reel. The "horse play" as it was termed by one of the attorneys, she said, was wholly a matter of individual taste, and witness said that although Chaplin can be very funny it does not necessarily follow that he appeals to a refined taste.

Another witness, Harvey B. Emerson, attache at the theater, stated that his attention was called to a Chaplin reel by the unfavorable comments by persons in the audience at the time the pictures were shown.

Manager William E. Reeves of the Strand theater, Portland, was disposed to criticise the "humor" and so called properties of the pictures.

Henry Hirsch, representative of the company, testified for his company and told of having made 3,000 contracts with managers for release of these special films.

"Joan" Prices High for Bangor.

Bangor, Me.—With the arrival of spring and the passing of Lent, business is picking up wonderfully in eastern Maine. Exhibitors are commencing to start in showing big feature programs and are prepared to attract the crowds. The war is not expected to affect business to any extent.

"Joan the Woman," at the Bijou theater this week, won the hearts of Bangor people, only a few objecting to the prices at night, 35 to 75 cents. They admitted that it was a great picture, but can't seem to get used to the idea of paying so much for seeing a moving picture. The musical accompaniment was admirable. Geraldine is popular with the people of Bangor anyway, having drawn an audience of 4,000 people here last fall when she appeared in the flesh at the Bangor music festival. There is no disputing the fact that Farrar is a wizard at winning friends.

Promise of a Big Transaction.

Bangor, Me.—From reliable sources comes the report that a big transaction in Bangor moving picture circles will take place within a few days, involving an important change in management. Your correspondent cannot divulge the nature of the transaction as yet, but it is very likely that the story will be out for the next week's issue of the World. It will be the biggest local theatrical deal in years if it is pulled off.

Patriotism of Exhibitors Shown.

Bangor, Me.—East Maine moving picture men are patriotic and anxious to be of assistance even at the expense of their own business. Many of them have been co-operating with the recruiting committees that have been visiting the towns in this vicinity by allowing them the use of their theaters and moving picture machines. The parties have been using the film "Uncle Sam at work" with great success in obtaining recruits for the navy.

Pathe Notes.

Bangor, Me.—Manager Paul P. Peakes, of the Ohio, Milo, was a visitor at the Pathe exchange this week.

The Pathe force wishes to acknowledge through the World the gift of a few fine Havanas from J. A. Adams, the well known Unity exhibitor.

Sales Manager Harry Smith of the General office, in Bangor, was a visitor to Boston this week, in conference with Manager Shirley.

C. R. Osborne, Boston City Salesman, and E. B. Tinker, Maine Representative of General Film.

Baltimore News Letter.

J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Ter., Baltimore, Md.

Value of Screen as Voicing Public Feeling.

BALTIMORE, MD.—That the screen is a great informer and influencer is being proved in these times of great stress and danger and all the film men are using it in the most noble cause that they can—that of stirring the public to patriotism. Manager Depkin is running the official war pictures at the Parkway, Manager DeHoff is running Vitagraph's "Womanhood," Manager Price is running three slides, Washington, Lincoln and Wilson, fading into the starry banner with the big Kimball organ going full blast on the "Star Spangled Banner," and other managers are doing the same kind of work. Besides this the motion picture is being used very extensively at all the mass-meetings for the purpose of gaining recruits, with great effect. It seems that not a speaker arises in any public hall or theater that the motion picture does not back him up with its powerful argument. Uncle Sam has a wonderful colleague in the motion picture.

Patriotic Demonstration at New.

Baltimore, Md.—Manager L. A. DeHoff of the New theater, 210 West Lexington street, was obliged to hang up his S. R. O. sign on Tuesday night, April 10, at 9 p. m., owing to the jammed condition of this house while he was showing "Womanhood, the Glory of a Nation," even though the night prices are 15, 25 and 50 cents. When this theater opened on Monday, April 9, a line of people was waiting which stretched down Lexington street to Park avenue and up Park avenue to Clay street.

The afternoon prices are 10, 15 and 25 cts. On this day Mr. DeHoff had 13 regulars from Fort Howard stationed around in the theater, besides a squad of Boy Scouts. A recruiting station has been located in the foyer of this house. Inspiring speeches are being made after every performance by well known men, such as A. S. Goldsborough, Lieut. Reily, U. S. A., and Dr. Heaps.

Also on Monday, as a special attraction, J. Stuart Blackton made addresses to the audiences after each showing. On this same day the Maryland Guard of the G. A. R. came to the theater and one of their members became so enthused that he rose in his chair and shouted, "We can still make a charge—drat 'em!" It is understood that the activities of Mr. DeHoff in showing this picture at the present time has very materially strengthened the number of recruits in Baltimore. It is a big picture and is being put on in a big way—the usual DeHoff way.

An Airdome at Woodbine.

Woodbine, Md.—S. N. Wolman, who has been managing the Picture Garden theater, 31 West Lexington street, for two months, has resigned, and after enjoying a well-earned rest will resume his film activities at Woodbine, Md., where, during the summers of 1915 and 1916 he conducted an airdome with much success. Mr. Wolman has had varied experience in the managing line and at one time had charge of a house in the Bronx, New York City.

S. N. Wolman.

"My airdome at Woodbine was quite a prosperous venture," stated Mr. Wolman to this writer, " and also a unique one. You see, the town has only a population of 75 people and the seating capacity of my airdome was 300. But by arranging a show very suitable to my patronage, the country people for miles around would drive in to see the show three times a week. My program consisted of five reels and the admission charge was ten cents. My average weekly profit was about $30. I did all the work myself, acting as ticket seller, usher and operator.

W. F. Seymour Visits Baltimore.

Baltimore, Md.—This writer had a very interesting talk with W. F. Seymour, sales manager of the Triangle, on Thursday night, April 5, when he visited this city. It was enjoyed immensely, owing to his courteous and affable manner. Mr. Seymour is now making a tour of the Eastern branch officer of his company. When asked what he thought of conditions generally in Baltimore he stated: "From my observations it seems that there is getting to be a much better understanding between the exhibitors and the exchangemen than there ever has been in the past. The old fashioned idea that used to prevail, in which the exhibiter thought he always had to hammer the producer, is gradually being eliminated. I have had very pleasant interviews with L. A. DeHoff, of the New; G. L. Wonders, of the Wilson; Chas. E. Thropp, of Nixon's Victoria, and B. Depkin, Jr., of the Parkway. Wherever I go the exhibitors who have used the Triangle service speak only in the highest terms of the results gained by using our program. The Moving Picture World is a fine trade paper. I always read it, particularly the Trade News Department, which I think is exceptionally interesting to producers. The little personal touches about the people you have met is very appealing."

"Intolerance" Coming to Fords.

Baltimore, Md.—Charles E. and John T. Ford, proprietors of Ford's opera house, have just closed negotiations for the presentation of D. W. Griffith's "Intolerance," early in the month of May.

W. E. Kestine in Baltimore.

Baltimore, Md.—W. E. Kestine, auditor of the Monmouth Film company, producers of "Jimmie Dale, Alias the Grey Seal," visited Baltimore last week. Mr. Kestine is making a tour of the eastern branches of the company handling this film in order to get first hand information as to how the picture is being received by the exhibitors. This is being done, it is understood, to get suggestions for their future output..

Spends Easter at Atlantic City.

Baltimore, Md.—Manager Frederick C. Schanberger, of the Maryland theater, spent Easter Sunday in the midst of his family at the Hotel Dennis, in Atlantic City. With Mr. and Mrs. Schanberger were their daughter, Dolores, and their two sons, Frederick C. and James Lawrence Schanberger.

Guy L. Wonders Entertains.

Baltimore, Md.—Guy L. Wonders, manager of the Wilson theater, 418 East Baltimore street, had a very great pleasure last week in entertaining George C. Wilson, of Tyrone, Pa., and Joseph W. Hoover, of Philadelphia, president and secretary, respectively, of the Wilson Amusement Company, operating the Wilson theater. On Wednesday night, April 4, Mr. Wonders was installed as exalted ruler of the Baltimore Lodge of Elks, No. —, at their handsome home on West Fayette street.

J. A. Barron at Helm of Strand.

Baltimore, Md.—The Strand theater, 404-6 North Howard street, has again changed its pilot, and J. Arthur Barron is now acting as its house manager. Bernard Depkin, Jr., of the Parkway, with whom Mr. Barron was formerly associated, still books the pictures for this house. The new manager took charge on Monday, April 9.

S. A. Lynch Interests in Maryland.

Baltimore, Md.—On Monday, April 9, application was made to the State Tax Commission of Maryland for a charter for the S. A. Lynch Enterprises. This company will deal in theatrical enterprises and is authorized under its charter to lease and sell theaters, etc. One million dollars is the capital stock, divided into 10,000 shares, the par value of each being $100. The directors of the company are: Stephen A. Lynch, Charles E. Tandy, Fred Kent, R. Walter Lynch, V. Frank Freeman, S. Jones Smith and Horatio W. Turner.

Famous Players Has Worthy Local Offices

Philadelphia Distributors of Paramount Move Into New Exchange That Is Both Elegant and Convenient for Patrons and Employees.

From F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford St., West Philadelphia, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—The Famous Players exchange, distributors of Paramount pictures, has recently removed to new quarters at 1219-21-23 Vine street. William E. Smith, president and general manager, has made good in his plans for extensive improvements for the comfort and convenience of his patrons and employees.

The new building, which is of stone and brick, was built by the Quaker City Cab Co., whose establishment is adjoining. Upon entering the new offices the first impression is that of a large and commodious banking house, so handsome and rich are the appointments. It is necessary to glance at the Paramount emblems on the plate glass doors to realize that a film exchange can be so well housed. The floors are tiled and here again the trademark is in evidence. The offices are inclosed in mahogany partitions with transparent glass windows, the whole done in an effective Colonial design. Suspended from the ceiling, which is twenty feet high and equipped with automatic sprinklers are several artistic drop lights having beaded crystal domes.

There are several handsomely equipped private offices which will be occupied by William E. Smith, O. F. Bower, the manager; Oscar Morgan, publicity manager; Arthur Van Dyke, booker, and another general office for Donald Allen, the salesman, who will share it with the new member of the staff, J. Russell Rock.

Incoming films will be received through a rear entrance and a special passageway has been provided for operators, who will find it unnecessary to walk through the general reception room or the private offices to secure their shows. There are four fireproof vaults and a balcony in the rear for posters and special advertising. The whole exchange is located on one floor, covering 14,000 square feet of floor space.

In point of efficiency the Philadelphia exchange recently outdistanced those of other cities in the Paramount efficiency contest, and one of the proudest ornaments of the new quarters is a solid silver challenge cup some four feet high and said to be valued at $1,000, which will remain for a year in their possession, and will be on view in the reception room.

The accompanying photograph shows the entire staff, who have promised their best services to William E. Smith, and each of whom means to do his or her share to keep the trophy cup in Philadelphia.

Want a New $5,000 Commissioner.

Philadelphia, Pa.—A move against the State Board of Censors was made at Harrisburg last week when Senator Snyder of Schuylkill County introduced a bill to the senate to repeal the moving picture censor acts and to create in the Auditor General's department a bureau of amusements under the supervision of a commissioner of amusements with power to censor moving pictures. The commissioner is to receive a salary of $5,000. The bill provides for a deputy commissioner at $3,000, one chief clerk at $2,000, five stenographers, seven inspectors, four operators and several minor employes.

Way of a Hustler With a Theater.

Philadelphia, Pa.—H. H. Hustler, formerly manager for Mr. and Mrs. J. F. McMahan, pioneer exhibitors of Philadelphia, is a hustler, indeed. His enterprise recently was responsible for a large assemblage of happy youngsters in his theater. The "stunt" that is directly responsible for the gathering was a special offer made during the showing of two serials, "Pearl of the Army" and "The Lass of the Lumberlands." By visiting neighborhood schools Mr. Hustler obtained pictures of numbers of children, which were afterward shown on the screen of his theater.

By other devices as ingenious Mr. Hustler has restored to favor and popularity a little theater that was once known popularly as "The Dump." This he has renamed the Liberty. Notwithstanding the fact that it seats only 250, has but one machine and antique furnishings, he has made considerable progress, even to the having one ten-cent night a week.

Back row: Ulrick Smith (chemist), Irine Buckley (inspector), John Glen (advertising), Ferd. Fortunate (shipper), Martha Pollok (accountant), Frank Schofield (messenger), Donald E. Allen (salesman), Anna Melen (office), E. McManus (operator).

Washington Pathe in Convenient Quarters

Manager D. F. Donnell's New Exchange Has Many Interesting Things—Fireproof Vault Able to Hold Over 2,500 Reels of Film—Personal Mention.

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Pathe, Inc., is now located in its new quarters in the film building at Sixth and F streets, northwest, and Manager D. F. O'Donnell is wearing a smile that cannot be erased. In fact the entire office force, which has been largely increased during the past few months, due to the rapid jumps in the Pathe business in this territory, is also better satisfied at being in more congenial surroundings.

The front of the exchange is shut off by a wooden partition from the rest of the long room. At the left is the cashier's and bookkeeper's office, with Mrs. Lyle, branch cashier, in charge, assisted by Miss Putnam. This section is equipped with all sorts of modern office devices for handling accounts. The other small office, carpeted and attractively furnished, is occupied by Manager O'Donnell.

The right side of the room, occupying about one-half of the entire floor space, is set off by a low fencing and subdivided to make suitable spaces for other employees. The first of these is occupied by Miss Hazen N. Putnam, who looks after the correspondence of the office, and the next and larger space is occupied by Sam Flax and his assistant.

The story of the new establishment would hardly be complete without a word about Sam Flax. Mr. Flax has a reputation of being one of the best bookers and office assistants in the Washington territory. But the main point of this paragraph is the announcement that Sam will foreswear his independence some few days before the Fourth of July, when he hopes to lead a certain Washington young lady to the altar and thereafter to discard his bachelor habits and become a sedate benedict.

The offices of the exchange are at the right of the stairway, for the exchange is on the second floor of the building. On the left are the workrooms. First is a room with seven large racks capable of caring for an enormous quantity of paper. In addition there is a large rack for heralds and slides. Back of the door is a large counter over which deliveries of films and paper are made and incoming express shipments are received. Beyond is the inspection department, wherein six employees are engaged in inspecting and repairing films. This room is set off from the poster room by steel covered walls.

At the extreme rear of the building is the film vault of steel, concrete and brick, with walls sixteen inches thick. The vault is equipped with a door similar to that on ordinary vault safes. Inside are steel racks capable of accommodating 2,500 reels at the one time. In addition there is plenty of room for a rack in the center which could be made a size capable of accommodating 1,000 more reels should there be need for the extra storage space.

The outside business is being handled by C. O. Moss, a very popular traveling salesman who has covered Virginia and North Carolina for the Pathe almost since its start in Washington. He now devotes his time to the Virginia territory alone, although once in a while he pays a friendly visit to his old stamping ground in and around Charlotte. The Baltimore office is in charge of Frank B. Spurrier, very well known by reason of his long connection with the office in Washington. The third member of the sales force is J. I. Buck.

Excited Minds Are Accusing Picture Shows

It Is Being Already Claimed That Men Who Ought to Be Drilling Are Seen at Picture Shows—Children Patrons During School Hours Complained of.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Motion pictures in the District of Columbia are getting bumped pretty hard just at present and considerable adverse newspaper publicity is resulting. First off the impending war with Germany has attracted the attention of census-chasers to the number of men to be found dallying around picture shows in the afternoon. One article contained the following little bit of news: "In a case where men are need for the defense of the country it can be taken almost as an axiom that an able-bodied young man who is not a producer should be taken into the army or navy before the man whose work is of potential value in the community.

"A survey of local picture theaters during working hours, however, has demonstrated that idle or partially idle men are holding off and leaving the business of enlisting to the busy man, who, naturally, has a more serious train of thought than the so-called 'slacker.'

"If a recruiting officer had visited one of the downtown theaters which has a capacity of 275 he would have been able, if he were empowered to employ force, to raise a respectable unit of about 200 men. There were only 15 women in the theater and about the same number of elderly men. A smaller show place on the same street contained an audience of 50, and 35 of them were of an eligible age for military service. Another had no women, 5 men over 30 years of age, 3 soldiers and 27 eligibles.

"These afternoon audiences are, at an estimate, composed of nearly 70 per cent. of men, mostly of military age. The evening audiences are productive of equally illuminating figures as to where the eligibles are to be found. A canvass of five Ninth street theaters showed that out of a total attendance of 9,500 the sexes were about evenly divided, and of the men 1,450 could be placed in the 'slacker' class. A surprising number of these young men are habitues of these places."

The question arises as to whether or not such stories as these, when there is no need for such outbursts, is not detrimental to an established business and likely to cause a material falling off in receipts.

Another matter in which the theater men are interested is the resolution adopted by the committee on schools of the Washington Board of Trade wherein was an expression of disapproval of attendance during school hours of children at motion picture theaters for the purpose of raising funds for playgrounds and for other purposes.

He is rated as a good business man, a man of pleasing personality and one who will go out of his way to give the other fellow a lift. It has been through the possession of these good qualities that Mr. Lay has been enabled to build up his business to a point where it is now making a profit for him. Exchange Men Discuss New Film Building

Association of Exchange Managers of the Capital City Have as Guest Member of Firm Erecting New Exchange Building—Spurrier Also Present.

WASHINGTON, D. C.——The new motion picture film exchange was the principal subject of discussion at the meeting of the Exchange Managers' Association of Washington. Mr. Costello, a member of the firm of Costello Bros., which is erecting the building, was present to tell the film men of progress. He assured them that the building would afford absolute protection against fire damage and would be one of the most complete and modern structures of its kind in the East. It will be located on the site of the buildings from 608 to 614 Sixth street, northwest.

Of course the building will be specially equipped for the different film exchanges. The first floor will be occupied by a Philadelphia supply house and here also will probably be located an express office and possibly a post office sub-station for the handling of parcel post matter. A lunchroom will take up the balance of the available space. The basement will contain a projection room as well as storage and heating rooms and a large space for the reception of freight adjacent to the freight elevator in the rear.

On the first floor the main corridor will be in the center with an electric passenger elevator and stairway. Either side of the corridor from front to back will be fitted up with fireproof vaults, steel shelving, toilets, etc., and the same will apply to each successive floor constructed specially to accommodate the different exchanges.

The building will be erected from plans and under the supervision of B. Stanley Simmons, architect, and will cost about $125,000. The contract for construction has been awarded to the M. A. Weller Company for completion in August.

Frank B. Spurrier, film representative in Baltimore of the local Pathe exchange, was a guest at this meeting. By a vote of the association all the managers in charge of the Baltimore sub-branches will be invited to attend the next meeting, to be held on April 23.

J. E. King Now Rules the Marcelle.

Hopewell, Va.—S. A. Xippas, who has been manager of the Marcelle theater since its opening here some time ago, has resigned that position and has been succeeded by J. E. King, who has been connected with the theater for some time. The Marcelle is owned by the Tri State Amusement company. It is understood that Mr. Xippas is figuring on entering the amusement business in this city on his own account at an early date.

Petersburg Lyric Show Moves.

Petersburg, Va.—The Lyric theater, upon which W. F. Kroll has held a lease, is being closed down. It is understood that the National Bank of Petersburg, which secured ownership of the property, including the theater, and which is located next door, contemplates dismantling the house and building a modern seven-story building on the site. Mr. Kroll is moving his Lyric show to the Academy of Music, which has been operated by W. H. Rahley. The Academy during the season has been running legitimate attractions.

IN PITTSBURGH.

National Film Features to Be Booked By the District.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—E. J. McGurty, president of the National Film Booking Service, has announced that all the state rights features of the company will be released on a plan that is quite a departure from the usual policy in vogue. Bookings of the features will be by the district for an unlimited time, rather than by the day. Mr. McGurty declares that this arrangement tends to give both the exhibitor and the state rights firm a square deal in every way. He says: "The policy of booking pictures by the day makes it impossible for the exchange to get the money back that is paid for the film and make a profit. Selling a large feature production by the day puts a premium on one or two day runs. This practice keeps the good pictures from the public and makes it possible for very few people to see them." The National claims to be the first concern to adopt this policy in this territory.

Manager E. A. McQuiggan, of the National, states that three prints are being handled on the first feature release, "Her Condoned Sin." Week-run bookings on this subject have been contracted for in Pittsburgh, McKeesport, Oil City, Erie and other cities.

The National has contracted for the Paul Terry animated cartoons and considerable interest is being displayed in them.

New Plaza Theater Pleases

Pittsburgh's Latest Play House is Prettiest of the Rowland and Clark Chain of Eight—Has Seats for 700—Local Board of Trade Sponsors Private Opening on April 6—William Bernardi Is the Manager.

From Pittsburgh News Service, 6016 Jenkins Arcade, Pittsburgh, Pa.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—Still another link has been added to the beautiful chain of Rowland and Clark theaters in Pittsburgh with the opening of the new Plaza theater on Liberty avenue, between Mathilda and Edmund streets, Bloomfield, on Saturday, April 7. The latest Rowland and Clark house ranks favorably with the finest exclusively moving picture theaters in the state. It has a seating capacity of 700, and embodies many of the splendid features that have made the entire chain of houses distinctive.

The Plaza is of fireproof construction, and of handsome architectural design. James B. Clark, managing director of the Rowland and Clark theaters, declares that it is the prettiest of the eight now flying the R. & C. banner. The interior is rich in finish and appointments, while the argument leaves nothing to be desired in the way of comfort and convenience. The auditorium is spacious, having been originally designed for the ample accommodation of an audience exceeding 1,000.

The aisles are wide, the seats roomy and the rows well spaced. The slope of the floor is gradual, with the stage elevation affording a clear and unobstructed view of the screen from all angles. The exits are numerous and the ventilation good. Two large exhaust fans underneath the stage keep the air circulating without creating draught. To insure clear pictures, large converters of the latest type have been installed, the entire equipment being of the very best.

Prior to the public opening, the Plaza was thrown open to inspection under the auspices of the Bloomfield Board of Trade on Friday evening, April 6. The first attraction will be the Paramount production, "His Sweetheart," featuring George Beban. A high standard will be maintained in the film offerings at the Plaza, only the best features obtainable being shown, including Metro, Paramount, Artcraft, Fox and Selznick.

William Bernardi, a veteran manager in local ranks and for several years past manager of the Arsenal, of the Rowland & Clark chain, has been appointed manager of the Plaza. Mr. Bernardi's brilliant success in the past will almost at once insure marked success for the latest R. & C. venture.

It has been announced that A. J. Coyle, now manager of the Oakland, of the Rowland & Clark chain, will take charge of the Arsenal. Mr. Coyle has had wide experience in the business, being formerly manager of the Schenley and other local theaters. Recently he was assistant manager of the Pittsburgh office of the Universal Film, which position he has resigned to take up his new duties.

Elmo Keane, assistant manager of the Regent, of the Rowland and Clark chain, will be placed in charge of the Oakland.

Farrar Expected with "Joan" at the Pitt.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Pitt theater was to open the initial Pittsburgh showing of the notable production "Joan the Woman," featuring Geraldine Farrar, on Tuesday evening, April 10. Arrangements have been made by Managing Director Patch for one of the most elaborate events in the history of the Pitt. The box-office sale opened April 5 and the rush for seats indicates that interest in the picture will pass all previous records. It is expected that Miss Farrar will be present in person, for the first three nights. A symphony orchestra of forty pieces and a grand opera chorus will furnish the musical setting.

The opening performances will be for the benefit of the American-British French-Belgian relief fund for blind soldiers and sailors.

Erie Theaters Unite to Meet Common Problems.

Erie, Pa.—With a view to taking up a number of common grievances and securing united action on high film rentals and other matters pertaining to the business, an organization has been formed comprising the outskirt theaters of Erie, Pa. This get-together movement has been under way for some time past and a majority of the exhibitors of the locality are finally in line. The organization effected is made up of the following:

John Hauer, American theater; B. G. Neyland, Folly; J. E. Longnecker, Hippodrome; H. E. Hammond, Crescent; L. D. Smith, Avenue; M. Slotkin, Plaza; Branfield and Strucker, Isis; F. J. Powell, Wilkay; William Fairgrove, Nixon, Princess and Grand; Joseph G. Seybolt, Gem.

At a meeting held recently the following resolution was adopted: "That on and after April 10 the undersigned exhibitors will refuse to pay return express on any film, paper or supplies furnished by any exchange. We think that express one way is all that is right and just for us to pay."

New Novelty Will Be Fireproof.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Work has been started on the rebuilding of the Novelty theater, 217 Federal street, Northside, Pittsburgh, destroyed by fire several months ago. The house will be fireproof and has been designed along larger and more attractive lines than the old. It will cost $20,000 to rebuild. When completed the Novelty will be a handsome addition to the array of houses in the established moving picture center of the Northside.

Wilkay Theater Changes Hands.

Erie, Pa.—The Wilkay theater, Parade street, Erie, Pa., has been purchased by F. J. Powell from the Wertheimer Amusement Company, of Buffalo, N. Y. Mr. Powell is making changes in policy and is going to operate the Wilkay with large features of a special nature.

The entire Rowland and Clark chain of houses have booked the new "Luke" two-reel comedies at the Pathe exchange.

The Pittsburgh branch of the Famous Players Film Service held an enthusiastic meeting of its executive staff and salesmen on April 1. The gathering was presided over by District Manager Staughton, who delivered an interesting and instructive talk.

A new exchange has been opened in Market street, Wheeling, W. Va., by J. A. Stout, a well-known film man. He will handle Metro productions and the subjects released by the Specialty Film Company, of Pittsburgh, in the West Virginia territory.

Allens Are Building New Toronto Theater

House Being Erected at Richmond and Victoria Streets Will Be Called the Temple —Big Theater Circuit Men Behind It.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard St., East Toronto, Ont.

TORONTO, ONT.—Announcement has been made exclusively to Moving Picture World here that the new $150,000 moving picture theater which is now being erected at Richmond and Victoria streets, Toronto, is the property of Jule and J. J. Allen, owners of a large circuit of moving picture and vaudeville theaters in the Canadian West. The Allens are also in control of the Paramount, the Famous Players and other picture interests in the Dominion. Incidentally, the Allens hold the Canadian rights for Lasky, Mary Pickford, Clara Kimball Young, Pallas and other productions while they have imported many British official war pictures during the past two years.

The head office of the Allen interests were formerly in Calgary but the brothers removed to Toronto about two years ago. Until now they have been without a theater of their own East of Winnipeg. The new house is to be known as the Temple theater and the first run of all their own big film subjects will be seen here of course. A portion of the bill each week will be vaudeville, it is declared.

A large number of workmen are now employed in the construction of the new house and it is hoped to have the theater ready for opening early next season, possibly toward the end of August.

R. S. Marvin Will Run Camp Theater.

Camp Borden, Ont.—R. S. Marvin, proprietor of the Beaver theater, has the Strand theater at Camp Borden. This house has a seating capacity of 2,300—probably sufficient to house all the soldiers in camp at one sitting this year. The Militia Department will probably cooperate with Marvin again, however, to provide entertainment for the training force, whatever size it may be.

George Perkins Extends Supply Business

Toronto, Ont.—George Perkins of the Perkins Electric Company, Toronto, Montreal and Winnipeg, has announced the purchase of the projection machine and stock departments of Charles Potter & Company, Toronto. Mr. Brown of the Potter Company is also going over to the Perkins Company.

This is considered an important transaction as the Perkins Company is now the sole Canadian agent for practically all the better known projection machines and accessories.

The Perkins Company also recently arranged to release Art Drama pictures in Canada, Arthur Sawyer, formerly manager of the Standard Film Service, Ltd., having opened an office in Montreal to arrange bookings in behalf of Mr. Perkins.

Regal Film Gets "Masque of Life."

Toronto, Ont.—Announcement has been made that Regal Films, Limited, have secured the Canadian rights for the seven-reel production, the "Masque of Life." This exchange service, which handles World-Brady-Made features throughout the Dominion, has contracted for three single reels each week, including the Educational subjects, Victor Moore Comedies and Mutt and Jeff cartoons. The Regal Company is also arranging for one feature each week in addition to the World releases.

Toronto, Ont.—F. Mooney, special representative of William Fox, has been making the rounds in Eastern Canada for the past few weeks to supervise the release of the new Fox comedies and special Fox attractions.

Local Exchange Buys Two New State Right Features.

Toronto, Ont.—Super-Features, Limited, 59 Victoria street, Toronto's latest exchange, has contracted for two years more special subjects, "Boots and Saddles" and the "Power of Evil," in addition to "The Whip," which will be booked as a special attraction at large theaters in Canada. The first run of "Boots and Saddles" was presented at the Toronto Strand for three days, April 5, 6 and 7. Charlie Stevens is the manager of the new exchange.

Notify Exhibitors They Must Pay Expressage.

Toronto, Ont.—Exhibitors of Ontario were recently notified by all Toronto exchanges that, on and after May 1, all return express charges on film shipments must be paid by the exhibitor and not the exchange. The exchange managers put forth the argument that the return charges form a small matter when considered from the viewpoint of the exhibitor but that the total charges have been running into the hundreds of dollars each week for the exchanges.

The Moving Picture Protective Association of Ontario has not yet taken action in the matter. Recently, however, the association notified several of the local exchanges that they had decided to oppose the system of advance deposits for film rentals.

More Freedom in Collecting Ticket Tax

Ontario Legislature Gives Provincial Treasurer Power to Abolish Use of Tax Tickets in Preferred Theaters—Redeeming Unused Tickets.

TORONTO, ONT.—In the closing hours of the recent session of the Ontario Legislature, an amendment to the Theaters Act was passed which gives the provincial treasurer the power to abolish the use of amusement tax tickets in specied theaters if desired. Hon. Mr. McGarry, the provincial treasurer, is empowered to determine which theaters may handle the cash in place of the tickets. This means that preferred theaters will be able to avoid the inconvenience of selling, taking and chopping the tax tickets.

The Provincial authorities were also empowered to redeem any quantities of unused war tax tickets when desired.

These are practically the only new changes in the regulations affecting the theaters of the Province.

Chief Inspector R. C. Newman recently cleared up a disputed question when he made the ruling that the Provincial regulations permit that a city architect, chief of a fire department or an inspector appointed for the purpose by the Province may examine the premises of any theater in the jurisdiction of an official. The impression had gathered that Inspector Newman himself alone had the authority to inspect any and all theaters in Ontario. Mr. Newman declared that an exhibitor must open his house to a fire chief or other official who holds the right to make an inspection of the premises.

Changes Among Cleveland Theater Managers

Many Local Photoplay Houses Are in Charge of New Men—Six Theaters Have Recently Changed Hands—Spring Improvements to the Fore.

From M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbia Build- ing, Cleveland.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—Spring has brought a number of changes in the management of Cleveland photoplay theaters.

B. C. Steele, formerly of the Mall theater, Cleveland, and the Symphony, Los Angeles, has bought the Lucier theater in Lakewood. The house seats 700. It is now undergoing many improvements, including redecorating and carpeting.

Another theater in Lakewood to change hands is the U-No, which is situated at Ridgewood and Madison streets. Stanley Havelec sold it to W. W. Lucas and J. B. Wolcott.

Two Superior avenue theaters have new managements. F. P. Woda, formerly manager of the Orpheum, East Ninth street, has taken over the Strand theater at East Eighty-seventh street and Superior avenue, while the Colonial Garden theater at 5707 Superior avenue was sold by W. W. Lucas to Everest & Walker, of Tiffin.

The Ball Park theater was sold by C. F. Lockman and associates to Howard Baird, of Elyria. Mr. Baird expects to increase the seating capacity from 500 to 900 seats.

W. G. Montgomery has taken possession of the Camera theater, East Thirty-eighth street and Payne avenue.

Unruly Protests by Negroes When "Nation" Opens.

Cleveland, O.—"The Birth of a Nation" opened in Cleveland, Monday night, April 9, accompanied by a couple of injunction suits and a demonstration by several thousand colored people in front of the Opera House. At this writing it is still being shown, despite the threats of Mayor Davis to stop it.

Last week, after the mayor's stand was taken, the Opera House management and the Epoch Producing Company filed a suit for injunction against the city officials in federal court. The judge dismissed the suit, claiming it was not the proper court to bring up the case. Then a suit was filed in common pleas court, the judge reserving his decision.

Although colored ministers exhorted their flocks not to make any protest but to ignore the production, the politicians stirred them up and they marched to the theater, where police reserves prevented anything more serious than speech-making and singing national airs. But on the way home, the crowd got unruly and a fight started, which was followed by the stoning of a street car.

Maude Miller Wanted to Be Military Censor.

Columbus, O.—Maude Murray Miller, member of the Ohio Board of Censors, has received a reply from Secretary of War Baker, to whom she offered her services as a military censor, stating that her offer was acknowledged but that the government not having a division of censorship at that time, could do nothing.

Put the "Old Man's" Picture in Paper.

Columbus, O.—The handsome little monthly magazine which the Majestic theater is getting out, will be discontinued for the summer. Manager Maddox makes this announcement in the April issue, and also takes opoprtunity to get even with the editor of the magazine, who printed a picture of Mr. Maddox in the March edition, thus putting one over, in a friendly way, on the manager. Mr. Maddox, not being able to get a photograph of the editor, had a drawing made, and also revealed things that happened at a dinner given to the editor by Mr. and

Mrs. Maddox. The joke on Mr. Maddox was the talk of the exhibitors during March but now it looks as though they will have some fun at the expense of the magazine editor.

Film Men Endorse President Wilson.

Cleveland, O.—Both the Exhibitors' League and the Cleveland Screen have passed resolutions endorsing the President in the war, copies of which were sent to him.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 152 N. Elmwood St., Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—The Buffalo F-I-L-M Club is pushing forward its successes in true military fashion. The organization has taught lessons of efficiency and promptness to exhibitors who have been dilatory in returning their shows or slow in making their payments. All this has been accomplished in a spirit of cooperation for the benefit of both the theaters and the exchanges. The activity of the club has extended as far east as Syracuse, having among its membership the Vitagraph, V-L-S-E exchange of that city. The organization meets this week to appoint a delegate to the annual convention of the F-I-L-M Clubs of America in Chicago in May. The Buffalo club will attend a get-together meeting of the screen men of Syracuse at an early date.

"The purpose of this session is to show to the people of Syracuse that the film industry is on the map," was the official announcement of the club.

Local Selznick Pictures to Move.

Buffalo, N. Y.—A. I. Shapiro, manager of Selznick Pictures, Inc., of Buffalo, announces that about May 1 he will open larger quarters at 84 Exchange street, over the Triangle offices. He is now located at 15 West Swan street. Mr. Shapiro has just completed a trip through New York State. "At the present time," said Mr. Shapiro, "all the cities of over 5,000 population throughout the state are under contract for our Clara Kimball Young, Norma Talmadge and Robert Warwick productions, and all of the principal theaters throughout the state have closed contract for '20,000 Leagues Under the Sea' which we are handling."

W. A. V. Mack to Steer Local Mutual.

Buffalo, N. Y.—W. A. V. Mack has been appointed Buffalo manager for the Mutual Film. Hunter Benentt, exchange superintendent of the Mutual, who made the appointment, also named Charles Johnston of Buffalo and L. C. Thompson of Cleveland as Mutual road representatives in this territory. Mr. Mack was formerly manager of the General Film, Buffalo, for the past year and a half. He is an active member of the Buffalo Screen Club and the Buffalo F-I-L-M Club of this city and has a wide acquaintanceship among the exhibitors throughout the state. E. J. Hayes has succeeded Mr. Mack as manager of the General office. Mr. Hayes was Mr. Mack's assistant and has been with the General five years.

Business Jottings in Buffalo.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Happy Hour theater, Buffalo, was closed for a few days on account of a fire in the building. Slight damage was done to the house. A blaze which started in a lodge room near the theater caused the trouble.

C. J. Fitch, New York State representative of the Arbuckle pictures, and George J. Hallet, representative in this territory, were visitors at the Buffalo exchange of the William L. Sherry Features. They report a heavy demand for these films.

Charles A. Taylor, Buffalo manager of the New York Metro, will campaign vigorously in this territory on the film, "Beware of Strangers." The Metro has the state rights on this picture.

"This production has to do with the kidnapping business and has a great educational value," said Mr. Taylor.

The Orpheum theater, Utica, was recently gutted by fire. "Hell's Hinges," playing at the Orpheum, was therefore booked at the Hippodrome, that city. Manager Linton of the Hippodrome is using three acts of vaudeville and a feature picture twice a week. He formerly played only pictures.

Harry Marsey, general manager of the Family theater, Buffalo, set a lively pace in advertising "Enlighten Thy Daughter," booked at that house. His newspaper advertising space for a few days equaled that of some of the local department stores. Packed houses were the reward for his enterprise.

Picture Shows Leading Cause of Temperance

Great Temperance Movement Made Possible by the Local Moving Picture Theaters —Provide Amusement, Company and Cheery Lights.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

MOLINE, ILL.—Moving pictures are the greatest cause of the great temperance wave which is sweeping the United States, according to A. E. Victor, of the Victor Animatograph Company of Davenport, before the Moline University Club.

"Men require some luster to their lives. They cannot live and be contented sitting in a lonely room, or sitting at home night after night with the family. The monotony palls. It brings domestic unhappiness.

"So the workman went to the saloon. There was light there and warmth and plenty of people about. But now, instead of going to the saloon, the workman must go to the moving picture shows. He finds warmth and light and amusement there, and plenty of people about.

"What other place is there where a man of small means and a large family may take his wife and children for amusement?"

Practically the entire session of the club was devoted to the discussion of the moving picture business. William O. Munroe gave a history of the moving picture and John F. Reno spoke of its influence in educational work, while A. H. Beitel treated the subject of film production. The talks were supplemented by a reel showing how films were manufactured, "From Studio to Screen."

Holland, Mich.—Children were barred from local motion picture shows because of an epidemic of measles.

Memphis Managers Form Asso'n

New Film Organization Will Hold Weekly Meetings—Arthur Lane Is Chosen as President; C. A. McIlvary, Vice-President; M. J. Vosse, Secretary-Treasurer—E. A. Schiller Is Made Chairman of the Board of Directors.

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Bldg., Nash- ville, Tenn.

MEMPHIS, TENN.—The theater managers of this city have perfected an organization among themselves, to be known as the Memphis Theater Managers' Association. Arthur Lane of the Orpheum was elected president; C. A. McElvary, of the Majestic interests, vice president; M. J. Vosee, representing the suburban theater interests, secretary and treasurer; E. A. Schiller, general manager of the Loew enterprises, chairman of the Board of Directors. The board is composed of prominent theater managers, and it is the purpose of the Association to hold weekly meetings and discuss matters pertaining to the welfare of the moving picture interests in Memphis.

Walter Vincent Visits Memphis.

Memphis, Tenn.—Walter Vincent, one of the leading Eastern theatrical magnates, was in Memphis a few days ago, and held a conference with Arthur Lane, manager of the Orpheum, and a leading moving picture and vaudeville man of the city. Mr. Vincent is owner of one of the largest and most important of the popular-priced vaudeville circuits controlling high-class theaters throughout Pennsylvania, as well as a number of Southern cities, including Atlanta, Savannah, Norfolk, Richmond, etc. Mr. Vincent is a close business associate of Martin Beck, managing director of the Orpheum Circuit. Although Mr. Lane is not in position to make a statement at this time, important developments may possibly arise from a conference with the directors of the Orpheum Circuit, which will be held in Memphis shortly.

Sudekum Has Largest Flag.

Nashville, Tenn.—Carrying out the American war spirit in every conceivable manner, Manager Harry Sudekum of the Princess, picture and vaudeville house, has installed a large American flag as a drop curtain for his vaudeville stage. The flag is said to be the largest in the state, measuring forty-eight feet in length. In addition an electric flag adorns the outer corridor over the box office, and the entire house is decorated with national colors and electric-lighted emblems of patriotism.

Big Sunday Picture Fight in Memphis.

Memphis, Tenn.—Following the circulation of a petition by the Protestant Pastors' Association requesting the mayor to close the theaters on Sunday in Memphis, theater men became actively engaged in opposition to the move. The pastors' petition was signed by 700 people, and a rebuttal petition was put into immediate circulation by the theater interests, to which have been attached 10,000 signatures, urging that the theaters be allowed to continue operation on Sundays.

A conference with both sides was held a few days ago by Mayor Ashcroft and city officials. A committee of pastors presented the case of Sunday closing. This committee argued that the Sunday theaters are bad for the morals of the community, because they encourage Sabbath-breaking, and tend to cause people to lose respect for religion. The side of the theater men was championed by Arthur Lane, manager of the Orpheum theater; E. A. Schiller, manager of the Lyric, and C. A. McElravy, manager of the Majestic Amusement Company. These gentlemen assured the city officials that Sunday closing is absurd, that being the only day in the week when thousands of people can attend a show, pointing out the fact that thousands of people go both to church and to moving picture shows on Sunday.

At this writing no action has been taken pending an investigation of the law covering the points at issue.

Billy Arnold With Knickerbocker.

Long Runs of Big Films at High Prices

Two Cincinnati Theaters, Across the Street from Each Other, Enjoy Good Houses, One With "Nation," the Other With "Daughter of Gods."

From Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI, O.—All kinds of records are being made and broken by the big moving picture productions which are now running at Cincinnati's leading theaters. "The Birth of a Nation" entered its fourth week at the Grand on Sunday, April 8, thereby breaking records for the length of a run, regardless of the price of admission charged; and when it is considered that the prices prevailing at the Grand are the highest ever before charged for a moving picture in Cincinnati, the top being $1.50, just as for the best stage attractions, it can be seen that the run has already set a mark for the future to shoot at in the matter of the amount paid by the public. The Grand management states that sales are running steadily two weeks in advance, and that there is every prospect of the run continuing for two or three months.

"A Daughter of the Gods," at the Lyric, is drawing splendidly, and in spite of the high prices charged, $1.00 and down, the opposition of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Grand, just across the street, gives every evidence of continuing to do so. Incidentally, it is worth recalling that it was another Kellermann film, "Neptune's Daughter," which two or three years ago gave Cincinnati its first long run of relatively high-priced pictures, by drawing crowded houses to Keith's theater for several weeks.

Cincinnati May Have Film Club.

Cincinnati, O.—A plan which has been quietly under way for some time, for the collection into a central organization of all persons interested in moving pictures, including exhibitors, exchangemen and members of the general public, is taking form here, under the guidance of the Chamber of Commerce. The Chamber has already brought into effective organization the exhibitors and film men, the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League and the Associated Film Exchanges of Cincinnati being models of their kind; and the broader organization proposed will take in these and other interests calculated to make it a body of large service to the industry.

Christine Mayo Wants to Help Recruit.

Cincinnati, O.—Philip Selznick announces that Christine Mayo, famous as one of the most attractive of screen "vampires," will appear at the Alhambra theater on April 21 and 22, in connection with the exhibition of one of her latest successes. Incidentally, Miss Mayo intends to turn her appearance in the flesh to good account, having made formal application to the government for authority to act as a recruiting officer, and it is her intention, if the authority is given, to visit Fountain Square, the center of the city, and see what she can do toward assisting the Army and Marine Corps recruiting squads there to gather in men for their service.

Star Theater Runs a 15-Cent Show.

Cincinnati, O.—The tendency toward higher prices is steadily becoming more evident among photoplay houses, encouraged decidedly by the appearance at the leading "legitimate" houses of big picture attractions at admission prices similar to those charged for other shows. Recently the Star, which not so long ago was one of the few remaining five-cent houses, and which has been doing remarkably well as a ten-cent feature house, ran a late Theda Bara release, "Her Greatest Love," and announced an increase to 15 cents for the engagement, on account of the nature of the attraction. The raise did not prevent full houses from attending, and the management was more than pleased with the result.

Cartoon Advertising Film Co. Coming.

Cincinnati, O.—Remodeling work on the building at Seventh and Main streets which will house a number of the leading exchanges of Cincinnati, is going along rapidly, and it seems that May 1 will see the work sufficiently well advanced on some of the floors to permit their occupancy. Manager Harris Hurst, of the World Film, states that he has sublet part of his floor to the Federal Development Co., formerly of Alliance, O. The company handles animated cartoon advertising, and W. A. Harris, general manager, states that he intends to acquire a Cincinnati concern in the same line, giving him a ready-made clientele in Cincinnati.

Return of "Civilization" at Majestic.

Dayton, O.—Beginning with an Easter matinee, the Majestic started a week's return engagement of "Civilization," the Ince production which crowded Manager Rayner's house during its long run some time ago. The remarkable success of the initial run convinced Mr. Rayner that the picture would do well on a return engagement, and this proved to be the case. There was no reduction in the scale of prices for the engagement, the range being from $1 to 25 cents for the evening performances and 25 and 50 cents for the matinees.

Trying to Create Sunday Closing Sentiment.

Dayton, O.—A movement to secure Sunday closing of theaters has again been discussed by the Dayton Federation of Churches, and a committee has been appointed to take the matter up with the churches generally, and then with the city administration. There is no public demand for Sunday closing claimed, but the enforcement of blue laws existing on the statute books is insisted upon by the ministers, regardless of the state of public opinion on the subject.

New Dayton Theater to Be a Beauty.

Dayton, O.—Progress is being made in plans for the construction of what promises to be one of Dayton's handsomest moving picture theaters. The Associated Improvements Co. has filed its long-term lease on the site of the theater, at an annual rental of $10,500, with an option to purchase the site at $175,000. The lease contains a provision to the effect that a building to cost not less than $100,000 shall be constructed, which makes it obvious that the theater will be one of an extremely substantial nature.

"Nation" Film at Lima, Ohio.

Lima, O.—Beginning Monday, April 9, the Faurot opera house ran "The Birth of a Nation" for a week, at the highest prices at which any moving picture has ever been seen in Lima. There were two performances a day, with prices ranging from 25 cents to $1.00 for the matinees and from 50 cents to $1.50 for the evening shows. Lima is the smallest city in the state to see the big feature in Ohio this season, the other cities being Cleveland, Cincinnati, Dayton and Columbus.

New Palace Theater Plans Take Shape.

Cincinnati, O.—That the interests behind the big new moving picture theater planned for Sixth street, to be known as the Palace, mean business is indicated by recent developments. Ben Heidingsfeld, who has been active as the legal representative of large moving picture interests on several occasions, has taken care of the incorporation of the Palace Amusement Co., with a capital stock of $350,000, I. Libson, manager of the Walnut, the Strand and the Family, being one of the incorporators, and has announced further details of the house, which is to have a front of 90 feet on Sixth street and a depth of 118 feet. The first property transfer in connection with the new theater also took place recently, a parcel at the corner of Sixth street and Lodge alley being taken over.

Theaters and Exhibitors in Kentucky.

Louisville, Ky.—Contracts have been let for repairs to the Shawnes theater, which was badly damaged by fire in March. It is a one-story brick building and the damage, though considerable, was only superficial. It is estimated that the repairs will cost about $1,500 and the insurance will stand the bill.

Harrodsburg, Ky.—The Harrodsburg Amusement Co. has let a contract for improvement of the Opera House. One of the betterments will include removal of the posts which have supported the balcony and at the same time obstructed the view of those behind. A girder will be extended from side wall to side wall, securely braced, to carry the weight of the balcony.

Middlesboro, Ky. The two new Thompson theaters opened on April 2. The Cumberland avenue house is for white people only; the Nineteenth street house for both white and colored, seated separately.

Two Startling Bills at Frankfort

Kentucky State Legislature Has Two Bills—One Asks for Censorship With a Charge of $5 for Each Reel Viewed—One Would Impose a Tax of $10 for Every Hundred Seats in a Theater—Excited Measures.

Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Building, Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—A staggering answer to the oft-repeated question, "How is the state going to raise the necessary revenue," came in the General Assembly at Frankfort, Ky., on April 9, when R. B. Hutchcraft, of Paris, Ky., introduced a trio of special license bills on the adoption of which the state would obtain $1,000,000 annually. Theaters and moving picture houses would be especially hard hit if the proposed form of taxation was placed in execution. Under the provisions of the proposed law theaters would have to pay an annual tax of $10 for each one hundred seats, and moving picture theaters a like amount. Formerly only the legitimate theaters paid any license tax, and they paid a flat license tax of $40 in first class cities, $20 in second class cities, $15 for third class, and $10 in all other classifications.

The Hutchcraft bills would also place heavy license on all soft drinks, cigars, syrups, patent medicines, oils, garages and many other industries and commodities. A heavy license tax is also proposed for all race tracks, the license here being based on two per cent. of the money handled through the Pari-Mutuel betting machines, and amounting to nearly $300,000.

Censorship at $5 for Each Film.

Although chief interest at the time centered in the license bills, another big surprise was sprung when Representative W. C. G. Hobbs, of Lexington, Ky., introduced a bill providing for the creation of a Board of Censors to approve all moving picture film exhibited in the state.

The Hobbs bill provides for a board of three members, to be appointed by the Governor. One member must be a woman. The censors would receive $1,200 annually and one of the members, who would act as secretary of the board, would get $300 additional. Expenses of the Board would be met by a censorship tax of $5 on each film censored. This bill was referred to the Revenue Committee. (Length of said "film" not stated.)

L. J. Dittmar, president of the Kentucky Branch of the M. P. E. of America, when interviewed on the matters, stated that he was planning to call the members of the League together, a meeting being scheduled for the latter part of this month anyway. At this meeting the tax bills will be discussed, and plans laid for an effort to have them amended so that the theaters will not be hit quite so hard. At present an effort is being made to get printed copies of the bills.

Taxation for censoring films and the seat tax would overburden many of the smaller theaters, which have been finding difficulty in making expenses for some time past. In addition to this proposed taxation, it is thought that it will be only a short time before a heavy war tax will be placed on all amusement enterprises in an effort to raise money needed by the Government to carry out its present war plans. Theaters have been paying out increased sums for film service, and with the exception of a few of the larger ten cent houses most of the theaters are under about all the expense that their patronage will bear.

Again the theaters are facing a period that has never before been faced by the new industry. Since the advent of the moving picture business the United States has not been at war with any country, and the effect of war on the box office receipts is something that can hardly be guessed at this time. A number of the exhibitors are of the opinion that direct hostilities will result in economies on the part of the public to such an extent that box office receipts will suffer. Other exhibitors figure that the price of food, clothing and necessities will increase to a point where unless wages are advanced the average working man will have trouble in feeding and clothing his family. A few of the exhibitors are optimistic, and figure that business will not be interfered with, and in fact improved through the unrest in the country, which will result in people getting out to the theaters oftener.

News Films Will Be in Demand.

In this connection it is a safe bet that news weeklies will be in greater demand than ever before in the history of the country, and that instead of a few hundred feet of film some exhibitors are of the opinion that one if not two reels of current events may be featured. While the newspapers carry the news the films can carry a portrayal of the actual scenes and facts to a greater extent than any other medium. If properly handled such films should result in bringing out strong patriotic attendance at the theaters, and the usual films and features would result in calming the public and drawing them to the theaters. Leading exhibitors feel that by properly handling the situation, and putting an impelling demand in their screenings business can be held and probably increased.

Of course the Federal censorship of Government movements may be so strong that no great amount of interesting film material can be secured. However, enough matter will probably get by the censors to keep the theaters supplied with interesting news dope in film form.

Theaters Good Recruiting Stations.

Louisville, Ky.—The moving picture theater as a recruiting center gives great promise from the returns at the Hippodrome theater one night last week, when Sergt. Glickstein sent Bruce L. Seigler, of the recruiting office, to the theater. Seigler appeared on the stage between acts, and made a strong talk concerning the need of Uncle Sam to fill up the army. Twenty-five men out of the audience came forward at the end of the talk, and gave their names to the officer, and agreed to come around to the recruiting office for physical examination.

New Theaters—Exhibitors Notes in Kentucky.

Newport, Ky.—The Citizens' Mutual Auditorium & Theater Co., has announced that it will erect a theater, store and office building at a cost of approximately $125,000, and to consist of a two-story affair, 87 by 190 feet.

Paducah, Ky.—Local citizens are promoting the Paducah Auditorium Co., which proposes to erect a second story to the proposed Foreman Automobile Company's garage building. It is proposed to seat 2,000 to 3,000 people.

Greensburg Sabbath Exhibitor Not Guilty.

Greensburg, Ind.—James Alcorn, exhibitor, recently indicated under the old blue laws for desecration of the Sabbath in running moving picture shows on Sunday, was arraigned in court last week and found not guilty by a jury composed of twelve leading business men.

Morehead, Ky.—The Cozy theater, which was closed throughout the winter because of lack of patronage, has reopened for business and is taking another whirl.

Good Films, Theaters and Patrons

Indiana Board of Indorsers of Motion Pictures for Juveniles Hears State President Rembusch of the League on Present Conditions in the Film Business—Old, Good Films on the Shelf—Fashions of Last Year—Prices for Film.

By Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—Frank J. Rembusch, of Shelbyville, Ind., president of the Indiana Exhibitors' League, was the principal speaker at the state meeting of the Board of Indorsers of Motion Pictures for Juveniles, at the Claypool hotel in Indianapolis, last week. He explained to the board the many limitations and difficulties under which the motion picture exhibitor is forced to conduct his business, and emphasized the fact that better films can only come by greater co-operation of such organizations with the exhibitors.

Mr. Rembusch said it is unfair to place the responsibility of selecting a particularly wholesome program upon the exhibitor. Many of the exhibitors in the small cities, as well as in some of the larger ones, are unable, he pointed out, to show the best productions because of the high cost of film service. He said the solution of this problem could be met by committees, organizations and individuals interested in the better film movement, co-operating with the exhibitors in gathering sufficiently large audiences to make it possible for the exhibitors to rent the newer and better films.

Excellent Pictures Remain Inactive.

Miss Georgia Alexander, supervisor in the city schools, who spoke on "The Relation of the Child to the Movies," suggested that the public schols be utilized for the purpose of accumulating negatives of standard and classic films which the dealers would have no further use for. She said she believed these could be used just as school libraries are used and would not in any way interfere with the outside trade.

In commenting on her suggestion Mr. Rembusch explained that there are enough negatives of wonderful and beautiful pictures on the shelves of producers and manufacturers sufficient to supply every theater in Indianapolis for several months, but on account of the lack of harmony among distributors there is no way to make the pictures available.

"This tremendous waste in the motion picture industry is very evident because many big productions are only seen by a very small per cent. of the people," said Mr. Rembusch. "I believe pictures like 'Tess of the Storm Country' could be shown every year in every city the same as 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' which played on the legitimate stage for fifty years. However, until the industry is more thoroughly organized and a more flexible method of distribution is brought about, pictures of exceptional value cannot be reissued at a profit. There they will remain on the shelves."

Fashion Changes Make Old Film Useless

Continuing Mr. Rembusch sad: "Another reason why many pictures cannot be reissued is because the motion picture has a fashion and a season. The fashion, style of garment and cosmetical customs prevent the reissue of many modern pictures. The public demands that their pictures shall be up to the minute, the same as the daily newspaper. Recently many attempts were made to reissue pictures made five or six years ago. The stories were fine and the best and greatest stars were in the pictures, but the change in style of dress made the pictures ridiculously impossible. Imagine Miss Pickford or other stars appearing in a story of present day life wearing a garment in the fashion and cosmetical custom of several years ago, her hair all dressed up in curls, rats, and other adornments of the time the picture was taken! Furthermore, what I might call the mute phraseology of the picture changes continually. Our players express much more with less motion, both facial and otherwise, than a few years ago. In fact many gestures of a few years ago would now seem grotesque.

A Broader Appeal in Films.

"There is a general tendency among the producers to make pictures appealing to all classes of people rather than to one particular class. The day of the problem and sex play is over and is doomed. The reform is going about in the Industry of progressing rapidly. Through the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, producers and manufacturers have agreed that, no matter how artistic and aesthetic the picture may be, nudeness must be eliminated. We have had a season of heavy dramas and grewsome pictures; but we found that people go to the picture theaters for amusement and not to weep and the recreative pictures are especially desirable at this time of trouble and war. An increasing number of fine dramatic pictures are being made which are satisfying in every respect for young people's exhibitons, and the gradual trend in motion picture production is toward films that may be shown to all the family.

Co-operation of Patrons for the Best Films.

"Many exhibitors in small cities cannot afford to show the best productions because of the very high cost of film service. This is also true of neighborhood shows in large cities. This situation can only be met by committees, organizations, and individuals co-operating with the exhibitor in gathering sufficiently large audiences to make it possible for the exhibitor to rent the newer and better film. It is unfair to place the responsibility of selecting a particularly wholesome program upon the exhibitor. There has been a tremendous increase in the cost of film service, mainly through the high salaries paid to stars and the increased cost of distribution. A few years ago we could show a big star in an average city for $5 a night. Within the last year pictures with the same stars are asking $100 a night. To overcome this many producers are trying to get the idea into the public and exhibitors' minds that the play is the thing and not the star, but it is very hard drilling.

"Cutthroat" Methods in the Industry.

"Cutthroat competition has caused a very unprofitable condition in the manufacturing and exhibiting of pictures, so much so that it is simply a miracle that the business continues on such a high plane, knowing how desperate many are who are engaged in the business. This condition will not be overcome until the exhibitors become organized more thoroughly and refuse to take pictures that are unreasonable in price, or unless the manufacturers organize a commission to limit the salaries of the stars, the same as the baseball commission did in that industry with their star players a few years ago.

Better Films Movement Spreading.

"Your society is performing a social service for the industry which will inevitably be appreciated both by the theatergoing public and those who exchange and exhibit motion pictures. The better film movement is spreading rapidly. People are beginning to realize that to bring about the showing of the best films they must patronize the best films. Wherever committees, societies, and the public recognize the complexity of this business and the difficulty under which exhibitors are working the better film movement has been a success. Furthermore, exhibitors, exchangemen, and manufacturers are beginning to see that there is a vast clientele of wholesome people who are available, but have been somewhat hesitant as long as a strictly adult picture is shown in the larger theaters."

After reviewing the progress of the work for the year, the board elected the following officers: President, Mrs. David Ross, of Indianapolis; first vice-president, Mrs. J. C. Markle, of Winchester; second vice-president, Mrs. N. A. Binford, of Greenfield; third vice-president, Mrs. L. S. Lickenscher, of South Bend; recording secretary, Mrs. Merle N. A. Walker, of Indianapolis; corresponding secretary, Mrs. James A. Bawden, of Indianapolis; treasurer, Mrs. E. J. Robinson, of Indianapolis.

D. L. Reynolds Buys Star Theater.

Bluffton, Ind.—The Star theater, on West Market street, which has been operated for the last few years by J. O. Haskill, of this city, was sold last week to D. L. Reynolds, of Montpelier. The consideration was not made public, but it is reported that it included Mr. Reynold's residence property in Montpelier.

Mr. Reynolds stated that he would place E. L. Thompson in charge of the theater and that a more expensive line of pictures will be shown at the present price of admission.

LaPorte Theater Gives Benefit for Tornado Victims.

LaPorte, Ind.—In spite of the fact that it rained all day, the performances given at the Princess and Phoenix theaters on April 2 for the benefit of the New Albany tornado sufferers were successful in every way. E. R. Esch, manager of the two houses, turned over the gross receipts for the day—$166.75—to Martin E. Siljestrom, of the First National Bank, who had charge of the fund.

Eagle Theater's Pianist Played Through Smoke.

Gary, Ind.—The quick presence of mind of the pianist at the Eagle theater, 1542 Broadway, Gary, probably prevented a serious panic recently when fire broke out in the operator's booth and filled the theater with smoke. The pianist, after sizing up the situation, played march time and the men, women and children filed out orderly.

Evansville, Ind.—Admission to the Savoy theater, 509 Main street, last Wednesday, was charged at the rate of one potato a person. This novel admission price was introduced for the first time in Evansville by A. C. Hedderich, manager of the theater.

"Nearly any potato these days is almost equivalent to a nickel," said Mr. Hedderich. "Of course we got a few mushy and undersized potatoes in the collection, but most of them were bonafide."

IN DETROIT.

W. R. Kent Is Now With Triangle.

Detroit, Mich.—William R. Kent, formerly salesman for the Tri-State in Michigan, has been appointed road salesman for the Triangle in this state.

The Broadway-Strand theater, Detroit, for the first time in its history has booked a serial. "The Sign of the Double Cross" was selected and each episode will be shown there for an entire week.

C. G. Kingsley, manager of the Fox exchange, is making a strong drive for rebookings on "A Tale of Two Cities." Although this is a Fox super-picture, which means exhibitors show it two days, at least the first time, the number of rebookings made already has proved that the rebooking plan is an excellent one for big box-office attractions.

By the way, Mrs. C. G. Kingsley arrived in Detroit April 10 and the newly-weds are housekeeping at 125 Peterboro street.

Edouard Jose, district manager for Greater Vitagraph, was in Detroit last week and expressed great satisfaction at the business of the Detroit exchange.

E. J. Miller, of Fitzpatrick & McElroy, operating a circuit of theaters in Michigan, is now touring the northern peninsula of Michigan. It is reported that he is looking into this territory with a view of extending his firm's circuit of houses should he find any location with good prospects.

Ed. J. Butler, proprietor of the Butler and Ishpeming theaters in Ishpeming, is planning a vigorous campaign for Sunday amusements in his city. At present no Sunday movies are permitted.

The Bell Film Co., Detroit, has bought out the Grand Film exchange, 100 Griswold street. The headquarters of the Bell will continue in the Peter Smith building. W. R. Sims, manager of the Bell, announces the opening of a branch office at 232 North Ottawa street, Grand Rapids, in charge of Louis Dennis.

J. O. Brooks, manager of the Madison Film Co., and William H. Elliott, are in the upper peninsula of Michigan arranging bookings and playing engagements on their respective big features. Mr. Brooks is playing "The Crisis," while Mr. Elliott is looking after "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea."

Censorship in Michigan Dies

State Legislature Adjourns April 20—Bill Affecting the Motion Picture Business Will Be Left in Committee—There Can Be No State Censorship for Two Years—Exhibitors Have a Chance to Show Why None Is Needed.

By Jacob Smith, 503 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—Censorship in Michigan is dead for at least two years. The state legislature adjourns on April 20 and it is now too late for any bills in the hands of committees to be reported out and voted upon. This is certainly good news to the exhibitors of Michigan, the manufacturers and the local exchanges.

The fact that there will be no state censorship of motion pictures is not justification for exhibitors falling from grace and disregarding all laws as to the class of pictures they can show. If anything exhibitors should "take the bull by the horns" and show the censorship advocates, the clubwomen and the ministers who have been advocating censorship that as exhibitors they themselves do not want to show improper film. Surely there is enough good film on the market—plenty of it—that will attract just as many people to the box office as the unclean or suggestive picture. Let's see the picture business so clean and above reproach that when the legislature meets again in 1919 there won't be a single argument in favor of state censorship.

"Intolerance" Opens Opera House Summer.

Detroit, Mich.—We here in Detroit have been wondering what picture would be the lucky one to go into the Detroit Opera House at the conclusion of its legitimate season. This week someone "let the cat out of the bag" and revealed the information that "Intolerance" would start an indefinite engagement at the Opera House on or about May 9 and that after the run of this picture "Joan the Woman" would start another indefinite engagement. It has not been decided at just what prices these pictures will be shown, although they will be somewhere between one and two dollars for best seats, with two shows daily, one in the afternoon and one at night. There also will be augmented orchestras and special stage effects. "Joan the Woman" is controlled in Michigan by The Barnett Film corporation with offices in the Peter Smith building, Detroit. They also control the Ohio rights.

H. A. Ross Is Getting Contracts.

Detroit, Mich.—Quite a number of important changes have been made in the franchises for Paramount pictures. The Rialto theater, Mt. Elliott and Gratiot avenues; the Forest theater, Woodward near Forest; The Stratford theater, Dix and Ferdinand avenues, and the Drury Lane, Woodward avenue and Grand Circus Park, are the latest to secure exclusive Paramount franchises in their respective localities.

H. A. Ross, the new Paramount manager in Detroit, is certainly showing excellent results for the short time he has been in charge. He is determined to increase the business 100 per cent.

Fulton and Picket Making Improvements.

Ironwood, Mich.—C. H. Fulton and Albert Picket, of the Fulton and Peck Enterprises, Ironwood, Mich., were visitors at the Moving Picture World office in Detroit last week. They spent four days in Detroit arranging bookings, buying new equipment in the way of supplies, etc. They now operate the Rex and Rialto theaters in Ironwood. They are spending in the neighborhood of $10,000 in remodeling the latter house, which they are renaming the Strand and which will reopen shortly. Their plan is to augment their upper peninsula holdings by either buying houses now existing or building new ones.

"Mothers of France" at Broadway Strand.

Detroit, Mich.—The Broadway-Strand, Detroit, deviated from its regular policy the week of April 15 and booked "Mothers of France" from the Detroit-World Film office. Robert Cotton, Detroit-World manager, also booked this feature for a solid week at the Majestic in Grand Rapids the same week.

Harry Brackett Will Handle State Film Features.

Escanaba, Mich.—The State Film Co., of Detroit, controlling five big features, has arranged with Harry Brackett, at Escanaba, to handle all northern peninsula bookings. Mr. Brackett will book "Civilization" at flat rental to exhibitors, which is the policy announced by President Butterfield.

On Monday, April 2, the people of Kalamazoo, Mich., voted to keep the motion picture houses open—a great victory for Kalamazoo exhibitors.

Art Richardson Traveling for Bluebird.

Art Richardson, formerly booking manager for the Metro in Michigan, is traveling the state in the interests of Blue Bird features.

P. A. Powers Stops Over.

Detroit, Mich.—P. A. Powers, treasurer of the Universal Film, was in Detroit, recently. "Nothing special brings me to your city," he said to the World correspondent. "Just dropped off on my way East to confer with Mr. Weeks and see how Michigan is treating us. We are well pleased."

Fitzpatric, McElroy Co. Adds Three Theaters

Takes Over the Bijou, Marinette and Ascher (To Be Called the Strand) Theaters in Marinette, Wis.—E. R. Saether Will Be Manager.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

MARINETTE, WIS.—Ascher Brothers, of Chicago, have sold their three theaters here, the Bijou, Marinette and Ascher, to the Fitzpatrick McElroy Co., of Chicago, who will add these houses to their already large chain in the Middle West. The name of the Ascher theater will be changed to the Strand. The local management will be in the hands of Edward R. Saether, who has been in charge of three houses in Benton Harbor, Mich., for the Fitzpatrick McElroy Co. The policies under the new management will be feature pictures at the Strand, vaudeville at the Bijou theater Saturday and Sunday, and de luxe productions Sunday night, only, at the Marinette theater. Plans also call for the installation of a seven-piece orchestra at the Marinette and physical changes at the Ascher and Bijou theaters. Vaudeville will be booked by the Fitzpatrick McElroy Co. at Chicago.

Many important changes will be made by the new manager. Chief of these is renaming the place the White House theater and decorating the interior and the exterior to conform to the title.

Crystal at Hartford Becomes the White House Theater.

Warnecke, manager of the Lyceum theater, Fourteenth street and North avenue, pleaded not guilty to a similar charge. The case was set for trial.

Hurley, Wis.—The Empress theater has been leased by Fulton & Peck, proprietors of the Rex theater of Ironwood, and have renamed it the Rialto and remodeled it.

Milwaukee, Wis.—The Paradise theater held over "The Girl Who Did Not Care" for a third week.

Kansas State Board Gets Down to Routine

Plans Made to Expedite Passage of Films To and From the Exchanges and the Board's Viewers—Board Accepts Kansas City Quarters.

By Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, KAN.—Samuel Clasen, a member of the lower house of the Kansas legislature, has made arrangements with several of the exchanges of Kansas City to handle their films before the Board of Review. Other exchanges will take care of their own film and have their own men to back them up before the board. The board will get to work in its new quarters in Kansas City, Kan., about April 16, and Mr. Clasen will immediately institute the system of taking care of films offered for inspection.

The plan means considerable economy for the exchanges and a great saving in time. Mr. Clasen will run a truck back and forth between Kansas City, Mo., where the exchanges are located, and the Board of Review on the Kansas side. He will gather up the films to be censored, take them to the board, be present while the board is reviewing them, take the part of the producer in any controversy that may arise, and then return the films on the truck with the certificate of approval of the exchanges. In case the censors turn down a film, or cause a serious cut, requiring a reviewing, Mr. Clasen will represent the exchanges and carry the appeal to the district courts.

While the censorship board had its headquarters in Topeka, Lew Nathanson, a Topeka exhibitor, represented most of the exchanges. It is said that he probably will not move to Kansas City, Kan., and may give up this work.

Mr. Clasen is a resident of Rosedale, Kan., where he was in mercantile business several years. Six years ago he was elected mayor and got considerable fame as being the "Boy Mayor." He was the youngest executive of any Kansas town. For the past two years he has been a city salesman for the Iten Biscuit Company. The system he is planning will mean a large reduction in net cost on each film to the exchanges.

The board has decided to accept the quarters offered by Kansas City, Kan., the city having arranged more elaborate accommodations. The picture booth is being built outside the room for showing, and other conveniences are being established.

Patriotic Films to the Fore.

Kansas City, Mo.—Moving pictures are proving a strong aid in arousing patriotism in Kansas City. One particularly timely picture is "The Fall of a Nation," which is playing at the Twelfth Street theater. Many different agencies are contributing free advertising to this picture, the newspapers urging attendance. The National Security League is working through one of its officers, W. B. Strang. Mr. Strang, who is head of the Overland Film Company, has prepared several thousand feet of patriotic film, some of which the company took in Kansas City, showing the Missouri National Guard, other parts being made from other sources. This picture is being shown on the streets and in vacant rooms downtown to stimulate recruiting. Several halls have been rented where moving pictures are being shown very frequently, free.

President Cropper's Plan for Art Dramas.

Kansas City, Mo.—R. C. Cropper, president of the Standard Film, has inaugurated a sales policy in distributing the Art Dramas features that has met with favor among exhibitors. His company offers new programs in smaller communities at a price within reach. By purchasing a large number of prints on each subject it is possible to serve a theater located in a city of 2,000 with a feature on the same night the feature is being shown at a theater in a city of metropolitan size.

Despite the fact that the company has been in business but a few weeks, over 200 contracts have been secured on the yearly basis. The two new branch offices of the Standard corporation, located at Des Moines and St. Louis, are now taking care of the trade with their own prints. Mr. Cropper has developed, he believes, a plan that will help to make the exhibitor more money.

C. G. Bard Joins Standard Film.

Kansas City, Mo.—C. G. Bard has been made a member of the organization that R. C. Cropper is building up for the Standard Film. Mr. Bard will represent the corporation with Art Dramas, and will assist the exhibitors in making money with the pictures.

New Center Theater Reverts to Owners.

Kansas City, Mo.—F. G. and C. A. Altman, owners of the New Center Building, Fifteenth street and Troost avenue, have taken over the management of the New Center theater. H. A. Altman, brother of the owner, is managing the house and buying the pictures, while James E. Hart, cashier of the Altman people, is assisting in details.

The New Center was opened last fall by Samuel Zucker, who made a ten-year lease on the house. Mr. Zucker ran this spring some big features that had unusual backing of publicity, and spent a great deal of money in newspaper advertising to get patronage for this semi-suburban theater. The location is a mile from the business district. It is in a middle class apartment and boarding house district with a good deal of business property on the two streets. Mr. Zucker had figured he would get a great deal of women's trade and could run a profitable matinee. However, experience indicated that he could not compete with suburban theaters at night and downtown theaters in the afternoons. Mr. Zucker lost several thousand dollars in the venture, it is said. He then secured financial assistance from the owners of the theater to help keep the project going, and on March 29 turned the theater back.

A. A. Chatkin was assisting Mr. Zucker in the management of the house.

A. G. Hamilton Makes Good in Town of Eighty-five.

Kackley, Kan.—A. G. Hamilton is credited by his friends with having the largest theater in the smallest town of Kansas—the town has 85 people, and his house seats 150. He keeps it full, too, at 10 and 15 cents, one show a week, with an occasional extra performance on a special subject. The show is given in a lodge building; he runs the machine himself. He is not afraid to put on a big picture once in awhile—and gets away with it. Mr. Hamilton is a faithful reader of the Moving Picture World—and by keeping up with the times not only makes his small proposition pay, but is laying the groundwork for increasing success as his facilities and community grow.

Exhibitors and Theaters in Missouri.

Bevier, Mo.—Work will begin soon on the remodeling of the Frederick building in order to make it into a modern motion picture show. Frederick Brothers have purchased a full equipment and it is expected that the theater will be opened about April 15. It is 52 by 90 feet and will have a seating capacity of 500.

Neosho, Mo.—Work has begun on the new Dreamland theater building.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Federal Film Exchange recently closed its offices in the Boley Building. Mr. Philip Goldstone, manager, has left Kansas City.

W. B. Emrich Convalescing.

W. B. Emrich, well-known Kansas City film man, is convalescing slowly from a recent operation. He will be moved soon to the mountains, where he will stay five or six months.

Community Theater in Omaha Neighborhood

Dundee Theater at Underwood Avenue and Fifty-first Street Bought by One Hundred and Forty Men—Will Be Conducted by Fifteen Directors.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

OMAHA, NEB.—Decision to have a community moving picture theater resulted in the purchase of the Dundee theater at Fifty-first and Underwood avenue. This house is especially suitable to serve as a community center, being equipped with good projection apparatus, a fine pipe organ, and is well ventilated. It will be financed by the sale of stock at $10 per share. About 140 men of Dundee have taken part in the organization and incorporation of the company. Affairs of the company will be conducted by a board of fifteen directors with W. W. Slabaugh as president.

Stars from Essanay Constellation to Come.

Minneapolis, Minn.—C. E. Van Duzee, treasurer of the Northwest exhibitors' body who returned from Chicago last week, has informed the exhibitors of a promise made by George K. Spoor to have some Essanay star or stars here for the annual convention in May.

There Seems to Be a Good Deal to This.

Duluth, Minn.—When Harry Rathner left here the first half of last week he was $28 richer than when he arrived. Also, Mons. Rathner went away with a contract for future Selznick productions. Mr. Rathner denies this $28 business is part of a serial, but (we can't tell you exactly) Harry knows something besides the film business, and it isn't dice, either.

B. B. Watson to Tend the New Garden.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Billy B. Watson, former manager of the New Lyndale theater here, has succeeded Sprague Green as manager of the New Garden theater on Hennepin avenue.

Please the Censors or Show in St. Paul.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Upon his election Mayor Thomas Van Lear expressed himself as strongly against censorship of any kind, but—— Well, it's the same with all mayors, y'know. Yes—it looks as if another Board of Censors will cast its optics over "supposed bad pictures" before the gentle public can do likewise. The mayor once urged civic bodies to make up an advisory board for him. They did. A recent sub-committee appointed was one on motion pictures, and Minneapolis' future film features will have to have the O. K. of various ministers, teachers and pink tea people, or else play in St. Paul only. M. A. Hoppenrath, representing the motion picture exhibitors, and several exchangemen are said to have fought such a committee, but, then, it must be understood the film men should not know anything about films.

F. I. L. M. Club Will Help.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Members of the F. I. L. M. Club assured a delegation from the Northwest exhibitors' body that we do their utmost to help make the annual convention of picture men here May 1, 2 and 3 a success, at their last meeting, Tuesday evening, April 3.

In Minneapolis, Leading Civic, Medical and Charitable Organizations Appeal to Exhibitors for Help in a Fight Against Summer Diseases—"Baby Week" Set For May 1-6—Slides With Advice Will Be Shown.

By John L. Johnston, 704 Film Exchange Building, Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Minneapolis civic medical and charitable organizations have appealed to the motion picture exhibitors of the Twin Cities and the entire State of Minnesota to assist in fighting the spread of contagious diseases common in the summer months. At a meeting of exhibitors at the West hotel, Minneapolis, Tuesday, April 3, prominent physicians of the city and club officers asked the co-operation of motion picture men in warning people of expected epidemics and to assist by ure of slides or films on their screens by telling people how to guard against infantile paralysis and spinal meningitis. A "Baby Week" will hold the stage in Minneapolis May 1 to 6 and theater owners are urged to make their best display of anti-disease slides and films at that time. Exhibitors were urged to see that their theaters were properly ventilated during the summer.

I. H. Ruben, David G. Rodgers and Joseph Friedman, Minneapolis and St. Paul exhibitors, replied to the remarks of the other speakers at the meeting and promised to co-operate with the health campaign in every way possible. Committees were appointed to look after the work in Minneapolis and St. Paul. These committees were made up of the following: Minneapolis, H. Ruben, chairman; Daniel W. Chamberlain and W. G. True; St. Paul, Charles W. Campbell, chairman; Morton Nathan and Joseph Friedman. Thomas J. Hamlin, editor of "Amusements," has offered his columns to informing exhibitors of Minnesota and other Northwest states to assist in battling disease.

Travel is the main subject at the Fox exchange these days. Roadman Hollander is spending an Easter vacation in gay old Gotham. Manager Lawrence and Roadman MacIntyre have returned from a business trip to Duluth, Minn., and Roadman Kellar has gone out to cover the Michigan peninsula and northern Wisconsin.

Roadman William K. Cutter of the K-E-S-E exchange is touring central Minnesota, and has wired Manager Graham at headquarters that demand for more "Skinner" pictures is far exceeding expectations.

"If requests for bookings keep coming in the next week the way they have the past," C. J. VerHalen, Paramount publicity manager, informs us, "we'll have to order 'steen dozen prints of Arbuckle's first release."

Strand Patrons Will See It First.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Saxe Brothers, who recently bought territorial rights on "Enlighten Thy Daughter," will "try it out on the dog" at the Strand here the week of April 15. A big publicity and advertising campaign is preceding the feature, and Charles G. Granham (he of the new Eastern millinery) is preceding or proceeding with the publicity.

Dallas' Old Mill Rises Anew

Picture Theater Burned Last Winter Will Be Reopened June 1, More Beautiful Than Ever—Former Lessee, E. H. Hulsey, Has Bought House and Will Spend Freely on It—Prepares to Show Films to Best Advantage.

By N. E. Flanagan, 516 North Ervay Street, Dallas, Texas.

DALLAS, TEXAS—The Old Mill theater, which burned recently, will open June 1 in greater splendor than ever. Plans for the building have been delayed for a month on account of the insurance adjustment. This has now been made, a sum of $30,000 paid, and improvements have begun.

The theater has been purchased by E. H. Hulsey interests from Dalton Brothers. Mr. Hulsey was a lessee before. The entire building and equipment will be done in a more elaborate style, and some o the details will make it a novel and unique showhouse in Texas. The stock company formed is capitalized with $100,000. E. H. Hulsey is president and Hirschel Stuart secretary-treasurer.

The new Old Mill will resemble the old Old Mill only in size, with its seating capacity of 1,500 persons. There will be 100 box seats well located. The booth will be brought down flush with the front balcony line, which will save a projection throw of ninety feet and increase the quality of the pictures 100 per cent. The new booth will be fireproof.

The carpets and draperies will be different, and the tinting and decorating will be done by one of the finest experts in the country. Indirect lighting will be used, and appropriate colored lights will be shown on various occasions. A dark blue will coincide with a storm at sea, a flaming red with a fire, and other such effects. The heating and cooling machines, like the ones used before, will be in the basement, and incense or other odors will be pushed through into the theater when Japanese scenes or others demanding "atmosphere" are shown.

A beautiful marquet will cover the front line of the building to the sidewalk. The Old Mill crest will occupy the center of the front of the building above. Altogether, $60,000 will be the amount spent for improvement, of which $30,000 will replace the damages done by the fire, and $30,000 will represent added improvement.

Gilligan will handle the sales for Oklahoma, Texas, Louisiana and Arkansas. Sanford and McInerery have opened the Southwestern Art Dramatic, Inc., Dallas.

J. A. Cressey has taken over the Atlanta office for the Selznick productions, and will operate that office and buy pictures on the open market for the seven Southwestern states, besides the four which he handled formerly. Whiting, chief accountant; Roy Self, shipping clerk; Miss Anna Frise and Mrs. Lee Alexander, stenographers.

Cressey says that under Bromberg's management in Atlanta since February 21 more business has been done than during four months before. Cressey has installed a system there that he is proud of.

Cressey has been holding off two knockout pictures of Clara Kimball Young's until after the Lenten season. They are "The Price She Paid" and "The Easiest Way." "Why She Left Her Husband" will be next.

Mrs. Ed Kimball, mother of Clara Kimball Young, has been visiting Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Cressey. The latter is her sister. She returned last week to New York.

Texas Theater Building Code Bill Dies.

Austin, Texas.—A very drastic bill regulating the operation of motion picture shows, construction of booths, installation of electrical appliances and all wiring providing for exits, etc., introduced at the instance of the Texas State Fire Insurance Commission in the last session of the Texas legislature, recently adjourned, died on the calendar. Had the original bill passed it would have been possible to close 60 per cent of the motion picture houses in Texas permanently. However, the bill was modified in such a manner that, where houses were found to safe, the state fire marshal had the option of enforcing all the provisions of the law. Several amendments suggested by President E. H. Hulsey of the Texas Amusement Managers' Association were made by the commission, so that the bill as amended was not nearly so oppressive, and, at the same time, the value of the measure framed to safeguard life and property was not impaired. However, the bill as amended never reached final passage.

Houston Branch of T. A. M. A. Flourishes.

Houston, Texas.—The Houston branch of the Texas Amusement Managers' Association is progressing finely. Dave Weiss is the active president and C. M. McFarland secretary. A number of adjustments have been made recently among the local men, and the association is becoming valuable in many ways to the membership.

Censor Board in Waco at Work.

Waco, Texas.—Waco now has a board of seven to censor all films showing in that city. This censorship, it is said, was brought about by the disregard by some of the local managers of sentiment against the showing of pictures which had been prohibited in many other cities. One of those shows was "The Garden of Knowledge."

Austin to Have a Paid Censor.

Austin, Texas.—The city of Austin is soon to have a censor. The last city budget provided for the payment of the salary of such a censor, and Mayor Woolridge has promised that one shall be appointed.

Houston, Texas.—Because M. Wicks, Jr., owner of two Houston picture shows, is also interested in confectionery which the soda dispensers are fighting, the local operators' union has decided to pull out its operators working in the Dixie and Gem, notwithstanding these houses are under contract with the union. Just what this action will lead to is uncertain, but it appears as though the proceeding was a trifle irregular.

CALIFORNIA ITEMS.

Pioneer Film Man Dead.

San Francisco, Cal.—James A. Sciaroni, one of the most widely known and best liked film men on the Pacific Coast, and a pioneer in this industry, passed away on March 31, following an illness of two years. During this time he suffered several strokes of paralysis, but was attending to his regular duties shortly before his death, and his passing was a distinct shock to the trade. Mr. Sciaroni became interested in the moving picture business early in the nineties with Miles Brothers, and remained with this firm until his death, for a long time filling the position of manager. During this time he engaged in the making of moving pictures, in the exhibiting branch of the business, in film exchange work and finally in commercial work. He assisted in taking the first successful moving pictures ever made in Alaska, and was with Miles Brothers when they conducted the Unique theater at San Francisco. In 1902 Miles Brothers opened a film exchange on Turk street, in this city, and Mr. Sciaroni here made the acquaintance of all of the pioneer exhibitors in this territory. Of late years his attention was directed almost exclusively to commercial photography, a large laboratory having been fitted up by Miles Brothers on Mission street, above Seventh. Mr. Sciaroni was an expert cameraman and personally attended to the making of many of the firm's finest pictures. He was forty-eight years of age at the time of his death, and is survived by a wife and two children.

The former production is now being put on at the Savoy theater for an indefinite run, the engagement starting on the closing day at the Cort.

New Film Trade Officers Chosen

San Francisco Film Exchange Board of Trade Holds Its Annual Election—Louis Reichert Is President; W. J. Drummond, Vice-President; M. L. Markowitz, Treasurer, and Leo L. Lesser, Secretary.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The annual meeting and election of officers of the Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco was held in the offices of the organization in the David Hewes Building, on Market street, on the afternoon of March 30, a full attendance of members being on hand. President M. L. Markowitz expressed a desire to be relieved of the duties which he has carried since the organization was formed, and Fred S. Peachy, who has filled the position of secretary-manager for more than a year, tendered his resignation, to become effective at once. Officers were thereupon chosen for the ensuing term as follows: President, Louis Reichert, manager of the local Metro exchange; vice-president, W. J. Drummond, manager of the San Francisco branch of the Mutual; secretary, M. L. Markowitz, manager of the California Film exchange, and treasurer, Sol L. Lesser, head of the All Star Feature Distributors. The offices of the organization will be maintained as formerly, and a representative, to be selected later, will assist the secretary in carrying on the work of the Board of Trade.

The past year has proved to be a very busy one for the Film Exchange Board of Trade, and among its accomplishments have been the elimination of the local board of censorship, the securing of a ruling permitting the carrying of films as hand baggage on boats and trains, and action on the part of members of the state legislature to sidetrack measures detrimental to the moving picture industry. It has virtually put an end to the practice of irresponsible exhibitors securing films without making proper payment for them, and has thus prevented unfair competition.

"The Barrier" Coming to Portola.

San Francisco, Cal.—Manager Eugene Roth, of the Portola theater, has secured the Rex Beach production, "The Barrier," for presentation late in April, but has not decided upon the length of the run. Both of the other productions from the pen of this author that have been filmed have been shown first at this house, and patrons began asking about this one before it had been booked. Preceding "The Barrier" will come "Skinner's Dress Suit" and "The Cure," featuring Charlie Chaplin. Work on the new theater at Fourth and Market streets is progressing favorably, the steel work being in a completed form. Irving Long, with the Portola theater, has returned from a trip of several months to the southern part of the state, where he has been working in the studios.

Turner & Dahnken Jottings.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Turner & Dahnken circuit now has a cameraman operating in San Francisco and vicinity, and is presenting to its patrons at the T. & D. Tivoli theater and the other houses on its large circuit an original novelty pictorial news depicting local events and scenes of interest. The pictures are shown shortly after being taken.

This concern, which recently took over the Opera House at Hanford, Cal., has remodeled and refurnished this place and opened it on April 2 under the management of A. E. Miller, formerly in charge of the Watsonville house. The latter house is now being operated under the management of Mr. Miller's son.

E. J. Johnson, secretary of the Turner & Dahnken circuit, is still in the East and is not expected home until about the first of May. Fred Dahnken, Jr., president of the firm, is to leave at once for New York on a business mission of importance.

Pathe Business Increasing.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Pathe exchange notes the securing of many new accounts of late, and is booking a larger volume of business than ever before. The Pathecolor production, "Mayblossom," featuring Pearl White, has been booked for presentation at the Strand theater late in April, and the new serial, "The Mystery of the Double Cross," has been secured by the Casino theater and will be shown first on April 15.

Strand Filled at Special Matinee.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Strand theater rounded out its second week of Mary Pickford in "The Poor Little Rich Girl" with a special matinee for children which commenced at 10 o'clock in the morning and which filled the house, all children under twelve years of age being admitted for 10 cents. A Mary Pickford impersonation contest was a feature of this event.

W. W. Hodkinson Greets Old Friends.

San Francisco, Cal.—W. W. Hodkinson, president of the Triangle corporation, arrived here on April 3 for a stay of a few days and met many old-time friends in the film trade. This is Mr. Hodkinson's first trip here since 1915, when he visited the Exposition and took part in the proceedings of the national convention, and many changes have been brought about since then, both in exhibiting and in film exchange circles. As usual, Mr. Hodkinson is looking to the future, as well as caring for the present, and, while here, spoke convincingly of what he saw for the future of the business. With the passing of the small house and unnecessary competition he also sees the passing of the mediocre film and the present arrangement of a program. The program of the future, he believes, will form an entire evening's entertainment and will be given in houses that will cause some of the pretentious ones of the present to pale into insignificance. He looks for a long show, not the double bill that is now featured by some, but good subjects of from five to ten reels, with shorter subjects to fill it out to the required length. The lack of co-operation between producers, distributors and exhibitors was deplored, and he felt that a closer understanding must be reached before the industry could be said to be on a permanent foundation.

New Exhange on Film Row.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Pacific Film exchange, a new entry into the local field, has opened its doors at 124 Golden Gate avenue, and is offering a line of one-reel comedies, scenics and educational subjects. This new concern is composed of Harry Thuman, formerly of Portland, Ore., and Harry Hunter, recently of Seattle. Mr. Thuman has been identified with the film business for about ten years, but of late has been interested in other lines. Mr. Hunter at one time had charge of a branch of the Independent Film exchange at Los Angeles, was with the Mutual for eight months at Portland, Ore., and for a similar length of time was with the Metro office at Seattle. As soon as the local office is in good running shape it is planned to open branches at Los Angeles and El Paso.

Manager Had No Permit, Arrested

Portland, Oregon, Manager Haled Into Court for Failure to Have Inspection Certificate—Film Came From Seattle—Arrest An Issue In Present Long Distance Film Service Controversy.

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—F. P. Wittenberg, who conducts the Grant theater, on South First street, was arrested April 6 charged with exhibiting a five-reel feature without a permit. The complainant was Mrs. E. B. Colwell, secretary of the censor board, who had passed Mr. Wittenberg's theater and noticed that an uncensored film was being played. The film was seized and taken to the police headquarters.

Under the Portland censor ordinance the propriety of the film is not in issue in cases of this kind, the complaint being based solely upon the failure to have a permit. Mr. Wittenberg was unable to controvert this accusation. Judge Stevenson appreciated the technical nature of the charge and continued the sentence.

When interviewed concerning the arrest, Mrs. Colwell stated that while Mr. Wittenberg was undoubtedly at fault in the case, a big portion of the blame might be placed upon the Seattle exchanges who persist in sending to second-run exhibitors films that have been condemned by Portland censors at the time when they attempted to show them in first run theaters. Mrs. Colwell says that in this instance she furnished the Seattle exchange with a copy of condemned films of its brand but that the objectionable feature was none the less sent to Portland without a permit to exhibit.

It is conceded that second-run theaters showing pictures several month's old occasionally overlook such details as censorship permits especially when the film is showing only one night and when they know it has been in Portland before. These exhibitors maintain that inasmuch as the Seatfle exchanges know that censorship permits are required by ordinance to go with a picture wherever it is shown in Portland, it is up to the exchange to see that the permit is still with a picture when it returns to Portland for a second run. The failure to take care of this detail by Seattle exchanges doing business in Portland is claimed by Rose City exhibitors to be just another hardship that could be remedied by the feature concerns having a representative here.

Picture Not Funny, Condemned.

Portland, Ore.—On April 5 the Standard Film company submitted a comedy to a censor board viewer for inspection. She condemned it. The alleged comedy wasn't funny, she claimed. The Standard people differed with her; they said it was funny, so the next day the official censor board viewed the picture. This body sustained the action of the viewer. When asked by the writer for the reason for the censors' act, chairman F. T. Richards, of the board, refused to disclose it.

"Her Condoned Sin" Goes Well.

Portland, Ore.—C. W. Meighan, manager of the Peoples theater, reports that "Her Condoned Sin," a reissue of "Judith of Bethulia," was a particularly popular attraction at the big firstrun show house commencing April 1, notwithstanding this was Holy Week. An elaborate lobby of full bust colored photos of the old Biograph stars was very attractive.

D. N. Pallay, of Pallay Features company, handling the picture, reports bookings at the Rex, Seattle and Ye Liberty, Salem.

League Aids Recruiting.

Portland, Ore.—At a recent meeting of Oregon exhibitors, a resolution offering the screens of all motion picture theaters in the state belonging to the league to the government to aid in recruiting was adopted by an unanimous cheering vote.

The Majestic theater showed a film of the marines landing in Hayti and had a member of the marine corps stationed in the lobby who gave information to would-be recruits.

Among the film men to respond to the first call to arms was Bill Davis, former shipper at the Standard Feature Film company, and Geo. Hastings, bookkeeper at the Mutual. Mr. Barber, of Goin and Barber, Ideal theater, Willamina, Ore., sold his house to C. P. Lewis to accept a berth in the navy. Mr. Lewis also operates the Grand at Sheridan, Ore.

Hibernians Censor Film.

Portland, Ore.—Objecting to scenes in "Castles for Two," purporting to show peasant life in Ireland, the Order of Hibernians requested the privilege to censor this feature before it was shown to the public. The management of the Peoples theater, where the film was shown, gladly consented to do this with the result that after cutting the feature became a consistent photoplay that pleased everybody, particularly the Hibernians who attended in large numbers, and offended none.

The action of the Hibernians was based on a communication from Butte, Mont., where it is reported that the picture came nearly receiving rough handling by reason of its alleged uncomplimentary portrayal of Irish peasant life.

Portland Locals.

Striking a popular chord by advertising "Civilization" as a sermon against kingmade war, this attraction at the Star theater the week ending April 7 had a most successful run.

G. E. Jackson, traveling out of Portland for Mutual for some time, is now the permanent traveling representative for that company in Portland territory.

Among recent out of town visitors on Film Row were Dick Charles, Peoples theater, Vader, Wash., S. Danz, Star theater, Astoria, Ore., M. L. Morris, Star, McMinnville, Ore., H. O. Strom, St. Helens, Ore., and Fred Clift, Prairie City, Ore.

Courtesy and Rudeness in House Popularity

Cashier and Ushers Can Make or Break a Picture Theater—Patrons Seldom Come Except for Their Own Pleasure—Why Offend Them?

By S. Clark Patchin, E. 1811 Eleventh Avenue, Spokane, Wash.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Mr. W. W. Hindley, local dramatic critic, in a criticism of lack of courtesy and service, said:

"Spokane theatrical attaches, for the most part, are open to criticism for their lack of courtesy, and the managers themselves must shoulder a share of the blame for the bad and often extremely rude manners of their house staffs. It is significant that the moving picture theaters are conspicuously less offensive in this regard than the so-called legitimate and vaudeville theaters.

"Managers of some of the latter appear to be overlooking the fact that courtesy and efficient service are worth while, and that the little niceties are appreciated by a large number of their patrons.

"It adds nothing to the overhead expense of a theater to inculcate habits of courtesy in the ushers, cashiers and doormen, and a mere word from the manager often would suffice. The criticism has been made of some Spokane theaters that patrons are openly snubbed and insulted if they purchase or express a desire to purchase anything but the highest priced seats. Instances have been called to the writer's attention where would-be purchasers of seats have left without buying, after having been subjected to humiliation and insult by some smart understrapper in the box office. There is no justification for such behavior.

"The chief criticism, however, is not directed at the cashiers, but against the ushers. Some of these it must be admitted comport themselves in a manner that is beyond comprehension. They perform the duties expected of them in a spirit of condescension that exasperates patrons. The writer recently overheard an usher in a loud voice rebuke a patron who had thoughtlessly stood up during a performance to pick up a handkerchief that had fallen between the seats:

"'Sit down and stay down, can't you?'

"Was it any wonder that the insulted patron and members of his party immediately left the theater? Of course, the box office retained the admission prices they had paid, but no manager will say that kind of business pays. A little spring cleaning seems to be in order among the house attaches. They leave undone many things they might easily do, and they do many things they ought to leave undone.

"Courtesy pays substantial dividends. Service is the word of the hour. Spokane managers can make their houses much more congenial haunts by injecting more of both ideas into their assistants."

By a special arrangement with the Triangle Film company the Liberty theater will offer a new photoplay in place of the William S. Hart film which has been running the early part of the week. It is Robert Harron in "The Bad Boy," and it will be shown for three days.

This new Harrow film was scheduled to come to the Liberty several weeks ago, but owing to a special production which Mr. Ruffner had on he was compelled to let it go by, and only by some extra effort was he able to have it sent back.

Iowa Exhibitors Watch New Blue Law Bills

Censorship Measures Have Been Successfully Sidetracked, But New Bills Threaten to Close Down Moving Picture Shows on Sundays.

By Dorothy Day, Register-Tribune, Des Moines, Ia.

DES MOINES, IA.—Iowa motion picture men no more than settled back in their seats with a satisfied sign of relief at the death of the many censorship bills than the passing of the blue laws, with Sunday closing, brought them upon tip toe again. With the several amendments killed that provided for leniency in administering the blue laws and with only one or two amendments still to come up to save them their Sunday crowds, the Iowa exhibitors are eagerly waiting the outcome.

By judicious handling and unacrimonious publicity the censorship question was settled in Iowa legislature with little difficulty. At any rate, Iowa will not have censorship this year, and if the Sunday closing laws are as lenient everything in the motion picture circles will be all right.

Exhibitors Visitors at Local Exchanges.

Des Moines, Ia.—Walker & Thorpe of the Lyric theater in Indianola, Carson & Mace of the Colonial in Moulton, O. D. Benjamin of the Electric in Ruthven, A. Maland of the Lyceum in Slater were all callers at the Mutual exchange recently.

G. H. Peterson of the Grand theater in Story City and the Lyric theater in Jewel, C. L. Allen of the Elite theater in Pella and Frank Dawson of the Motion Picture theater in Bonaparte were callers at the Pathe.

Film Doings Over the State.

Zearing, Ia.—Frank E. Beach, manager of the Grand theater in Zearing, is remodeling. The house has been closed for some two weeks and was to be opened the 18th of the month, with a new curtain and many other new fixtures. Mr. Beach has lengthened his house and remodeled the front to a certain extent.

Guthrie Center, Ia.—Powd McLuen of the McLuen theater in Guthrie Center has been compelled to place 100 new seats in his theater to accommodate the crowds that jam his house to see his programs. He is now running the "Patria" serial. Manager McLuen is a great advertiser and it is no wonder that he "packs them in" on all his programs.

Reinbeck, Ia.—E. Paul Lapp sold his opera house to F. E. Burke of Reinbeck.

Walter Davis Leaves Miloslowsky Theaters.

Des Moines, Ia.—J. Miloslowsky, owner of the Palace and Family theaters in Des Moines, has returned from a month's stay in Hot Springs. He made a short visit in Chicago soon after his return.

His manager, Walter Davis, who has most successfully managed the Palace for the last nine months, has resigned and will return to the legitimate stage publicity work, in which he is most efficient. Mr. Davis was one of the most successful managers that Mr. Miloslowsky ever obtained. His successor has not been chosen.

E. C. Thomas Moves to Los Angeles.

Los Angeles, Cal.—This letter, mailed from the film capital, marks the close of my Western Canadian correspondence, and my pleasant association with the Moving Picture World. To all who have assisted me during the past twenty months I extend my sincere thanks.

It is with deep sorrow that I chronicle the death of my beloved mother in Los Angeles, her old home, on March 17. She passed away only two days after our arrival in this city.—E. C. Thomas.

[The Moving Picture World is sincerely sorry to lose the assistance of its Western Canadian representative, Mr. E. C. Thomas. While he was on the job in Vancouver we had the comfort of knowing that we had an able and reliable man and were being kept in immediate touch with all importan matters in that part of the film world. Good luck to you, Brother Thomas.]

Quagliotti Disposes of Vancouver Theaters

The Variety Is Now Under Management of W. P. Nichols—Will Be Improved—The Romano Theater Now Being Managed by William Brown.

By E. C. Thomas, 516 Grant Building, Los Angeles, Cal.

VICTORIA, B. C.—The most important development in the local field during recent months is the disposal of two of the houses which for a long time have been conducted by L. J. Quagliotti. The principal theater to be transferred is the Variety, which is now under the control of W. P. Nichols, lately managing director of the National Amusement company, with headquarters in Vancouver. Plans for improving the Variety have already been drawn up, and will involve an expenditure of $5,000. A waiting room for ladies will be provided, and the balcony will be enlarged. George Murdock, who was formerly advertising manager of the Variety, has been appointed manager of the house. He is one of the pioneer moving picture men of Victoria, having been first connected with the old Arcade theater, the first straight picture theater in town, and later going to the Empress and the Romano.

The Romano is the other house to be disposed of by Mr. Quagliotti, and is now being conducted by William Brown, who aleady controls the Maple Leaf, Crystal and Majestic theaters in Vancouver.

Dominion Turns Away from Vancouver.

Victoria, B. C.—The proposal to establish a film studio for the productions to be put out by the Dominion Film Corporation, Ltd., has definitely fallen through, so far as this city is concerned, and J. Arthur Nelson, the president of the company, has transferred his activities to other parts of the province. Although the citizens of Victoria had agreed to advance to the film company the sum of $9,200 as one-half the purchase price of the studio site, many failed to "come through" when the time arrived for actual payment of their subscriptions.

Following the outcome of the Victoria negotiations, Mr. Nelson took up the matter with the council of Burnaby, a suburb of Vancouver, as that city had expressed a desire to have him establish in that locality. In this instance Dominion corporation requested the donation of a site, which was valued at $41,000, and the proposition was approved by the council committee which had been appointed to handle the matter. On submission to the entire committee, however the proposition was turned down, although it was stated by some of the councilmen that there might still be hope of making arrangements which would be satisfactory to both parties.

Edmonton's Majestic Just Opened.

Edmonton, Alberta.—This city's newest theater is the Majestic, which has just been opened. This house has a seating capacity of five hundred and is located in the heart of the downtown district. Leather opera chairs have been installed in both the main floor and balcony. There are retiring rooms for both gentlemen and ladies, the latter room being provided with writing materials and other conveniences. A peculiarity in the construction of the house brings the operating room on the roof, and this fact is featured as minimizing the danger of fire.

G. Izetwire, manager of the new theater, entertained a large number of his friends at a special performance previous to the opening of the house. An orchestra will be used, with General Film productions.

Regal Films Notes.

Vancouver, B. C.—S. B. Taube, who came West to open the Vancouver office of Regal Films, Ltd., Canadian distributors of World Films, has returned to Toronto. A private showing of Donald Thompson's "War as It Really Is" was held at the Colonial theater previous to his departure, and the picture was booked by Manager W. P. Dewees of the Rex theater, who ran it for a full week to big business. The private viewing, by the way, was handled in unusually good fashion, with appropriate organ accompaniment and effects. Danny Freeman of the Regal office has returned from a trip to the interior.

Takes Up Express Changes Question in Winnipeg.

Winnipeg, Man.—The members of the Provincial Exhibitors' Association have recently taken up with the exchange the matter of express charges, which are now being paid both ways by the exhibitors. It is thought that a discussion of this matter may bring about a change, with the charges probably equally divided between exhibitor and exchange.

Hope to Repeal Daylight Saving Law.

Winnipeg, Man.—An effort is being made by the moving picture men of this city to bring about the repeal of the daylight saving by-law, as it was found last summer that it was not only confusing to patrons but served to cut down the attendance by shortening the already short period of darkness in the summer evenings.

Western Canada Theater Changes and Notes.

Cranbrook, B. C.—W. A. Burton, former manager of the Rex theater, has been succeeded by N. E. Stevens. A. A. Johnson & Co. are proprietors of the house.

Yorkton, Sask.—Bessler Brothers of Melville have taken the Patrick theater.

Winnipeg, Man.—Aubrey M. Kennedy, the first manager of Universal City, announces the birth of a daughter.

Greenwood, B. C.—The Star theater has reopened after a period of darkness.

Prince George, B. C.—George N. Adams has reopened the Dreamland theater and is using Mutual service.

Grand Forks, B. C.—M. P. Wetherwell, former operator, has assumed the lease on the Empire theater. He is an old-time moving picture man, and success in his new venture seems assured.

Alderson, Alta.—This place is again on the moving picture map, A. Murphy having opened the local theater.

Lacombe, Alta.—D. E. Bailey has reopened the Comet theater.

Salvator, Sask.—Rev. A. E. Thompson is making quite a success out of his picture show run with a gas outfit. He is using pictures furnished by the Famous Players.

New Westminster, B. C.—F. L. Kerr, manager of the Edison theater and who also recently took over the Royal, has given up the latter house, which is now temporarily dark.

Trail, B. C.—N. M. Trafton of the Star theater has recently contracted with Manager C. R. Dippie of Mutual's Vancouver office to repeat all the Mutual-Chaplin subjects. Mr. Dippie also furnished a special program of Irish subjects on St. Patrick's Day to Manager W. J. B. Guerrard of the Opera House at Chase, B. C.

Winnipeg, Man.—Manager W. P. Wilson of the Lyceum theater turned over the house to the ladies' auxiliary of the Tenth Artillery brigade on two successive days recently, to assist them in providing comforts for soldiers at the front. Musical selections were contributed by a number of local artists, and the patrons included Premier Norris, Brig.-General and Mrs. Ruttan, and many others.

Calgary, Alberta.—Harold Moore of the local Famous Players office recently made a trip ahead of "The Advance of the Tanks," helping exhibitors.

Swift Current, Sask.—Manager Kenneth Leach of the Lyric theater recently took an extended trip through the United States. Mr. Reith, formerly of the Princess Royal, was in charge of the house during Mr. Leach's absence.

FORTUNE PHOTOPLAYS.

THE YELLOW BULLET (Four Parts).—The cast: Fred Fowler (Robyn Adair); Teresa Fowler (Lucy Fayton); Harry Hart (Bruce Smith); Surgeon Lloyd (Neil Hardie); Pedro (Frank Erlanger); Spanish Neil (Gloria Payton); Mrs. Black (Ruth Lackaye); Perkins (Charles Dudley). Scenario by William H. Lippert. Directed by Harry Harvey.

The only survivors of an annihilated wagon train, ambushed by bandits, are Fowler and his daughter, Teresa, and Hart. Teresa is wounded and Hart leaves them to seek aid. Fowler by chance discovers the famous lost mine—Peg Leg Smith mine. This is shown on a map inside a yellow bullet left among nuggets by the miner just before he died. Fowler and Teresa later rescue Hart, who has succumbed to desert thirst. Fowler tells of his find to Hart, who that night steals Fowler's gold, their only canteen of water and abandons them. A scouting party led by Surgeon Lloyd rescues Fowler and daughter. They reach a ranch about the same time that Hart does.

Fowler starts out to locate the mine. Hart divines his reason and follows. Fowler has duplicated the map. Hart follows Fowler to the shack. Fowler is bound and made a prisoner. Hart inflicts cruelty to force the secret from Fowler, who determines to die if necessary. A siege of cruelty and suffering follows between Fowler and Hart.

Lloyd sets out at the head of a party to rescue Fowler. Teresa later steals away herself to locate her father. She becomes lost. Hart chances to see the searching party make camp. He determines to take Fowler to a more secluded spot. Through a chain of dramatic incidents Hart is killed by Fowler. Fowler, after much suffering, is rescued by Lloyd, who has also rescued Teresa.

THE DEVIL'S BAIT (Four Parts).—In the prologue of "The Devil's Bait," Dr. Sheldon and his chum, Davies, visit the ruby mines of Mandalay. There is a landslide. Davies sights a ruby in the dead hand of one of the miners. The sight of the stone, "The Devil's Bait," excites the frenzy of possession in Sheldon, and the two fight upon a cliff. Davies is hurled over, but hangs on to a projecting rock. Sheldon offers to save his life if he will give the great ruby to him.

Years pass, and both men fall in love with the same girl. Dr. Sheldon wins the hand of Anita. Davies swears that he will rob Sheldon of ruby and girl. Dr. Sheldon's honeymoon has scarcely passed when he observes a passion for jewels in Anita. Davies has also observed this obsession, and through the lure of gifts of costly gems he entices Anita from her husband, leaving her infant Doris.

Doris grows into a beautiful girl. A shadow falls across the happiness of Dr. Sheldon and his daughter.

Davies contrives to meet Doris, and holds the ruby under her eyes. Doris is fascinated by this bait of Satan. Doris is elected queen of a carnival at a summer resort, and Davies manages to put in place of the crown of flowers she was to wear a brilliant array of jewels. Her father learns about the scheme in time to save her. He takes Doris home.

Madam De Long, an accomplice of Davies, feigns illness to be attended by Dr. Sheldon. She falls in love with him and double crosses Davies. The story ends with Davies trying to escape in an automobile. Dr. Sheldon, with Doris, chases him. Davies leaps to his death over a precipice. Dr. Sheldon takes the ruby from the dead man's finger and casts it into the sea.

ESSANAY.

PASS THE HASH, ANN (A Black Cat Feature—Two parts).—The cast: Ann (Marguerite Clayton); Jack Channon (Edward Arnold).

Jack Channon is a "regular fellow." His uncle dies and leaves him a stack of long green. To prove that he is a "regular fellow" Jack goes back to the boarding house where he struggled along as a clerk. Here he meets Ann, the "slavey" of the outfit, and is first drawn to her by the manner in which she passes the hash at the dining table. Jack observes that though a serving maid there is something entirely different about Ann. Before he knows it, he has fallen in love with her. He determines to propose, then comes upon Ann with a group of society women about her, congratulating her. It developes that Ann, the daughter of the social leader of the city, has worked as a serving maid simply to study economic conditions. In so doing, however, she has fallen in love with Jack, and the two clinch their boarding house experience by getting married.

THE CLOCK STRUCK ONE (A Black Cat Feature—Two Parts).—The cast: Bess (Marguerite Clayton); Jerry (Webster Campbell).

Bess' heart is torn with conflicting emotions. She always had pictured herself the wife of a rich man, yet she now finds herself deeply in love with a poor youth. She finally conquers her conscientious scruples and permits herself to become engaged to a rich young fellow. They elope.

Jerry, the poor youth, scents the scheme, and follows them. After a wild chase Jerry rushes into a roadhouse to find Bess imprisoned. The youth who promised to become her husband has revealed himself to her as a social viper. He and Jerry struggle, the latter coming out victor. Jerry rescues Bess and takes her home. At the door his landlady hands him a letter notifying him he had won a small fortune in a guessing contest. Wedding bells for Bess and Jerry follow.

BE MY BEST MAN (A Black Cat Feature—Two parts).—The cast: Grant Carver (Edward Arnold); Baron von Helmuth (Ernest Maupain); Frances Alden (Hazel Daly).

Despite her love for Grant Carver, Frances Alden bows before her socially ambitious mother's domination and agrees to marry Baron von Helmuth. There is a house-party at the Alden home to announce the engagement, but it ends disastrously as Mrs. Alden's $50,000 pearl necklace suddenly disappears. Carver, a dejected guest, suspects the Baron and breaks into his room. The two have a struggle. The Baron breaks away, rushes into Frances' room, grabs her and escapes from the house. Carver pursues the kidnaper and his victim, finally overtaking them. Again they struggle, this time with Frances aiding Carver. The Baron is overpowered and has the necklace. Frances and Grant are married and the Baron is exposed as a notorious crook.

LOCAL COLOR (A Black Cat Feature—Two Parts).—The cast: Don Paxton (Webster Campbell); Alice (Alice McChesney); The Owl (U. K. Houpt).

As a writer Don Paxton was rapidly making a fizzle. The city editor of the Hornet for which Paxton attempted to scribble informed the reporter he lacked local color. Don was fired and immediately set out to get the lacking atmosphere. He wanted to write crime stories, so he fell in with a bunch of criminals—disguised as one. A big jewelry house is located about this time, the robbers escaping.

Don in his disguise helps to fall in with "The Owl" and Alice, who are the ringleaders of the coterie. He does not discover this fact, however, until he has fallen in love with Alice. The girl while associating with the robbers, though, has had nothing to do with their crimes, and hence Don, in "turning up" the story with proper local color, gets her out of the rut and marries her.

CANIMATED NOOZ PICTORIAL NO. 28 (Cartoon Comedy).—The Canimated camera caught the latest round go in Swattem, N. Y., demonstrating how modern boxers do not swattem but hold a regular lovefeast in the squared ring. At Lincoln, Neb., William Jynx Bryan is shown drilling his megaphone regiment in the art of talking their enemies to death. It's a great scheme, if it works. Maggia Murphy, in Chicago, passes an examination to become a coppette by proving that she can "beat up" her "ould man." The Canimated cameraman offers Col. T. R. $1,000,000 to act in the silent drama. The Colonel declines. He can't act without talking, he says.

A trip through the Soo Canal, picturing the great Canadian grain elevators, steel mills and shipping industry forms the other half of the reel.

THE DAUGHTER OF "GAS-HOUSE" DAN (Two Parts).—The cast.—"Gas-House" Dan (Fred Eckhart); Marjorie (Byrdine Zuber); Jerry Wyckham (Casson Ferguson); Carelli (Gilbert Toffick). Written by A. D. Pitney. Directed by Otis B. Thayer.

Dan Rynes, a ward "boss," educates his daughter, Marjorie, in France, so that she will be ignorant of her father's unsavory reputation as a politician in America. Dan visits his daughter yearly, and the girl is proud of him.

In an American city Rynes is known as "Gas-House" Dan. His home and political headquarters are over one of his tough saloons, adjoining a big cabaret, which he owns, known as "Suicide Hall." In a political feud Dan incurs the anger of Tony Carelli, a gang leader. For revenge Carelli forges a letter to Marjorie, telling her that she is to come home.

Dan is amazed, when surrounded by his henchmen, to see his daughter. Marjorie is terrified when she realizes the situation. Aboard ship she has met Jerry Wyckham, who comes of a fine family, and they fall in love. Jerry comes to Marjorie's rescue, and takes her to his mother.

HARD TIMES IN HARDSCRAPPLE (Ham & Bud Comedy).—Ham and Bud find themselves in the slowly dying town of Hardscrappie torn between the consuming thirst for the stuff that made Milwaukee famous and hunger. The demon bad-man of Hardscrapple ceases firing at our heroes' feet. They gather in a few weapons from the lineup at the bar and make their escape.

A little later that day Ham and Bud pick up a few "gold nuggets" and buy a restaurant. "Carbation mush" is the only eatble that the whole place gives up. The new proprietors take to the hills before an assayist can have a chance to size up the gold nuggets.

With Ham and Bud out of the restaurant business, the inhabitants of Hardscrapple nearly starve. The bank roll of the visiting millionaire is of no use. Ham and Bud stumble into a cabin of a bad man, asleep. Tying him to his bed, Ham and Bud return to the village with a stock of pies from the cabin. The bidding is fast and furious. But the bad man comes on the scene—bed and all—presents his credentials in the form of two 45's—and the dough is handed over without argument.

THE MUNITIONS PLOT (An episode of "The Daughter of Daring").—The cast: Helen (Helen Gibson); Belding (Geo.ge A. Williams); Steele (George Routh); Wertz (G. Pulliam); Merkel (L. Whitlock). Directed by James Doris.

An investigation is held at Hart's Junction to solve the blowing up of ammunition trains. Helen, the operator, is questioned by a detective. Belding, the "brains" of the dynamiting gang, and Steele, his accomplice, approach and note what is taking place. Helen is excused. Crossing the platform to meet the incoming train, Helen sees Belding and Steele. She gets on the train for Fardale. Belding and Steele get in an auto.

Wertz another member of the gang, "listens in" on the wire near Fardale and gets information regarding the munitions trains. Merkel, a lineman detective, sees Wertz. Merkel attacks him.

In an exciting chase, with the gang fleeing on a freight, Helen climbs a telegraph pole and gets on a carryall arrangement which runs along a cable stretched between two poles on either side of the tracks. She starts the carryall, and when she is over the train one of the gang shoots and cuts the rope. She drops and lands atop one of the cars. She recovers and succeeds, with the aid of others, in capturing the plotters.

THE TYRANT OF CHIRACAHUA (An Episode of "The American Girl"—Two Parts).—The cast: Madge King (Marin Sais); Roger King (Frank Jonasson); Larry Kerwin, superintendent of King's enterprises (Edward Hearn); The Tyrant (Edward Cushee); Pete, a cowboy on King's ranch (Hart Hoxie).

Pete, one of Roger King's cowpunchers, ventures into the Mexican town of Chiracahua and is making love to Chiquita, the favorite of the jefe (governor) of the place, when he is discovered. Chiquita tosses him a red rose. Back on King's ranch, Pete, believing himself safe from the Mexicans, is set upon by Manuel, the jefe's lieutenant, and two aids. Pete is mortally stabbed.

Larry starts off to get the man who stabbed Pete. The Tyrant, pretending to be friendly, has Larry thrown into jail. King and his daughter Madge hurry to assist Larry. King arrives in time to see Larry thrown in jail. Madge has halted outside the town. King also is made a prisoner.

Madge disguises herself as a Mexican lad and locates the jail. She overhears The Tyrant order the execution of her father and Larry. She extracts the bullets from the guns of the firing squad. She tells Larry and her father to feign death. The squad fires and Larry falls.

Madge tosses a pistol to Larry and an attack is made, her father having been freed. Believing the prisoners supernatural, the Mexicans flee. The Tyrant and his lieutenant are captured and turned loose in the desert.

"DOUBLES AND TROUBLES" (Ham & Bud Comedy).—Ham and Bud get jobs as bouncers in Riley's thirst emporium. Between rounds, when the bouncing business is slack, they sing for the amusement of the slumming parties that visit the place. One such party find our heroes most entertaining, and the sweet little thing in the picture permits Bud to hover over her, much to the chagrin of the jealous cabaret queen who looks upon Bud as her man.

Smarting for revenge, Mag prevails upon Biffem and Bootem to disguise themselves as Ham and Bud and attend the society ball given by the blue bloods, who were so amused by our worthies during their visit to Riley's back room.

Ham and Bud take more care than usual in arraying themselves for the festive occasion. They arrive late to find that their exact counterparts have beat them to it and got away with a lot of swag. Rushing from the house they overtake their doubles and, wresting the jewels from them, return to be petted and made much of by the pretty debutantes of society.

THE RAILROAD SMUGGLERS (An episode of "A Daughter of Daring").—The cast: Helen (Helen Gibson); Julius Hecker (G. A. Williams); John, His Son (George Routh); A Mexican (Hal Clements); Harry Holmes (L. T. Whitlock).

News has just reached Lone Point that a force of Mexican bandits raided one of the American border towns the previous night, killing several people. Helen saves the newspaper containing the story to show to her friend, Julius Hecker, a rancher who is coming over that morning to unload a car of agricultural implements.

Hecker is disturbed by the news. He then asks that Helen bring any message she may receive for him over to the freight shed where he will be working. The message arrives over the wire. As Helen is taking it down, a stranger peers into the window. He understands the Morse code. When Helen starts for the freight shed he is disappearing down the road on a motorcycle.

On her relief period Helen starts for the Hecker ranch to visit Mrs. Hecker. Returning to the station for a moment, she takes down an official order to hold the Limited for a special car containing a party of naval officers. At the ranch the face of the mysterious stranger is again seen peering in at Mrs. Hecker and Helen. They run out. On her way home Helen spies the stranger walking and leading his motorcycle towards the ranch. She follows.

She is astonished to see Hecker and a Mexican set upon the stranger and bear him into the barn, shouting: "Now we've got you—you American spy." Peering in the window Helen sees that the place is a veritable arsenal.

Hecker and his son chase Helen, who has seized the stranger's motorcycle and started for the Lone Point station. Hearing the freight train whistle, Helen at once thinks of the naval officers and rushes to Lone Point. She rides up the freight incline onto the loading platform, through the open doors of the now empty freight car, and leaps her motorcycle to a flat car on the passing freight. Crawling back over the tops of the intervening cars, she gives the warning to the officers. The train is stopped, an automobile is commandeered and the officers arrive at the barn just in time to save Holmes, the secret service agent, from death. Helen stamps out the fuse lighted by Hecker when he saw his plans failing and receives the congratulations of all for her bravery.

Amy and he lived in a little country town and were happy with their baby girl. Oil was discovered on their farm and, selling it for a great sum, they went to the city to live. layed rents, he was stopped by a young girl who said that she and her aged grandmother, a cripple, were to be turned out of their rooms in the tenement because she had no money and couldn't get a position. As a last resort, she offered to accept his money at his own terms. At first disgusted, Townsend soon came to realize that the girl's proposition was more repulsive to herself that to any one else. Telling the girl that she could pay the rent whenever she was able, he offered her the position as his stenographer.

Many months passed, and Townsend saw Mary a great deal, going to the tenement every evening to enjoy the simple society of herself and her mother. He had given her gifts and looked upon her almost as his daughter. His wife's detectives had discovered these things, and had poisoned her mind. In spite of his explanations, she refused to believe that his motives were pure.

Mary is brought on the stand and soon breaks down. She tells the court that she and Joe had been engaged for two years, but were unable to marry until Townsend had given the young fellow a fine position. They had been secretly married for three months. Mrs. Townsend realizes her mistake. She tells the judge that no one had told her this part of the story. When the lawyer announces that the judge must take into consideration in the matter of alimony that Mr. Townsend has been forced to the wall and is practically penniless, his wife rushes to him. The case is dismissed.

DAVID CRAIG'S LUCK (Two Parts—April 29).—The cast: David Craig (Matt Moore); Viola Morton (Jane Gail).

Morton is the owner of the iron works. The men strike. The men are lead by Ben Shoreham. David Craig, on the other hand, though sympathizing with the workers, preaches restraint and tolerance to them. Ben challenges him to fight, and after the encounter Craig, who is victorious, leads a delegation of the men to see the iron master, Morton, and talk over their differences.

Morton, unless he can make delivery on a certain contract by a fixed date, is threatened with ruin. It is to his interest to grant the demands of the men, but he cannot bring himself to give in to them. During the argument which ensues between him and the delegation, his daughter overhears part of the conversation, and her sympathies are aroused for the men. Craig welcomes her co-operation, and takes her to the homes of her father's laborers, showing her the bad conditions under which they live and are forced to toil.

Meanwhile, Morton's troubles increase. The date of the forfeit clause in the contract draws near, and only the ending of the strike can save him. His daughter, unaware of this, has sold her jewels to furnish the men with funds to continue the strike. Craig discovers her sacrifice, and promises to do what he can to save her father. At this time the great teacher, Rossini, passes away, and, for the first time, Craig learns of his identity. The teacher was Count di Rossini of Tuscany, and Craig is his son. He inherits a legacy of $250,000.

Craig goes to the iron master and asks him if it is true that the continuance of the strike will ruin him financially. Morton grimly admits it. Craig shows him Rossini's letter, offering to buy an interest and settle the strike, if the demands of the men are met. Morton agrees, and later the spirit of Rossini is seen with David and Viola.

The marshal blows his whistle, which brings the justice from the barber's where he is just getting a shave. The tramp and the marshal proceed to find the liquor.

In the barber shop the tramp takes a shave. The barber brings a hot towel, squeezes it into the tramp's mouth, and is ready for the next customer. The tramp proclaims that the barber is the one who distributes the booze. The marshal is shocked, for the barber is the justice's son. When the judge sees his own son, he slips the tramp some money. The marshal loses his "star," and the jury pronounces the barber "Not guilty," and the barber continues his peculiar shaving tactics.

Father and Mother Lennox are a contented old couple, until daughter Jane comes home from college imbued with a passion for hygiene and an unswerving sense of duty toward them. With a book, "Old People and Their Care," as her guide, she puts them through a course of exercising "sprouts," orders hygienic meals, throws wide the windows to cold winds, and unsets their well ordered comfort. After a period of submission they run away. Jane is almost distracted. Hoping for their return, she restores the house to its former old-fashioned comfort.

Meanwhile, her parents rent a bungalow on the border of a large estate. Billy Harrison, the owner, drops in to see if he can be of service. In his rough outing clothes he is taken for the hired man by the old couple, who give him a dollar and set him doing the chores. He good naturedly lets them lord it over him and becomes a great favorite.

Jane, learning of their whereabouts, arrives at the bungalow just as father Lennox, returning from a hunting trip with Billy, shows his bag of game. He and Mother Lennox are very happy over the event, but Jane's appearance dampens their spirits. Billy conspires with them to punish Jane by a siege of snubbing. With a maternal heartache, Mother Lennox is persuaded to ignore Jane, and both refuse to return home. Billy is resentful of Jane's treatment of her parents, and Jane is jealous of the hired man's influence over them. Later his ire changes to pity when he sees that their snubbing has made her cry. Thoughts of her begin to fill his own lonely life.

Anxious to atone and longing for her parent's love again, Jane resolves to buy the little bungalow with her small inheritance. To this end she seeks the owner, and is amazed to find that Billy is host at the ranch house, and not merely a hired man. He listens to her plan, but refuses to sell the bungalow unless Jane will take the job of bossing him. Thinking him sarcastic, she leaves angrily. He follows and pleads his cause. Through binoculars Billy's guests on the terrace see Jane's antagonism to kissing vanish with her surrender.

carries Lucile into his apartment and lays her on the couch. When she recovers they talk about the jewels and Harry shows them the pearl, thus they locate the wall safe where his treasures are kept. Harry does not suspect them, but he does not care for them, and is attracted by the contrast of Janet's country freshness.

The women tell Hovey of their success, and the next day Lucile again pretends to have a fainting fit. Edith rushes down to ask Harry's aid, and, while he is gone, Hovey enters and takes the pearl. As he is showing it to the women, after Harry has left, Janet enters. She has felt that something was wrong, but she now denounces them, and says she will tell Harry the whole thing unless his property is returned at once. Hovey turns on her and carries her into her room, where he ties her to the bed.

The next day Cartwright makes inquiries for her, but is told that she has gone on a visit. Janet manages to free herself, and writes several notes on slips of paper, saying that she is a prisoner. She forces the paper through the crack of her window. One of them falls into Cartwright's window. He reads it and goes to her room, breaking in the door. She tells him everything, and he takes her to his apartment.

When the Hoveys return from the theater they find the door broken down and a note from Harry which says that he and Janet are married, and that they are welcome to the pearl, an imitation of the real thing, which is reposing safely in the vault at the bank.

GOLD SEAL.

THE FOREST NYMPH (Three Parts—April 21).—Bartine lived in Malibu Canyon, her only friends the wild things and a half-witted mountain boy called Bennie. One day she stole his clothes while he was in bathing, leaving him her ragged frock. His overalls were dirty, and she went in bathing, too, while he came up and made the exchange. While they were playing, a man was hiding among the trees to escape the sheriff, and Luke, a bad character of the neighborhood, had seen the girl reflected in the water, and desired her. He went to the girl's drunken father, armed with a bottle of mountain whiskey, and asked for Bartine for a wife.

The sheriff passed Bartine and asked her if she had seen a stranger. She answered in the negative, when, to her surprise, the stranger crawled out of the undergrowth behind her. She asked him what the sheriff wanted with him, and he told her that he had killed a man who had wronged his sister Jane so that she had taken her own life. Bartine resolved to save the stranger. She lead him to a retreat that she alone knew. He was hungry and she went home to get him food, dodging questions from her father. The next morning she went again with food to the stranger, who showed that he was attracted by her innocent charm.

Luke meanwhile visited her father to ask again for his daughter. As he had with him a present the old man was quite willing. Luke overtook Bartine coming from the cliff, and pursued her. He chased her to her home, and she hid from him in a box. That night the stranger came to her in her home, and she gave up her room to him. The sheriff arrived to search the house, but Bartine hid the stranger under her mattress, and then lay on the mattress in such a way that there appeared to be no one there. In the morning Luke, peering through the window, discovered the girl as she went into the bedroom to wake the stranger. He stole into the room, found the stranger's gun on the table and removed the cartridges. Then when the man and girl were in the living-room together he entered and offered to show the stranger the trail to Azusa, where he said he was going.

They set out together. Luke shoots the stranger in the back before they have gone far. He pretends to be more hurt than he is, and, when Luke bends over him, the two struggle together on the edge of the cliff. Bennie has followed them at a distance, and, as he sees the stranger hanging over the cliff, with Luke clinging to him, he helps the man to pull himself up, and Luke falls to his death. Then Bennie fetches Bartine, who runs to the stranger.

LITTLE BO-PEEP (Two Parts—April 25).—The cast: The shepherd boy (Dan Russell); the vampire (Lou Bolton); the hotel keeper (Robert McKenzie); his daughter (Gladys Roach).

Dan was the shepherd at Rushville. Gladys was the Rushville beauty, the daughter of the hotel proprietor. Every day the hotel keeper went to meet the guests who never came, and he grew sad. At last came a day when a guest did arrive on the 4 o'clock train. She was a vampire, but the proprietor did not know that. He rushed her into the old wagon and drove at top speed to the Rushville House. Gladys was sent upstairs to dust off the furniture in the guest room, and the lady was ushered into her apartment by the full staff. She was given a cow bell with which to make her wants known, and when she sat in the rocker, which promptly went over backwards with her, she rang it furiously.

Pa disguised himself as the bellboy and answered. She was registered as La Belle Petroleum, a heel dancer, but when Dan saw her practicing in the woods in a Ballet Russe costume he thought it would have been more accurate if she had spelled heel with a double l. Dan had a hard time rescuing his flock from contamination, and the black lamb was determined to attach himself to the dancer.

Pa invited his guest to drive with him, and Dan was jealous. The horse balked, standing on the railroad tracks, with an engine coming rapidly nearer. Only Dan's presence of mind in lighting a fire under the carriage prevented a tragedy. Then Dan and Pa had a fight, and Dan went off with the dancer, while the wagon burned in front of the hotel.

Years went by. La Belle Petroleum had become a family drudge, with six husky boys. The hotel had flourished, and Pa had purchased an auto. But he had never forgotten the lovely dancer, and one day he just got into the buzz wagon, drove off to her house, and asked her to elope with him for old times sake. This she was delighted to do, and managed to elude Dan and the children. When they found that she was gone, they set out to follow her, the youngest one carrying his lamb. The elopers got stuck in a mud puddle and abandoned the car, which Dan and his husky boys managed to set going again. They rushed after the train, and just succeeded in catching it. Then they threw Pa off with one mighty heave, and the family were reunited at last.

RED FEATHER.

THE HERO OF THE HOUR (Five Parts—April 23).—The cast: Billy Brooks (Jack Mulhall); Brooks, Sr. (Wadsworth Harris); Mildred Nebeker (Fritzie Ridgway); Juanita (Grace MacLean); Indian (Noble Johnson); Foreman (Fred Burns); Mexican (M. K. Wilson); Nebeker (Eugene Owen). Scenario by E. B. Lewis. Produced by Raymond Wells.

Billy Brooks is a popular young member of New York's smart set, but rather effeminate, while his father is a rugged self-made man, a native of the far West. At a party Billy hears of an exquisite perfume and, learning from the young lady that her uncle manufactures it, Billy conceives the idea of introducing it into the homes of the best people. His father is so angered by this news that he turns him out. Lilly says he is going on the road. He offends many society women by breaking in on intimate drawing-room teas to sell the perfume. Father receives complaints of Billy's actions and calls up Billy's boss and threatens to put him out of business if he doesn't send Billy away from New York.

While waiting on a train which has stopped at a water tank Billy is pulled off by a company of cowboys. He is taken to a ranch, run by Mildred. That night at the table Billy is disgusted by the table manners of the cowboys. His attitude is so critical that one of the men hits him in the face with mashed potatoes. The next morning Billy is forced to do housework. He discovers a letter written by his father to John Nebeker, the proprietor of the ranch, an old pal of Brooks, Sr. The letter explains that the old friend is to put Billy through a course of sprouts on the ranch.

Billy sees through the whole scheme, engages the cowboys in private conversation, and buys himself a cowboy outfit. There follow several events, in which Billy apparently shoots and wounds a number of the cowboys. The cattle are missing, an incident which has never happened before. Mildred is astounded to discover her mistake in Billy, but is forced to believe her eyes. She wires to his father to come and get his son, who has developed into a bandit. Mildred's father is then in Brooks' office. They are discussing the remarkable success the girl has had in managing Billy. Brooks decides to leave for the West at once in company with Nebeker.

As Mildred and the foreman start off with Brooks, Sr., and Nebeker in a buckboard, a band of masked cowboys sweeps down on them and carries them to a cave in the hills. A guard is left over them, while the masked men are outside fighting the posse which is supposed to have pursued them. The party in the cave finally makes their escape and sees the ground strewn with the dead. They finally arrive at the ranch house, which they find brilliantly lighted. A dance is in progress, and the hoax is apparent. Billy eventually succeeds in pacifying Mildred's natural resentment at the deception.

THE TRAIL OF HATE (Two Parts—April 28).—The cast: Lieut. Jack Brewer (Jack Ford); the Swede (Jack Lawton); Madge (Louise Granville); Captain Dana Holden (Duke Worne).

Lieutenant Jack Brewer of the Sixty-Seventh had risen from the ranks, but he was adored by his men. Some of his brother officers, notably the West Pointer, Captain Dana Holden, did not share this opinion. Madge and her father were on their way to the West, traveling by stage. Road agents held up the stage, and the 67th were called out to get them. In the skirmish which ensued Madge's father was killed, and she is protected by Lieutenant Brewer.

Jack Brewer after a month's furlough returns and finds that Madge has been made a servant at the fort. He has brought her some clothes, as she is in rags. Scandal is the result, so Jack promptly marries the girl to stop the talk.

On safely Brewer's wife, Madge begins to act strangely. She cares nothing for Jack, who she thinks has married her only out of pity. She carries on a flirtation with Holden, and sends him a message to say that she will meet him at seven that evening when Jack goes on duty. Jack leaves for duty at seven, but, returning for something forgotten, finds them together. A fight takes place between the two men.

A few years later Jack is the captain of a Constabulary in the Philippines. There is trouble with the Moros, and Jack and his troops are sent into the interior. Jack is informed that Holden and his former wife are traveling in the interior. It is true, and Holden has left his wife at the post while he goes on scouting duty. He is cut off from his men, and to save himself abandons his wife and the post and tries to make his way to Manila. The Moros make an attack on Fort Craig, and one of Jack's scouts finds Holden wounded, and takes him to the office of the Constabulary. Jack saves Madge from the Moros, and returns with her. There they find Holden. Madge begs Jack to continue to protect her, but he turns aside in disgust, throwing her off forever.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE VOICE ON THE WIRE (Episode 6, "The Death Warrant"—April 22).—The cast: Shirley (Ben Wilson); Polly (Neva Gerber); "Red" Warren (Francis McDonald); Dr. Reynolds (Jos. Girard); Carns (Frank MacQuarrie); Cronin (Howard Crampton); Short (Lou Short).

Shirley succeeds in breaking down the door and getting into the bedroom to Carns and Polly. A muffled figure jumps through the window and disappears. Wayne and Dorian, two detectives, watch the house. "Red" Warren also keeps guard. Shirley bends over the body of Carns and tries to restore him. Carns shows signs of returning consciousness. "Red" appears at the window and orders him to throw up his hands. As Shirley moves toward the door Wayne and Dorian step through. "Red" puts out the lights and a fight is begun in the dark. And while thus struggling the mysterious "Hand" is again working over Carns.

Meanwhile a crook waits in the road by an auto. Wayne grabs Polly and finally gets her into the auto, where "Red" joins them.

Cronin and Short manage to escape from the empty house, where they were confined by "Red's" men, and arrive on the scene as Polly is being put into the auto. Short springs onto the running-board, but is hit by "Red" and knocked off. "Red" shouts; "To the docks, quick!"

The house is aflame. Cronin and Short run in, and Short, frantically blowing his whistle, brings other officers, all of whom rush into the burning house. Shirley and Reynolds are soon out and are informed that "Red" has taken Polly to the docks. Suddenly Shirley remembers Carns and dashes back into the building only to find that the corpse had disappeared.

Shirley and the others race to the docks to save Polly, but arrive there just as the steamer is pulling out.

Polly is now unconscious on the steamer. Later "Red" insinuatingly remarks to a crook that she might accidentally fall overboard, and just then the wireless operator hands Warren a message which instructs him to "fix" Polly; that Shirley will be "gotten" on the train. The message is signed by "Laschlas. The men smile when they have read it.

Shirley and the others board a train, and that night when every one is in bed, Shirley being asleep, the mysterious "Hand" appears and starts down the passage toward his berth and attacks Shirley, who manages to save himself. In the morning he sends word to the ship to guard Polly's cabin.

THE VOICE ON THE WIRE (Episode Seven, "The Marked Room"—Two Parts—April 29).—The cast: John Shirley (Ben Wilson); Polly Marion (Neva Gerber); "Red" Warren (Francis MacDonald); Dr. Reynolds (Jos. Girard); Capt. Cronin (Howard Crampton); Short (Lou Short); Wayne (Willard Wayne); Dorian (Charles Dorian).

At the end of the last episode Polly Marion was in her cabin on board the steamer, where orders had been received to allow no one access to her. Red Warren tries to enter her room and is stopped by the guard. He claims to be her husband, but the man refuses to believe it.

On the dock, waiting for the steamer, Shirley is haunted by visions of the night. He cannot make up his mind whether he has dreamed the attack of the "Hand." He realized that his nerves are shot to pieces. Then he sees the steamer approaching in the distance. He is also seen, and the three crooks set out in the launch to signal "Red" that Shirley is waiting for them. The ship's officers see that the guarded men are being warned from the launch and start after them to make the arrest. Red runs to the upper deck, and jumps into the sea, while the two other men follow him. They manage to dodge the shots fired after them by the officers, and are soon picked up by the men in the launch.

When the ship docks, Shirley rushes on board to find Polly, and, entering her stateroom, takes her in his arms and kisses her. The officers are amused by his disregard for them, and when Reynolds and the others arrive, Shirley asks for congratulations upon his engagement. Cronin, however, will not shake hands, as he says that he believes Polly warned the crooks. He declares that he will clear up the mystery alone.

Several hours later, as the crooks sit around a table, the Hand appears at the phone. When Warren answers it, he hears that Shirley is at the Imperial Hotel, and the number of his room, also the number of Polly's.

Shirley has led Polly to the door of her room. Later he is startled by the ringing of his phone. The mysterious voice says that James Welsh will be the next victim, but not the last, and that he is to watch for the dawn. He exclaims: "The Voice on the Wire here!" When he asks the girl at the switchboard who called she says that his phone is out of order.

In a room in a house behind the hotel there is a light. Shirley sees it and watches it. We see a muffled figure in the corridor, which sneaks along and then fades until only the Hand remains. It makes a mark on Shirley's door. Shirley in his room is unable to sleep. He starts up when he hears Polly scream. He goes to her room and finds the bed unrumpled and no sign of the girl. He wonders if he is mistaken in thinking that she was there. Then all the lights go out. He calls on his phone, and when at last he is answered the girl says that all the lights are out there, too. He descends and asks if they have seen anyone leave the hotel. They say that no one has passed out. Polly's name is crossed out in the register. Shirley, bewildered and dazed, goes upstairs again. He hears groans and finds the doctor clutching his heart and muttering, "The Hand!" He says to him: "Polly is gone, and we were to have been married tomorrow!" The doctor promises to stand by him to the end.

When Helen is eating her lunch the iceman's little boy brings a lunchpail to his father. The iceman gives him the trinkets to play with, and he runs to Helen with them. VOGUE.

MASKED MIRTH (Two Parts—April 21).—The cast: An old inventor (Ed Laurie); his daughter (Lillian Hamilton); his helper (Ben Turpin); foreign spy (Eugene Shaw); queen of Apaches (Margaret Templeton); a government agent (Art Currier). Directed by Rolin Williamson.

Ed Laurie, a rotund and aged professor of chemistry, is the inventor of a gas bomb. This, when hurled into the camp of an enemy, will not kill; its victims are thrown into fits of laughter and are compelled to dance. When they drop from fatigue they are captured with ease.

Spies of a foreign government are trying to steal the plans of this remarkable weapon. Margaret Templeton is the leader of the band, who pose as Parisian Apaches. This band of criminals has a meeting place surrounded with all sorts of secret passages and trapdoors. Lillian Hamilton is the devoted daughter of the old chemist. Ben Turpin is the chemist's assistant.

One of the members of the band of Apaches is a hypnotist, and, through him, Miss Lillian is brought into the power of the spies. She steals the plans and hands them to the hypnotist. He is standing on the sidewalk below radiantly triumphant when Ben sees him from a window. While Ben is climbing out of the window Miss Templeton, from the roof above, drops a large potted plant on his head. Ben catches it in his hands, and he drops the plant on the hypnotist below, thus stunning him. Ben rushes down and secures the plans. He returns them to the old inventor and is highly praised.

The spies start a new tack, and get Ben in the hypnotist's power. He is sent to get the plans. The inventor's daughter puts blank papers in the receptacle and Ben returns with the blanks. He is treated unmercifully by the spies. He escapes, however, to find that the inventor and his daughter are bound hand and foot by the spies. The daughter is bound to the gas bomb. She bravely lights the bomb herself and is shot skyward. The bomb drops in the stronghold of the spies, and the entire group is set to dancing wildly. Ben secures nose appliances, hands them to the police, who are enabled to take the dancing prisoners to jail.

GAUMONT.

TOURS AROUND THE WORLD, No. 25 (April 24).—Moscow, the holy city of Russia, is pictured in all its magnificence. Here Russia as a great state was born; and here is the Kremlin, within whose walls the Czars were crowned. The massive castles are shown and some of the churches, chief of which are that of St. Basil, built in 1555 by Ivan the Terrible, who put out the eyes of the architect so that it could never be duplicated, and that of the Saviour, begun in 1813, to commemorate the disastrous retreat of Napoleon from Russia. There are entertaining street scenes showing the life of the people.

Sarajevo—the name means "city of palaces"—is the capital of Bosnia and the place where flashed the spark which touched off the greatest martial conflagration in the history of the world. These pictures were taken before the war, showing the conglomerate population of Serbo-Crotians, Jews, Turks, Gypsies and other lesser nationalities. There are a number of street pictures, then views of the Goats' Bridge, Turkish Cemetery, Jewish Temple, courtyard of the City Hall, booths of the bazaar and various industries of the people.

The third section of this reel takes spectators to Brest, a fortified seaport of Western France. The castle that was formerly the stronghold of the dukes of Brittany is now a garrison. The pictures include views of the arsenals, shipyards and gun foundries, principal streets, footbridges and Conquest Gate.

REEL LIFE NO. 52 (April (24).—So many are the subjects crowded into this reel that they can only be mentioned briefly. 'A' Tabloid Bungalow" shows how unneeded furniture is whisked out of sight and leaves the room free for living purposes. It is a development of life of California.

"Red Clay Workers of Barbados" pictures the natives of this island off the coast of South America engaged in working clay into pottery, an industry in which they are expert. The product of their skill is exported to other islands of the tropics.

"An Altiscope Rifle for Trench Warfare" shows the new method by which a rifle may be fired without exposing the soldier above the trench. It is an illuminating view of what science is doing to perfect warfare.

"Cargo Boats of Tomorrow" is the contribution of Gaumont's animated department. It explains how in the future the standard boat will be a vessel of 1,000 tons capacity with shallow draft, drawing so little water that torpedoes will go under it. It will carry two guns for protection when the submarine rises to shell it.

"Metal Spinning—a New Art in America" is exemplified by showing automobile lamps in process of manufacture. The reel concludes with interesting pictures of life in the Soudan, illustrating "Native Industries of the Senegalese."

During the festivities word is received that the mine in which the Count's fortune is invested, and also all the earnings of the people who have followed his guidance in the matter, is worthless. The people cry for revenge. The Count kills himself, the Baron breaks off his engagement, and only Slater, a man of the people, stands by Ann in her sorrow. They promise the people that the debt shall be paid, and partly to reward him for his loyalty and so they can both work to pay off the debt Ann marries Slater.

Ann and Slater, accompanied by his mother, a most jealous woman, come to America, and both work and save every way to raise the needed money. After a year Baron Moreno wearies of his love of the hour and writes to Ann asking her to flee with him, and later comes himself to America and appears at her house. Ann spurns him, but he takes her in his arms just as the mother-in-law comes into the room. When Slater returns his mother reports what she has seen. Ann is driven from the house and told she can never see her child again.

Earning her own living in a factory, Ann struggles along. The Baron discovers her whereabouts and proposes marriage, and Ann consents. Just before the wedding she is visited by a woman who tells Ann she is marrying a man who is already married.

Ann's child becomes sick and cries for her mother. Slater, convinced that the child will die unless her mother comes, goes after her. He arrives just as the Baron comes in and is confronted by the other woman. Incensed at an insulting remark thrown at Ann by the Baron, Slater attacks him and in the fight both men are fatally wounded.

Ann returns to Slater's house and finds his mother softened by the tragedy. The debt all paid, Ann, the mother and child return to the castle across the water where Ann finds waiting for her the minister whose love has remained true through all these years.

THE EASIEST WAY (Seven Parts—April).—The cast: Laura Murdock (Clara Kimball Young); Elfie St. Clair (Louise Bates); Willard Brockton (Joseph Kilgour); John Madison (Rockcliffe Fellowes); Annie (Cleo Desmond); Jim Weston (George Stevens); Burgess (Frank Kingdon); Nellie De Vere (Mae Hopkins); Jerry (Walter McEwan). Directed by Albert Capellani.

Laura Murdock is a young actress. Her husband, a drunkard, is killed by a fall. Laura goes to New York to get an engagement, and finds herself blocked at every turn by the petty jealousies and politics of the profession. Willard Brockton, a wealthy broker, has been asked to finance a production and has refused. He meets Laura and becomes interested, furnishes the producer with money, demanding in return that Laura be given the best role in the piece.

Eventually Brockton claims the customary reward of such assistance, although Laura holds out as long as possible. The following summer she goes to Denver for a stock engagement, and falls in love with John Madison, a newspaper writer. He cannot afford to marry, and Brockton, who comes West to take Laura back with him, sneers at the idea of his marrying the luxury-loving Laura. Laura promises to wait, however, and Brockton promises Madison that if Laura returns to him he will let Madison know.

Laura returns to New York, and Brockton's influence prevents her from getting an engagement. She reaches the end of her resources, and not hearing from Madison submits to what she regards the only course open, a renewal of her relations with Brockton. Brockton dictates a letter to Madison which Laura promises to mail, but she burns it instead.

Madison finds gold and hurries to New York to marry Laura. He discovers the facts of the situation, and Laura confesses that she burned the letter Brockton had promised to send. Deserted by both men she becomes desperate, and tries to fling herself into the dissipations of the night life of Broadway. She is disgusted, however, and attempts to end her life in the river. She is rescued and taken to a hospital. Madison is notified, and learns also of the fight she made to remain true to him. He hurries to her side just in time to let her know he understands and forgives, and she dies in his arms.

SHE (Five Parts—April 14).—The story of "She" begins 3,000 years ago, when Kallikrates, a young Egyptian priest, is killed by Ayesha when he refuses to abandon his young wife for her. His widow gives birth to a son, whom she charges to avenge his father's death. This solemn duty is passed on from generation to generation through 3,000 years. In the present era its fulfilment falls on Leo, a direct descendant of Kallikrates.

Leo sets out for the mysterious land of She. On landing in Egypt he meets Ustane, a native girl. She kisses him, thereby becoming his wife, according to the custom of the land. On entering the city with the girl, Leo and his companions try to stop a cannibal feast. Leo is wounded, and his companion, Holly, is taken before the queen. She is Ayesha, upon whom Leo has sworn vengeance. She connes to Holly that she has waited 3,000 years to be united with another reincarnation of her beloved priest.

Holly implores She to heal Leo's wound. She enters his cave and recognizes in him Kallikrates. Holly warns Leo the Queen is She. On recovering, Leo goes to Ayesha to fulfill his vow. Ustane accompanies him. The queen slays the girl and declares her love to Leo. The youth cannot resist the woman and falls at her feet.

She takes Leo to the cave of the Flame of Life to make him immortal. Ayesha bathes in the fire and urges Leo to follow. As he watches She a resplendent beauty suffuses her stately form. Then her fairness begins to fade and her form to shrivel. She emerges from the flame a hideous ape. Leo flees from the cavern. On reaching the city he meets Ballali, She's chief adviser. He warns Leo to escape, as the populace is aroused. With Holly he leaves the city and meets a band of hunters with whom he returns to civilization, his mission fulfilled.

For years Estrella bleeds Rodin. He tries in vain to establish proof of his innocence, but he is unsuccessful, and the woman keeps the upper hand. After some years Rodin meets Alice Carey, and a love springs up between them. Estrella reads of their engagement, and sends another blackmailing letter.

Rodin calls on her to plead with her. She refuses, and in desperation he switches off the lights and locks her in a secret room, where he leaves her. Her trunk, which has been packed for a journey, he gives to an expressman. It falls off the wagon into the river. As Estrella does not appear, and the trunk is found floating in the stream, Rodin is accused of her murder.

At the trial a host of evidence is brought up against him, and it seems to every one that he is certain of being convicted. But just when the jury is about to retire the judge instructs them that no verdict of guilty can be brought, as the body has not been found. On this technicality, which comes as a complete surprise to every one, including Rodin, the accused man is acquited.

He then goes to Alice to hear his "real sentence." She confesses that she believes him guilty of the murder. He releases her from the engagement, and goes to his home. A shot rings out in the library. The butler rushes in, to find his master dead.

GREATER VITAGRAPH.

SALLY IN A HURRY (Five Parts—April 16).—The cast: Sally (Lillian Walker); Walter (Don Cameron); Bill (Thomas Mills); Peter (William Shea); Aunt Mary (Mrs. West); Clara (Eulalie Jensen). Directed by Wilfrid North.

Sally, who works in a hashery and never gets a minute to herself, lives with her Aunt Mary, little brother Bobby and tiny sister Lucy. She cherishes a newspaper picture of Lord Richard, an Englishman, and takes his brother, Walter, to be the lord when she sees Walter in Pete's place, where she scuttles to and fro as waitress. She spills soup over "His Lordship," and later warns Walter against Bill, an old suitor of hers, who is trying to "work" Walter, thinking he has money, while Walter is really in America to make his own way.

Walter does not disillusion Sally as to his identity. She learns to worship him when he pays her humble home a visit, and she has a great time keeping him entertained. Later, Bill fixes up a scheme with Clara, a siren-like woman, who is really a female crook, to "cop" the lord's cash and show Sally where she gets off. Clara contrives to meet Walter, as if by accident, at the restaurant, and from that time on Sally mourns her lost romance, for Walter, thinking Clara is really the "lady" she pretends to be, pursues her and falls under her spell.

Sally even gives Walter her hoarded money, though he does not know it is her gift, when he, broken down and out of work, finds his steps lead him to the hash house. Sally is asked that night to take the place of a maid whose mother is ill, and so goes to help serve at Mrs. Astervleck's dinner. There, seeing Walter with Clara, she is unable to face them, and goes off to cry in a smoking room.

She sees Bill sneaking in through a window. He cuts the electric light wire, and, while the place is in darkness, Clara steals the hostess' necklace. Sally sees her at the window as she shows it to Bill. The two struggle over the loot, Clara retaining it. When the robbery is discovered, Sally denounces Clara, who is exposed. Walter becomes really "lord" on the death of his brother, and Sally agrees to be his bride.

GOD'S MAN (April—Nine Parts)—The cast: Arnold L'Hommedieu, "God's Man" (H. B. Warner); Mrs. L'Hommedieu, Arnold's mother (Kate Lester); Richard L'Hommedieu (Albert Tavernier); Paul L'Hommedieu (Stannope Wheatcroft); "Bertie" (Barbara Castleton); Eunice (Barbara Gilroy); Hans (Sydney Vorzimer); Archie Hartogensis (Edward Earle); Hartogensis, Sr., Archie's father (Harry Eytinge); Hugo Waldemar (Walter Hiers); John Waldemar, Hugo's father (William Frederics); "Bobbie" (Betty Bellairs); The Philosopher (Tom Borroughs); Mother Mybus (Maud De Vere); Sonia (Jean Stuart); "Pink," a "Son of Subterranea" and a distorter of Terpsichore's art (Jack Sherrill); "Beau," running mate of "Pink's" (Dan Jarrett); Cap'n Denny (Alfred Heming); Quinn, a curbstone philosopher (Bob McMillian); Roy Schmucke, a flowery product of the underworld (H. D. Southard).

Arnold L'Hommedieu, heir apparent to the Church of the Cross in the village of Havre de Grace on the north shore of Long Island, exemplifies his inherited traits of desire to aid his fellowmen by assuming the guilt of a college chum. It results in his expulsion from college along with his two fellow-townsboys, Archie Hartogensis and Hugo Waldemar.

Returning to the little town, the three young men are the subjects of town gossip and derision. Arnold's father, despite his admiration for the sacrifice which his son has made, decides that his second son, Paul, shall succeed him to the pastorate, and Arnold shall go to New York to begin pursuit of a business career. Hugo and Archie decide upon similar futures and soon the three are thick in the turmoil of the metropolis: Hugo at work in his father's wholesale drug concern; Archie in his uncle's office, and Arnold, a reporter of "The Argus."

Hugo becomes enamored of a "lady of the chorus." Archie and Arnold room together, tangling "business," with "society" with indifferent success, both socially and financially, until Arnold, commissioned by his editor to cover a certain wild dinner party given by the son of a candidate for Congress, discovers that it pertains to no other than Hugo. Arnold's inherited traits sway him and, refusing to report the story, he is dismissed from his position.

Here begins a close view of the bitter side of life, until, with his back to the brink of despair, Arnold seeks a room at a lodging hotel with sole intent of ending it all. He is thwarted by Sonia, one of the "scarlet host," and her pal, Eunice, who is being taught the "ways" by Sonia. Arnold hears the story told of how Eunice's brother, Hans, has been unjustly treated. Once again his inherited traits move him, and, determining to avenge the injustice, he goes to the offices of the lawyer who perpetrated the injustice, and demands a recompense on the boy's behalf.

Mistaking his intent for extortion, the lawyer seems to comply with Arnold's demand, while in reality he summons detectives. Arnold is arrested. Thrown into prison, he is liberated through the power of Hugo's father and secures a position with Waldemar, Sr., supplanting Hugo, who has incurred his father's enmity.

Arnold becomes accustomed to the life of a newer ease and opulence and subconsciously he drifts Broadwayward. He makes the discovery that a major part of Waldemar's business is done in the illegal trading in opium, and with attention to the gayer night life he soon picks up again with his friends, Sonia and Eunice, who have become "pampered playthings of the cabaret." He tells of his new "clean life" and he hints at his "business."

"Pink" and "Beau," friends of the "ladies," offer a ready suggestion to Arnold, and that night he is introduced to Mother Mybus, from whom he receives an order for a shipment of opium. Realizing the depths to which he is sinking, Arnold determines to return to Havre de Grace, to rid himself of the taint of the city and to devote his days to writing those things of the wayward city with which he has become familiar.

While rowing he happens upon a cabin on the end of a peninsula near Havre de Grace, where there lives an old philosopher. Arnold unravels the tale of his city life to the philosopher, and tells of his decision to become a writer. The philosopher points out to him the fallacy of such a decision and the fact that if he would write to teach the world he must return to learn more of the city's madness. Arnold is determined in his resolution and refused the advice. During the next few days Captain Denny, having been referred to Arnold, unfolds a plan to smuggle opium from Yucatan. Arnold realizes that taking this one chance will assure him sufficient money to continue his writing and the pact is made with Captain Denny.

He returns to New York, seeks "Pink" and explains the plan. The aid of Mother Mybus is solicited and funds for the expedition raised. In the interim, Archie through wild-cat speculation is on the verge of bankruptcy and Hugo has lost all in his theatrical ventures. They apply to Arnold for aid and once more there arises within him the determination to aid his fellow-man. They are taken in on the smuggling plot. Weeks later Captain Denny reports by wireless. Arnold, Archie, Hugo, "Pink" and "Beau" leave New York for the deserted shooting lodge overlooking Havre de Grace harbor, which is to be their rendezvous and where Captain Denny will slip in under cover of night.

Roy Schmucke, a product of the underworld and a favorite with Hugo's sweetheart, "Bobbie," learns from her of the proposed smuggling expedition. He unveils the plot to two detectives, who leave for Havre de Grace, determined to thwart Arnold's plan and to capture the plunder for their own gain. They explain the arrival of the ship that night and appear to Waldemar, Sr., asking him to market the product for them. Accompanied by Waldemar, Sr., they leave to surround the shooting lodge. Arnold, Hugo and "Pink" are designated to meet the ship and Archie and "Beau" are left behind. Archie becomes crazed through excessive smoking of opium, and hearing a noise outside the lodge shoots blindly into the dark, killing Hugo's father. Archie and "Beau" are dragged before a Justice of the Peace, Archie's father, where warrants are issued for their arrest before the realization dawns upon Archie's father that his own son is the culprit. Arnold, "Pink" and Hugo, returning from their attempt to reach Captain Denny's ship, are ambushed by the detectives, and Hugo is mortally wounded. Arnold makes his escape, and after a struggle with wind and wave finally succeeds in getting near the philosopher's cabin. In a moment of wild delirium he drops to his knees praying to God above to show him the light. He is rescued more dead than alive by the philosopher, taken into the cabin and there tells the tale of misery and horror which he has been through.

As is explained by the philosopher, he has reached his Gethsemane and before him there lies the choice of two paths: the one to escape and change his name and have the world's respect; and the other Calvary and the surrender of himself to the law. Arnold's decision is definite and, bidding goodbye to the philosopher, with the light of righteousness beaming from him, he goes forth to pay his debt to "civilization," a credit to the name he bears—L'Hommedieu, "God's Man."

DARKEST RUSSIA (Peerless—Five Parts—April 23).—The cast: Ilda Barosky (Alice Brady); Alexis Nazimoff (John Bowers); Constantine Karischeff (J. Herbert Frank); Ivan Barosky (Norbert Wicki); Barosky (Borie Korlin); Count Paul Nazimoff (Jack Drumier); Nicholai (Herbert Barrington); Katherine Karischeff (Kate Lester); Olga (Lillian Cook); Grand Duke (Frank De Vernon). Directed by Travers Vale.

Because of her father's death at the hands of several Russian soldiers, Ilda Barosky, a young Jewish girl, living in Russia, is prejudiced against all government. She studies music at the Russian Conservatory, where she meets and falls in love with Alexis Nazimoff, who reciprocates her love. Count Paul Nazimoff, his father, is a member of the Court circle.

Constantine Karischeff, Minister of Police, is ruled by his wife, Katherine, cruel in her craving for power. Their daughter, Olga, is in love with Ivan Barosky, Ilda's brother, who is fast becoming a revolutionist. Through the encouragement of the Baroness Vondell, Olga and Ivan are married, but keep their secret from Olga's parents. Count Nazimoff has Alexis transferred to a regiment at a frontier post when he learns that his son is paying court to Ilda.

Katherine and Count Nazimoff arrange a marriage between their children, Olga and Alexis. Nazimoff gives a reception to celebrate his son's return, and incidentally his betrothal to Olga.

Ilda's music master, engaged to play at the reception, is taken ill, and Ilda goes in his stead. When she learns that the reception is being given in honor of Alexis' betrothal, she is heartbroken. Alexis is nonplussed when he is told that the reception is given in honor of his betrothal to Olga.

Asked to play "God Save the Czar," Ilda refuses. An officer announces that her brother is a revolutionist, and when she again refuses to play she is whipped. Alexis protects her.

The Nihilists, anxious to enlist the aid of Ivan, meet at the Barosky home. Katherine details a man to follow Alexis and report to her. The man shadows him to Ilda's home. Olga arrives at the house and tells them that if her marriage to Ivan were known, it would mean death to her husband and a living death for herself. Alexis, realizing that a match with him is as distasteful to Olga as it is to himself, decides to shoulder all the blame, and writes to Olga's parents, breaking the engagement. The police break into the house and arrest Ilda, Alexis and Olga, together with the Nihilists. Being out of the house at the time Ivan is the only one who still retains his freedom.

When Katherine reads Alexis' letter terminating the engagement with her daughter, she decides to punish him and Ilda, whom she believes to be the cause of it. The Grand Duke orders the removal of Constantine Karischeff from the office of Minister of Police, putting in his place Count Nazimoff. Karischeff's functions as Chief are to cease at midnight. Alexis and Ilda are brought before him and his wife.

Ten minutes before midnight the Grand Duke's order is handed to Karischeff, and Katherine urges haste in punishing the two culprits. She is ignorant of the fact that Olga, her daughter, is one of those arrested with the Nihilists. Alexis and Ilda are sentenced to ten years in Siberia.

Count Nazimoff takes over his duties and pleads mercy for Alexis. Katherine will not permit Karischeff to revoke the sentence. Nazimoff asks that Ilda and Alexis be brought before him. When she enters they are astounded to see that it is Olga. When her parents plead for mercy Nazimoff refuses to listen, sentencing her to ten years in Siberia, as his son had been sentenced.

In Siberia Ilda is known as the Angel of Mercy, through her good offices to the sick. She is granted a pardon. Katherine has heard of Ilda's pardon and is determined to make the girl suffer. She orders that Ilda be seized and brought to her. When a soldier reports to escort her to her home, Ilda urges Olga to take her place and leave the prison, saying that Ivan waited for her, and that she, Ilda, preferred to stay in Siberia to be with Alexis. Olga agrees, and on the way she is seized by her mother's henchmen, who are ignorant of the substitution. She is brought before her parents, who are overjoyed.

Alexis and Ilda are captured after an attempted escape. Count Nazimoff rushes in with a pardon, which he has succeeded in securing for both his son and Ilda, and rescues them from the rifle shots of the prison guards. Reconciliations ensue between Ivan, Olga and her parents, as well as Alexis and his father.

THE GREAT SECRET (Chapter 16, "The Crafty Hand"—Two Parts—April 23).—Strong gives the phial containing the drug that is to restore the Great Master to consciousness and life to Sears for safe keeping. They go to the home of the Great Master. The servants, who are acquainted with the plans to trap Dr. Zulph, await their arrival, and the housekeeper telephones to Zulph that the Great Master is dead. Zulph hears the news and smiles. He decides to verify it, and goes to the Great Master's home. The servants show him the body on the bed. He applies all the necessary tests, and is convinced that the Great Master is dead. Sears and Strong, who are in hiding, listen to his conversation and watch him as he departs, feeling that he has now become the leader of the criminal band.

Strong goes to Beverly's home and tells of the happenings and of Jane Warren's accident. They decide to devote some attention to Jane and visit her in the hospital. Zulph is unable to convince his henchmen that the Great Master was dead, until they had seen him in the casket. He takes them to the tomb where the body is lying, and they are satisfied. The other members of the Secret Seven Council receive the news of his death from his servant.

As first part of the plot to get Zulph, the hospital physician in charge telephones to him that, before losing consciousness, Jane Warren had asked that if any operation was necessary to permit Zulph to perform it. Sears and his assistant visit the hospital and complete all arrangements to trap Zulph.

Zulph arrives and the nurse escorts him to Jane Warren's bedside, where he makes a diagnosis. As he looks at her bandaged head he thinks of his past and how he has tried to make her do his bidding. In her delirium Jane mutters, "I must tell, I will tell." Zulph, fearing exposure, decides that he will perform the operation in such a manner that her death will be certain.

Meantime, Sears and his assistant have arranged their trap for Zulph, and have hidden in clothes lockers in the room where he dons his surgeon's garb. Strong, Beverly and the real surgeon of the hospital, Dr. Morgan, are in hiding elsewhere. The patient is taken from the bed to the operating table. Zulph, as he washes his hands before putting on his antiseptic gloves, pauses to look in the mirror to see if his face betrays any weakness. He rests his hands on the basin, and then goes to make the operation.

The moment he has gone Sears and his assistant emerge and take the finger prints he has left on the basin. They seem to have something extremely interesting, for both express confidence. At the operating table Dr. Zulph looks carefully at the nurses and prepares to operate in such a manner that Jane Warren will pass into eternity.

"GOD'S LAW AND MAN'S (Five parts—April 23).—The cast: Ameia (Viola Dana); Dr. Claude Drummond (Robert Walker); Jack Alston, English commissioner in India (Augustus Phillips); Kunda Ram (Henry Hallam); Major-General Dennison (Frank Currier); Olive Dennison (Marie Adell); Earl of Hetherington (George A. Wright); Lord Charles Drummond (Floyd Buckley). Directed by John H. Collins.

Claude Drummond, a young army surgeon, is stationed in India. His friend, Jack Alston, is commissioner for the English government at a neighboring post. Alston is visiting Claude when a young Hindu girl rushes in and claims their protection. It is Ameia, a girl of mixed English and Indian blood, who has been intended for the corrupt rites of the temple of Krishna.

Kunda Ram, a native lawyer, points out to Claude that the only way to save her is to buy the girl for a wife. At first he determines that she shall be his wife only in name, but he falls in love with her.

Lord Charles Drummond, Claude's brother, dies and Claude is summoned as next heir. He leaves Ameia in India. When he reaches home he finds that his father expects him to marry Olive Dennison. Claude's native marriage is not recognized in English law. Olive and Jack Alston are in love, and have been secretly engaged, but Olive and Claude bow to the wishes of their people.

Kunda Ram, who has been educated in England, reads the announcement and determines to make capital out of it. He forges a letter from Claude, which asks that he bring Ameia at once to England. As Jack Alston is just leaving for England on a furlough he volunteers to take Ameia with him.

Alston takes Ameia to Claude, who is filled with consternation. He finally sends her to make her home with his old nurse, and preparations are made for his marriage to Olive. Claude is thoroughly miserable, and finally decides to make a clean breast of the affair. He arranges a meeting with his father, the Earl, with Major-General Dennison, Olive and Jack, and tells them the whole story, saying he has decided to take Ameia for his wife by the English law.

Ameia, however, has decided to commit suicide and rid her beloved Claude of her presence. She takes a native poison, and has already become unconscious when she is discovered. Being familiar with the working of the poison, Claude is able to give her an antidote. Major

Max knows all will be off between them if she sees him in the morning wearing an evening suit. A taxicab is standing at the curb, the chauffeur having gone to get his breakfast. The driver's linen duster is lying on the front seat. Hastily Max leaps into the taxi, dons the chauffeur's long coat and cap, and is sitting at the wheel when his girl and her mother catch sight of him.

There is nothing left for Max to do but admit that he owns the big limousine. His girl wants to ride. Max cannot drive. The girl desires to drive, and they speed off. The morning is spent in riding, then the party drives to the girl's home. She and her mother leave Max and his machine. He cannot drive away. William Manning Skinner, having attained a junior partnership in the firm of McLaughlin & Perkins, aspires to higher things. He figures that by working for himself he can become the Napoleon of the industrial world.

He resigns his position and sets up in business for himself on a big scale. Skinner runs onto the verge of bankruptcy. He neglected to note that the prestige of the old-established firm he left had been largely responsible for his past success.

Does he confess his failure to Honey, his adoring little wife? No! He informs her casually he is making money so fast he cannot count it. Honey confides to Mrs. McLaughlin, who in turn tells her husband.

McLaughlin and Perkins decide they have made a tremendous mistake in letting Skinner get out of the firm. So it happens that just as Skinner is preparing to go into bankruptcy—a miserable failure—the partners make him a staggering offer to become again a member of their firm.

It was Skinner's bluff that did it, coupled with Honey's unfailing belief in her husband's Napoleonic might.

He falls under the notice of three brothers who think he is the son of the man responsible for the death of their mother. They assassinated Howland's father, and his body is dragged for hundreds of miles over the frozen trails so it might be viewed by those familiar with the tragedy and the mother's fate.

There is a sister of the three brothers who, as an infant, was supposed to be in the room when her mother met her tragic death. Fate decrees that even while the brothers are plotting to kill the young engineer their sister meets him, falls in love with him, and, through her assistance, balks the oath of vengeance taken by her brothers. She is assisted by a half-breed, who loves her, but sacrifices this love that she may be happy with the young engineer.

It is necessary that the young railroad builder penetrate to the extreme North, and it is then his new-found sweetheart points out to him that this will be "the danger trail"—that capture, torture and finally death will beset him at every step.

When Patria brought General Nogi back across the border to his own lines and then dropped him dead she forced the issue to a climax. Baron Huroki arrived just as the dead body of General Nogi fell to the ground and immediately ordered an invasion at daybreak.

The Japanese forces, well trained and ready for business, followed by Mexican cavalry, started for the border. At the bridge was a small force of Patria's men. They put up a gallant fight and held the invading forces back for some time. It seemed as though they would be able to successfully resist, but the invaders were too much for the gallant band, and they were at last forced to retreat. But they were soon overpowdered by the onrushing hordes, until only one was left to defend the flag. Gallantly sticking to the post of his beloved Stars and Stripes, he, too, was soon shot down, and Patria was forced to rely on her men in the rear, who had intrenched themselves to await the attack.

Patria, leaving her fiance, Donald Parr, in command, ascended in her aeroplane in order to watch the movements of the enemy and signal them to Parr. The invasion then settled down to an artillery duel, and just before nightfall Patria was attacked by an enemy plane, which she put out of business. She then descended to confer with Parr and prepare for any eventualities.

Peter Hale, bent on marrying the girl of the double cross, because he loves her and also because his inheritance depends on it, goes with Philippa Brewster to Bentley's hotel in the city. With a wood-burning instrument she cuts a hole in the door of Bentley's room. From above Peter lets himself down a fire hose and arrives just as Bentley's assistant has seized Philippa's hand as she put it through the opening. She is able to escape, and Peter drops the hose down over the fire escape so that it looks as though the intruder had come up instead of down.

Philippa's father shows the safe in which he keeps the papers pertaining to Philippa's birth. Planning to steal them, Bentley figures without The Masked Stranger. He and Peter overcome Bentley's assistant, and, as Bentley hands the papers out the window, it is Peter who receives them. Hubert Brewster arrives on the scene in time to hold up the Stranger, who Bentley claims is the thief. A few minutes later a policeman enters the house, handcuffs the Stranger and leads him away to an automobile. Who was the policeman?

THE HUNTING OF THE HAWK (Astra—Five Parts—April 22).—The cast: Desselway (William Courtenay); Diana Curran (Marguerite Snow); Wrenshaw (Robert Clugston). Directed by George Fitzmaurice.

While her father was working on the plates, Wrenshaw, the supposed treasury man, made love to Diana, and they were married, but on the morning of the marriage the secret service raided the rooms of Diana's father, and in the ensuing fight her father was killed and she believed that she had killed a man herself.

Arriving at the country estate, she found that Wrenshaw, whom she had left the day after her marriage, was employed as secretary to her mistress' husband. Also Desselway was invited for the house party. Then things began to happen around a necklace. Wrenshaw's gang were among the servants. Desselway secured the necklace by force. PARAMOUNT PICTURES CORP.

SLEEPING FIRES (Famous Players—Five arts—April 16).—The cast includes Pauline Frederick, Thomas Meighan, John Sainpolis, Helen Dahl, Joseph Smiley and Maury Stewart.

Edwin Bryce is in love with his secretary, Helen King, and wants to get rid of his wife so that he can marry again. Zelma Bryce, his wife, refuses to grant him a divorce, saying it is against her religion.

There is a strike going on at this time among the workers in a manufacturing concern of which her husband is the president. The strike leaders gather in the streets and a riot starts. Mrs. Bryce passes in her automobile and sees a strikebreaker handling one of the girls roughly. In behalf of the girls who are employed in the factory Mrs. Bryce goes to the magistrate's court. There she meets a young lawyer, Robert Gray.

During her conversation with him she makes known conditions of her matrimonial relations, which, shortly, result in a divorce. Wishing to gain possession of their little boy, she appeals to Gray for help. She finally steals the boy from the house. Her husband secures the service of a detective to bring him back.

Mrs. Bryce, going again to the house to get the boy, meets Miss King with her husband. A quarrel follows in which she kills her husband accidentally. The only witnesses are the detective and Miss King. Mrs. Bryce is forced to swear that she killed her husband because she is in love with Gray.

At the trial, which comes later, it is sworn that she came to the house purposely to kill her husband. Gray defends her and later produces witnesses who completely vindicate her.

IN OLD INDIA (Burton Holmes Travel Picture—April 16).—From Jaipur to Agra and Calcutta is a wonderful trip, and Burton Holmes shows some of the quaintest and queerest sights in the world, among them the funeral of a rich man of India. This may sound sad, but from all outward appearances the gorgeous procession of floats makes one think it was Mardi Gras Day. Next he takes you for a ride on the back of an elephant.

After going through numerous other novel adventures in Agra, the reel winds up by showing the world-famous Taj Mahal, the loveliest building in the world, erected 300 years ago as the tomb of a much loved wife, by Shah Jehan. After seeing Taj Mahal you go on to world-famous Calcutta, thus ending the trip.

PARAMOUNT-BRAY PICTOGRAPH (No. 63—April 16).

The Submarine Mine Layer.—In this reel the operation of a submarine mine layer is shown. Every detail of this ingenious craft is depicted through animated drawings from the pen of J. F. Leventhal. This film is the first of a series to be released in Paramount-Bray-Pictographs, showing the remarkable engines of war perfected by the warring nations in the past few years, and will demonstrate the necessity of the United States preparing now for any emergency that might be in store for it.

Ye Old Time Coon Hunt.—One of the essentials to the hunt is a pack of trained dogs, and these, followed in the dim early morning light by the hunters, set out on the trail into the forest. When the coon is treed one of the hunters climbs and dislodges him, and the dogs do the rest.

The film taken in the mountains of South Carolina is particularly picturesque, and the cameraman found opportunity to get touches of real native life in this out-of-the-way section.

Abalone Pearl Fishing.—The Abalone oyster, in which these pearls are found, makes its home under huge rocks. The fishing grounds are located far out in the ocean, and make pearl fishing extremely hazardous. The picture is remarkable, and cannot be duplicated, for the industry is closely guarded.

Picto Puzzle by Sam Loyd.—And now we have the Picto-puzzle, a novelty recently introduced through the Bray Studios, Inc. These puzzles appear in animated form, and are originated by Sam Loyd, one of the world's greatest puzzel experts. Each installment of the puzzles is divided into three parts under separate headings, and are animated by the best men in this business. This picture contains three puzzles under the heading of "Found in a Butcher Shop."

THE LONESOME CHAP (Pallas—Five Parts—April 19).—The cast includes Louise Huff, House Peters, John Burton, Eugene Pallette, J. Park Jones, Senor Buzzi and Betty Johnson.

Stuart Kirkward, a wealthy miner, has built a magnificent house in preparation of his marriage to Peggy Carter, who elopes on the eve of her wedding with George Rothwell, a mining promoter, who is already married. At the station they meet Rothwell's wife, who tells Peggy the truth about him. Peggy in endeavoring to escape from the unpleasant scene rides away on her horse, only to be followed by Rothwell. Both meet with an accident—are hurled to their doom over a steep cliff.

Just before this, Stuart had assumed the guardianship of a little daughter of a friend of his, and in connection with the accident he finds himself with the girl on his hands. He sends her away to boarding school, where she meets the son of George Rothwell, the man who had eloped with Stuart's intended bride.

When the girl, whose name is Renee, comes back from school to her guardian, he finds that she has grown to be a full-fledged lady, and begins to feel more than a fatherly affection for her. Some time later, at a house party, Stuart is led to believe that she loves the son of George Rothwell, and, although bearing in mind that he is the son of the man who was his bitterest enemy, he decides to give the boy a chance. It is here that he makes the great discovery that, instead of Rothwell, Jr., it is he whom Renee loves. All the past is forgotten and they turn their thoughts to the future.

THE BUTCHER BOY (Arbuckle Comedy—Two Parts—April 23).—The cast: The butcher boy (Roscoe ("Fatty") Arbuckle); the clerk (Al St. John); the cashier (Josephine Stevens); the village pest ("Buster" Keaton); the proprietor (Arthur Earle); principal of seminary (Agnese Neilson).

Fatty Arbuckle is a butcher boy working in a small town country store where they sell everything from blankets to fire escapes. He falls in love with the cashier, who is the daughter of the proprietor, and she, in return, has eyes for no one else. The careless clerk of the store resents the attentions being paid her by Fatty, and informs the old man.

He keeps his "weather" eye on them both, and one day discovers Fatty sending her mental love messages, and forbids him to ever speak to her again. But Fatty is undaunted, and finds a way. Fatty also learns of the careless clerk's love for the girl, and when the latter objects to Fatty's love making they have a fight which ruins the store and ends in the old man sending the girl to a seminary.

Fatty resolves to win the girl of his heart, and, disguised as her cousin, gains admittance to the place, and, while having the time of his life, he is confronted with his hated rival, also dressed as a girl, who, with the village pest and another schemer, have decided to kidnap the daughter. "Luke" discovers the plot, and in his own particular way rounds the gang up, who are held at bay by the principal of the school while Fatty runs away with the girl to the nearest clergyman.

BALLADS AND BOLOGNA (Klever Komedy—April 20).—Vic, a delicatessen storekeeper, has his heart and hands full gathering in the money that his wife, a high-brow, spends for Ibsen, Thoreau, toy dogs and fine clothes. While Vic is busy getting the money his wife is just as busy trying to find ways to get rid of it. She goes in for all sorts of cults and "groups," and whenever Vic gets a chance to get home he finds a lot of long-haired men and short-haired women lounging around, devouring his food and drink and using his tobacco and furniture. His pet pipes and chairs are usually appropriated by some unconventional Bohemian who is so temperamental that Mrs. Vic will not allow Vic to disturb him. Vic finally makes an issue of it, with the result that Mrs. Vic tells him he has never given her evidence of being able to influence anyone's mind or thoughts.

Vic picks up a newspaper and finds the following ad: "Lessons in Hypnotism; Success Guaranteed; Complete Course, $10. Professor Hipp, 32 East Eighth St." An idea strikes Vic, and that is if he can only hypnotize his wife. He decides to try it and sets off to visit Prof. Hipp that night. He arrives at Hipp's and explains his mission. Hipp puts him through the course and, collecting his ten, gives Vic the books on hypnotism and he starts off home to begin on his wife. Before he goes, however, he tries it out on Hipp himself and strange enough—it works. So elated is Vic that he rushes out of the room leaving the professor in a trance.

As he leaves the building a hold-up man comes along and tries to make Vic come across. Vic makes a few signs at him and puts him under the spell and makes him hand him all his booty. A policeman sees this, and coming to the scene tries to arrest Vic, who puts him under the spell also and makes the holdup man wear the policeman's clothes and arrest him.

Vic arrives home just as his wife is getting ready for another musicale. She complains to Vic that the workmen are so slow, and he tells her not to worry, and puts them under the spell, too. In no time they have the place in tip-top shape. The guests arrive for the musicale, and Vic informs his wife that she will sing like she has never sung before. He puts her under a spell and she starts to sing "Asleep in the Deep." As she reaches the word "Beware" she gets stuck and cannot go any further. She keeps repeating, "Beware, beware," etc. Vic realizes that she is under the spell, but he cannot bring her out of it.

Her continual yelling of the word "Beware" starts the neighbors to throwing anything they can, but it is of no avail. Vic rushes back to the professor for help.

On arriving there he finds the professor still under the spell as he left him. He tries to break it, but he cannot, so he picks up the professor, places him on a nearby pushcart and wheels him to his home. On arrival Vic finds his wife still singing "Beware." After getting the professor in he finds that he cannot arouse him, and then it dawns on Vic that he has the book on hypnotism in his pocket. Getting it out, he locates the instructions on how to bring the subject out of the spell and immediately puts it into action. It works and Vic brings everybody back to life. Vic's wife then and there promises never to sing ballads again, and she promises to stick with him selling bologna.

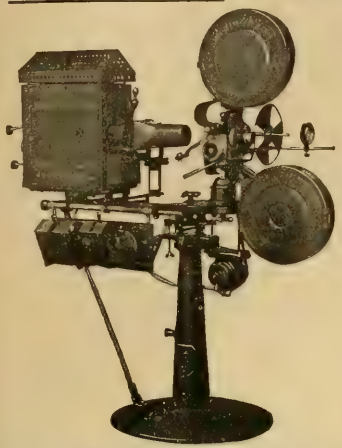
THE IMPROVED MODEL
MOTIOGRAPH

Motor-drive
$305.00
complete



—IN PERFORMANCE

It can boast of clear, steady pictures on a long or short throw; its simplicity is spoken of by all its operators.

The Exhibitor knows that the installation of MOTIOGRAPHS insures him of perfect projection from the very start—NOT trouble for weeks; such as freezing of certain parts of the mechanism, etc.

—ON LOW MAINTENANCE COST

You don't find die cast or bronze gears or soft bearings on the MOTIOGRAPH. Every part is made from selected material—parts most subject to wear receive a Special Heat Treatment and with ordinary use the MOTIOGRAPH will outwear all other projectors.

—SERVICE

With each MOTIOGRAPH goes a year's guarantee and should the machine with no apparent cause become out of adjustment you may send the mechanism to the factory—it will be put in good working order with not one cent of cost to you.

In buying a MOTIOGRAPH you get the best—remember you can't get a better projector even if you pay three times the price of the MOTIOGRAPH.

THE MOTIOGRAPH REPRESENTS THE ESSENCE OF SIMPLICITY, STRENGTH and DURABILITY.

One week ago Hallberg surveyed the theatre and recommended Hallberg's new stunt:

Two 20th Century MOTOR GENERATORS

TO-DAY, ONE WEEK LATER, KEENEY'S THEATRE STARTS FEATURES WITH THE NEW "TWIN UNIT" INSTALLATION.

THE IDEAL OF PERFECT PROJECTION—A PERFECT CHANGE-OVER WITHOUT SWITCHES

Gives independent ampere control for each Motion Picture Machine, adjustable with controller in front of operator.

So arranged that the combined ampere capacity of both motor generators can be delivered to either machine when more brilliant light is desired on the screen.

This "HALLBERG STUNT" gives constant D.C. service and does away with the installation of the usual A.C. Emergency Transformer.

This "HALLBERG STUNT" also appealed to Carr & Shadd, Reading, Pa., and they are installing two 30 to 70 Amp. "HALLBERGS" for their new house.

PROGRAM POPULARITY

Beginning With the Fans It Registers In the Box Office As PROFIT

THOUSANDS of Exhibitors testify to the excellence of the Universal Program Service by continuing its use in the face of the fiercest competition the industry has ever known. The Universal Program has rescued hundreds of Exhibitors from financial slavery—due to a mistaken notion that features at any price would get the crowds and the money. The people have registered their dislike of features by patronizing the program houses where they can enter the theatre at any time and not have to look at the show backwards. You can profit by the experience of these successful Exhibitors by hooking up with the Universal Program Service.

Special Releases on the Universal Program Week of May 14

Here are subjects played by stars and strong supporting casts that you can book and make your house the most popular in your section. Released on the regular service they can also be booked separately.

A Submarine Spasm

Joker Comedians Do a Burlesque of "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea"

DARINGLY original and screamingly funny is the latest Joker contribution in the comedy field. It is a broad burlesque of the Universal's stupendous spectacular drama, "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," and in every conceivable way it outdoes all previous comedy burlesques made for the screen. The fake submarine; the crazy diving suits; the "Follies Cafe" at the bottom of the ocean; the morning delivery of milk and the daily paper at the door of the under-water boat; the wild woman who lives in a hut with a grand piano and every element of luxury—these are a few of the wildly absurd and laughable stunts, situations and scenes that will make this picture the talk of the world of moving pictures. Gale Henry as an East Indian Princess and William Franey as Captain Cremo of the silly submarine have the opportunity of their lives to display their peculiar brand of fresh comedy. The title in itself will attract a lot of attention. It is "The Cross-Eyed Submarine, or 20,000 Peaks Under the Sea." Book this and boost it hard.

Mystery Masterpiece Makes Money

Exhibitors Report Crowds at all Episodes of "The Voice on the Wire" Serial

PICTURES that are popular advertise themselves. Once you put on a serial that has the life, punch and vitality of "The Voice on the Wire," the people will talk about it enough to insure you good business at every episode. This latest Universal serial has been called by the public, by Exchange men and by Exhibitors the best serial the Universal has ever released. That is high praise, because the Universal has put out the biggest serial successes in the history of that popular form of entertainment. It is the supreme excellence of Universal serials that makes multi-part subjects popular. In spite of the flivver serials that have flooded the market during the past year, the Universal has scored success after success, because Exhibitors know that the name Universal on a serial means a picture that will get the money. "The Voice on the Wire" is founded on the famous novel of the same name, which was written by Eustace Hale Ball, who novelized that great success, "Traffic in Souls," and others. It has to do with a series of mysterious events, each of which is preceded by a mysterious warning coming from a strange and ghostly "voice on the wire" and over a disconnected telephone. Ben Wilson, the popular Universal star, plays John Shirley, a scientific investigator, who, in opposition to the Chief of Detectives, attempts to solve the mystery. His leading woman is beautiful Neva Gerber and they are assisted by Joseph Girard and a huge and brilliant company. With each episode the mystery grows under the capable direction of Stuart Paton, who directed that masterly undersea drama, "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea." Book "The Voice on the Wire" and boost it hard before showing the first episode. After that you will have no difficulty in keeping your house packed on each episode night. Write your nearest Universal Exchange for full particulars, ad props, etc.

Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber in "The Voice on the Wire."

Always first to consider the real needs of every class of Exhibitor, the mighty Universal has prepared a distinct novelty release for those theatre managers who do not care to run a serial but who realize the desirability of a form of entertainment that will bring continuous business. This consists of seven powerful two-reel dramas, built around a central character, but EACH A COMPLETE STORY IN ITSELF. The series is founded on the popular "Yorke Norroy" stories by the noted author, George Bronson Howard, which were published in a popular fiction magazine of tremendous circulation a short time ago. Mr. Howard, who wrote the literary sensation, "God's Man," and who is a playwright, novelist and globe trotter of note, directed the entire series and has shown the inner workings of the Secret Service in these perilous times in a manner to insure your patrons seeing every episode after seeing the first. They will want to see them all after seeing one. That's the idea on which you can cash in. The leading character is played by Kingsley Benedict, supported by a different woman star in each drama. Millions of people have read the stories and now eagerly await this powerful picturization. Get full particulars from your nearest Universal Exchange.

"Who Wins?" From "The Perils of the Secret Service."

Popular Subjects Please the People

Unprecedented Success of Universal Screen Magazine Due to Originality and Careful Editing

THOUGH the Universal Screen Magazine was originally intended for a twice-a-month release, it jumped into such instantaneous and overwhelming popularity that after the third release it was put out once a week to meet the popular demand. Careful editing and long experience in feeling the amusement public pulse enabled the editors to present such subjects as pleased from the very start. This week's subjects include among others "An Ostrich Farm —showing 300 of these awkward but beautiful birds." "Building Auto Bodies—Milady selects an exclusive design." "Paper Bag Cooking—demonstrated by an expert." "Newest inventions for the household—a combined lamp and phonograph." "Miracles in Mud." Sculpture made before your astonished eyes. Every issue is greeted with the deepest appreciation. Everyone in the moving picture business has heard scores of people express their preference for this form of entertainment as against the average dramas, etc. You all know that the people will go to see news pictures like the Universal Animated Weekly and Magazine pictures like the Universal Screen Magazine when they will not go across the street to see anything else. Wise Exhibitors all over the country are taking advantage of this preference and showing both these great one-reelers and boosting them hard every week. There is always plenty of opportunity to do this. Any Universal Exchange will always be glad to give you the necessary advance information to enable you to put these great subjects over in the way that their merit deserves. Send for free descriptive booklet—tells you what you want to know about this one-reel feature that made good in a day. Write your nearest Universal Exchange today or address the UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE, 1600 Broadway, New York.

"The White Feather Volunteer"

Two-reel war drama based on the slacker difficulties of English enlistment. Featuring Rupert Julian and Elsie Jane Wilson. Produced by Rupert Julian.

"Court Martialed" A crackerjack three-reel production, featuring Allen Holubar, Frances Nelson, Hobart Henley and William Welsh. Produced by Stuart Paton. A gripping three-reel picture that will go over big.

"If My Country Should Call" Dorothy Phillips gives a wonderful performance in "If My Country Should Call," and is supported by a brilliant company, including Lon Chaney, Vola Smith, Frank Whitson and Jack Nelson. This thrilling patriotic drama is from the story by Virginia Terhune VanDewater; is in five reels and was directed by Joseph De Grasse. It is a red-blooded picture with an especial appeal to men of military age as well as to their mothers and fathers

Small Exhibitors Can Pay Goldwyn's Prices

THERE are a great many important "first run" exhibitors in the United States, and there are thousands of the smaller exhibitors. These small exhibitors are vastly more important to any wise and far-seeing company.

Goldwyn hopes to play the important "first runs"—but our greatest desire is to have all of the smaller exhibitors play Goldwyn Pictures.

Goldwyn's rentals will make this possible. Our prices will be fair and equitable.

We are charting and combing America with experts who are building a system of rental schedules that will enable every theatre in the country to play Goldwyn Pictures at a profit to the exhibitor as well as ourselves.

Our idea is not to squeeze the exhibitor, but to establish a partnership with him—with profit to both.

CO-OPERATION

'TWEEN

Manufacturer and Exchangemen

Crackers are made to be eaten—not to grow stale on the grocer's shelf.

Shoes are made to grace the foot of "milady" or the "mawster"—not to shrivel and rot in the boot shop window.

Locomotives are made to be run over the rails and not to rust themselves to the turn-tables in the roundhouse.

Motion pictures are made to be seen and not to dry out in the cans on the dust covered shelf of an exchange.

Rather an odious comparison admittedly, and yet such commercial catastrophes as those enumerated above are inevitably due to the utter disregard of the value of co-operation 'tween the manufacturer and the distributor.

The dealer in antiques or wines is the permitted exception, who, if honest, profits from the age of his wares.

But

Motion pictures are not like unto wines or antiques, and their all too often "preservation" on the exchange shelves is urgently in need of remedy.

In the past motion picture manufacturers have either been blind to the teachings which have resulted from the business failures in other walks of commerce,

Or

In the mad rush for "the millions" they have deliberately and admittedly played for the "quick money," with no intent or desire to build their business for a permanency.

But

It is April, 1917, and the motion picture has undergone some radical changes since those days of "fool proof" prosperity.

The swaddling clothes have been discarded for the "frocks of the hour" and

The motion picture industry is marching in the front ranks of history making businesses.

Putting ten thousand dollars into the making of a "movie"—adding two thousand more for a bundle of wild eyed advertising accessories—and then spending just enough money in advertising the product to land a "live one"

Is the all wrong method of procedure.

The Frohman Amusement Corporation has resolved:

That it assuredly does not want the fool money of the butcher or the baker in return for territorial rights to its productions.

That its productions are of a standard which merits the attention of established exchangemen with showman abilities.

That it intends, therefore, to refuse absolutely to permit its productions to be handled by the incompetents who seek to invade the industry and persuade the average manufacturer to sell his product because he may in his ignorance offer a thousand or two more than the territory is worth.

That it has adopted a definite plan of advertising its product for a period after the sale of such product, that its buyers may derive some of the benefits.

That it will augment its advertising and publicity force sufficiently to insure a careful and immediate attention to all suggestions and requests from exchange buyers.

That ideas of exploitation will at all times be supplied in aid to exchanges that full value of a Frohman production may at every instance be given.

That no matter is too small or too large to gain an immediate attention and receive prompt action. That co-operation is the backbone of the frame of Frohman Co-operation.

THAT BEGINNING WITH THE CURRENT FROHMAN PRODUCTION, "GOD'S MAN," IN WHICH H. B. WARNER IS STARRED; THIS PLAN OF CO-OPERATION IS PUT INTO PRACTICAL OPERATION.

FAMOUS PLAYERS—

The Most Important Since September

In response to the great national demand for Paramount pictures, I take great pleasure in announcing that the Paramount Pictures Corporation will adopt the open-booking system of distribution to take effect August 5th, 1917.

For this important action we have been laying definite plans for months. The effect of this decision will be that after August 5th exhibitors may obtain Paramount Pictures in series; booking the plays which they select, and the stars whom their patrons prefer.

The best in motion pictures through this epoch-making plan is available to all the theatres. I feel that this is the most important announcement that has been addressed to the exhibitors of America since September 1st, 1914, when the Paramount Program was inaugurated.

In connection with the above announcement we state that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has acquired the Artcraft Pictures Corporation.

Paramount and Artcraft in the future will co-operate to the best advantage of the exhibitor in their booking arrangements. The release dates of the extraordinary stellar and box office attractions obtainable through Artcraft will be adjusted so as not to conflict with the Paramount releases.

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation acquired Artcraft to make it possible for the exhibitor to present the great Artcraft productions without paying for Paramount Pictures of the same release date.

To the present Artcraft attractions, which include the photoplays starring

LASKY CORPORATION

Announcement to Exhibitors 1st, 1914

Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and George M. Cohan, will be added Elsie Ferguson, Cecil B. De Mille-Geraldine Farrar productions and the forthcoming personally directed D. W. Griffith productions.

The Paramount roster will comprise Marguerite Clark, Pauline Frederick, Mme Petrova, Marie Doro, Billie Burke, Fannie Ward, Margaret Illington, Mae Murray, Ann Pennington, Sessue Hayakawa, Jack Pickford and Louise Huff, Vivian Martin, George Beban, Wallace Reid and Kathlyn Williams and other illustrious stars, to be announced as added.

For months the work of mobilizing the foremost literary and dramatic masterpieces of the day, selected from among the efforts of the world's greatest and contemporary writers, has been unceasing in order to provide most advantageous and popular vehicles for the stars and producers mentioned above.

The most complete producing department, under the management of our vice-president, Mr. Jesse L. Lasky, and working under the direct supervision of Messrs. Hugh Ford and A. A. Kaufman in the Eastern studios, and Messrs. Cecil B. De Mille and M. E. Hoffman in the Western studios, will be maintained for the creation of the greatest screen triumphs ever yet presented to exhibitors and public.

I feel that by this one step the motion picture will have been advanced ten years in artistic promotion.

Paramount Pictures Corporation

To the Exhibitors of America:

I am confident that I need not emphasize to exhibitors the values and advantages to be derived by them through the adoption of the open-booking system of distribution by the Paramount Pictures Corporation, and the system we have created by which Paramount Pictures and Paramount stars will be booked in co-ordination with Artcraft stars and productions.

Exhibitors will also be pleased to be relieved of the necessity of shelving pictures to exhibit others of current release, due heretofore, to conflicting release dates. This burden upon the exhibitor is now removed.

Exhibitors may obtain detailed information regarding the new system of distribution from their local Paramount exchanges on and after May 15th, 1917.

The devotion to the principles of service and co-operation to which Paramount was dedicated from its first introduction to the trade will be most scrupulously maintained and furthered.

Besides the unsurpassed Paramount feature productions, we will constantly advance the merit of our shorter reel subjects, including the already nationally popular Paramount-Arbuckle Comedies, the Klever and Black Diamond Comedies, Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogues and Paramount-Bray Pictographs.

I wish to congratulate exhibitors and the public upon the possibilities for advancement which the new Paramount policy contains.

HIRAM ABRAMS, President
PARAMOUNT PICTURES CORPORATION

Artcraft Pictures Corporation

To the Exhibitors of America:

The plan that co-ordinates the booking arrangements between the Artcraft Pictures Corporation and the Paramount Pictures Corporation, announced on the opposite page, is, in my opinion, the greatest step for the welfare and advantage of the exhibitor ever taken in the entire history of the motion picture.

Besides the unsurpassed cinema attractions which Artcraft intends to release, exhibitors may book, by a co-ordinated system, the great Paramount Pictures which set the first standard for consistent screen excellence throughout the world, thus presenting photoplays week in and week out, year in and year out, that will make exhibiting competition utterly out of the question.

To the superb roster of Artcraft stars, now including Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, the Cecil B. De Mille-Geraldine Farrar productions, and George M. Cohan, will shortly be added the beautiful and gifted favorite of the American public, Elsie Ferguson, and the photoplay conceptions of that master of screen creation, D. W. Griffith.

To these stars and productions will also be added the greatest triumphs of the screen which we will make available to ourselves from the independent studios of the world whenever or wherever such productions can be secured as compare with the ambitious standard of Artcraft.

Artcraft Pictures have given the silent drama a new definition in the world of art. The artistic policy that made this advancement possible will be carefully nurtured in the future so that we can present to the photoplay public such screen masterpieces as were hitherto impossible to conceive.

ARTCRAFT PICTURES CORPORATION.

Profit Sharing

When you boost Paramount Pictures, you are putting additional money in your pocket, through a system of profit sharing.

Paramount today leads the field in looking out for you.

A certain amount of earnings is turned back to your service.

There are well appointed exchange offices for your convenience where you are treated courteously at all times; a house organ full of good practical tested ideas on showmanship; a catalogue of accessories to help the exhibitor with his advertising and publicity—superior to anything ever before issued.

Paramount tries to make the exhibitor's profit greater tomorrow than today—and Paramount exhibitors know what today's profit is. This is done with no sense of philanthropy—it is just plain "good business." Prosperous exhibitors make prosperous producers and distributors.

This Week

there are two good examples of Paramount variety and quality.

On April 23rd, Marguerite Clark, the undisputed leader of all screen stars in drawing power, is shown to the public in "The Valentine Girl," a whimsical, fantastic presentation of a prosaic "every-day life" human interest story—the kind you and I like because we've lived and dreamed them—the kind that have helped make Marguerite Clark and Famous Players, famous.

On Thursday of the same week, we have a new stellar combination in Vivian Martin supported by Jack Pickford.

Exhibitors are telling us every day of the charm and drawing power of Vivian Martin—we might say, "we told you so" and prophesy a little further on "The Girl at Home," but with an unusually strong story and the star of "Seventeen," "Great Expectations" and "The Dummy" as support—and the fact that it is a Lasky production—you can understand why it will be one of the "box office" events of the year.

Have everybody in your town or your neighborhood see these pictures if it takes "extra days."

Let your public know they're coming and get all that's coming to you.

You will remember the rare feather cloaks of Stevenson's story and the Lasky production "The Bottle Imp."

Mr. Burton Holmes is here shown with a rare hat band of feathers of the "Lei Bird" secured while in Hawaii.

"To travel is to possess the World"

Who is Burton Holmes?

A distinguished traveler and lecturer known the world over, from the crowned heads with whom he is on intimate terms to the millions who have heard his lectures for years in the auditoriums at $2.00 prices and read his many books on travel.

His almost uncanny insight into what the public wants to know about the "other fellow" and see in foreign climes, makes his travel pictures distinctive and far superior to any others ever released.

IT is readily apparent to the most casual observer that the successful pioneer in any field attracts a horde of followers. This has proven true in the case of the Thomas H. Ince Triangle Productions. I have striven to make the name INCE a by-word for the highest attainable photo-drama, and in this connection I wish to emphatically state and impress on the minds of all concerned that any photo-dramas bearing the name of Ince Productions, Inc., are NOT in any manner or form to be connected with the Thos. H. Ince Triangle—Triangle Ince—Ince Triangle Features, which are produced only at my studios in California.

FOREWORD:

IT must be extremely gratifying to THOMAS H. INCE to find that the high standards of the photoplay industry as established by himself are not only appreciated, to the greatest extent, by exhibitors and the general populace, but by his brother-producers as well

THOMAS H. INCE — a veritable human engine of dynamic force — ever driving forward at top speed — blazing the trail his competitors must follow to reach the goal of artistry, has conclusively proven the effectiveness of ultra-modern aggressiveness.

In 1905 he startled the film world by his deviation from the accepted limitations of motion picture photography. With the crude equipment of that period he made innovations and secured photographic effects which at this advanced stage of the industry stand out as mile-posts in the progress of art in connection with motion pictures. The conservative producers were forced into progressive activity by the results obtained at Inceville, and from that time have been following the lead of the Film wizard, whose efforts after his advent into photo-plays have energized the meteoric rise of the photo drama.

THOMAS H. INCE, always striving for the betterment of his art, realized that the sub-title "a necessary evil" was the one incongruity in an otherwise artistic masterpiece. Bending every effort toward the beautifying of this eye-sore, he conceived the decorative title, so beautiful in key and harmony that the drama seemed to literally float before you, uninterrupted. The results of his experiments along this line are shown in the titles used in Ince-Triangle-Productions and crudely imitated by various other producers.

Ever progressive, his attention was next directed to the advertising of his productions, endeavoring to secure an artistic medium which would be distinctly associated with Ince-Triangle-Productions in the public mind. This has been accomplished and its success proven by the fact that many other producers are now trying to follow his lead in this direction.

NOBODY LOVES

WHEN a film producer or distributor tells you that he loves you and is working for you alone, he is talking like a politician before an election.

For years we have known many exhibitors—we like, respect and admire them, but we do not love them. There is little sentiment in successful business.

The Paralta Plan is not a sentimental proposition—it is the result of hard thinking by a group of level headed business men who have sought to find a way to protect exhibitors from failure and thus make money for themselves.

Our purpose has no other thought behind it but self-preservation. If exhibitors fail, where is the producer and distributor to look for their money?

WE are out to make all the HONEST MONEY we can. To do that we must help the exhibitor. Co-operation is the basic principle on which the Paralta enterprises are founded.

The Paralta Plan and Paralta Plays are inseparable—each forming an important part of the other.

The Paralta Plan will prove a practical help to you in the management of your theatre. It will save you money in rentals of feature films. Paralta Plays will increase your profits by providing attractions that will draw to capacity.

The Paralta Plan means that you can absolutely control big feature films in your exhibition territory, and play repeats at your discretion, at substantially no greater cost than you now pay for your first run of special productions.

THE Paralta Plan points the way to a revolution in the operating costs of the motion picture theatre—the passing of Dictation and the coming in of democratic co-operation in the production, distribution and presentation of motion pictures.

We can help you if you are ready to help yourself. If you are losing money, or just breaking even, there's a reason.

You can help yourself by studying the Paralta Plan. There is always strength in sincere co-operation. The Paralta Plan means actual and effective co-operation between the producer and distributor and the real backbone of this industry—the exhibitor.

It costs you but one red copper cent to learn every detail of the Paralta Plan. A postal card will do it. You assume no obligation.

STUDY !!!

THE PARALTA PLAN

AN EXHIBITOR

A CERTAIN wise New York contractor, in making a bid to build a concrete dam, figured to do the work at actual cost to him. All he asked for was the empty cement bags.

He was willing to make his profit out of the waste, which, in this instance, amounted to $120,000.

The Paralta Plan utilizes waste—it is simply a method of turning waste into cash. We are willing to share with you all we can save in fighting waste, which is sucking like a vampire the very life blood of the exhibitor—bleeding him white and taking from him every chance to make a dollar for himself.

And in considering waste, Mr. Exhibitor, do not forget that it is all shouldered on to you—in the final reckoning you pay the bill.

Waste in motion pictures first shows itself in production. It results in poor quality films and the exhibitor feels it first in increasing film rentals.

HIGH cost of production and an unsound system of distribution constitute the very fountain head of waste, which shows in the big rental prices of film, increased operating overhead, decreasing box office receipts, and "Closed" signs on the theatre fronts.

This waste runs right down the line—the patron, the exhibitor, the distributor and the producer all lose. But the exhibitor loses most.

Why have 4,000 moving picture theatres closed their doors since last May? The answer is waste from the first day a picture is planned right down the line to the exhibitor, and he pays all the bills—till he bleeds to death.

The big exhibitor staggers and the little exhibitor drops dead under the load of waste that is crowded on to him.

WHO profits by all this? No one. Waste is killing a business of wonderful possibilities. It is running patrons away from the box office and closing theatres every day. The bankrupting of both producers and exhibitors must follow as an inevitable result.

The survival of the fittest? Surely! Just UTILIZE the Paralta Plan and fit yourself to survive.

The Paralta Plan Exhibitor Begins to Work for Himself the Moment He Secures a Paralta Exhibiting Franchise.

Derwent Hall Caine does admirable work as Daniel Myles. His performance is sincere and forceful, and his fine, sensitive face registers every emotion. It would have been impossible to find a man more perfectly suited to the part.

Marian Swayne is Mona, daughter of the Deemster. Miss Swayne is sweet and appealing, but is endowed with less physical charm than one would have favored Mona to possess.

Sidney Bracy as the Bishop is excellent. He plays the kindly old man with just the right mixture of sternness combined with his parental love. Albert Froom as the Deemster and Alexander Hall as Davy are both well cast.

The story is laid in the Isle of Man early in the eighteenth century, when the Bishop and the Deemster rule the people. Daniel, the son of the Bishop, is a lover and loves the sea, so he chooses to become a fisherman. He loves Mona, daughter of the Deemster, and his love is returned, but the union of the two is bitterly opposed by Mona's father and brother. Ewan is led to believe that Daniel has wronged his sister and in a quarrel between the two Ewan is killed.

Daniel gives himself up and it is believed that the killing is not accidental, so Dan's own father pronounces his sentence. "Let him be secured. Let no one speak to him nor give him aid nor comfort."

For years Dan lives apart in a fisherman's hut with no living thing to speak to but a beautiful collie. When a tempest starts it is given to Daniel to go as a healer, and he effects marvelous cures with a mysterious powder.

When there is only one portion of the drug left the Deemster is stricken, and as Daniel is about to minister to him he finds that he, too, has the plague. He generously gives the powder to his enemy and dies in Mona's arms.

Caine Story in the Film.

"The Deemster" on Screen Owes Success to Father and Son.

By T. E. OLIPHANT.

After seeing the film adaptation of Hall Caine's "The Deemster" yesterday at the Broadway Theatre, with Derwent Hall Caine, the author's son, in the leading role, one acquires the conviction that the Caine family is rather long on talent.

The story of Mr. Caine, Sr., does what few novels have done. It transfers to the screen without alteration of incident or without that interpolation of "new business" which the film director so frequently claims is necessary in the photoplay turization of a book. All of "The Deemster's" stirring situations are utilized, and because the book is so frankly melodramatic the screen play becomes a real thriller.

THRILLS IN NEW FILM PLAY, 'THE DEEMSTER'

Leading Part Taken by D. H. Caine, Whose Father Wrote Novel of That Name.

A crowded first night gathering saw Hall Caine's novel, "The Deemster," shown in moving picture form yesterday on the screen of the Broadway Theatre. The picture is offered by the Arrow Film Corporation, which induced Derwent Hall Caine, son of the novelist, to appear before the camera in the leading part, that of Daniel Myrea, son of the Bishop of the Isle of Man.

While the photoplay has few claims to artistic perfection, it is very effective photo-melodrama, and has the benefit of good photography. The story of Daniel's strange career offers many opportunities for thrilling dramatic action—his love affair with the Deemster's daughter, his fight with [illegible]

Although the [illegible] scenic [illegible] is slow at times, it gained in absorbing interest as the play progressed.

"RAILROAD RAIDERS" HELEN HOLMES FILM PRAISED BY CRITICS

CRITICS all over the country have seen the opening chapters of "The Railroad Raiders," the new Helen Holmes chapterplay. One and all indorse it in the highest terms. Julian Johnson, famous reviewer of films for Photoplay Magazine, says: "See this picture and you'll realize the amount of genuine art that can be slipped into a hard tale of the iron trail. The illuminated sub-titles with its changing legends and slow moving trains filling the background, is one of the happiest conceits since pictured title pages became the vogue. Such admirable discretion in fitting star to story instead of story to star, may be safely copied."

It Lives Up to Guarantee.

Just as an example of what newspaper critics think of "The Railroad Raiders," note what "Rob Reel," photoplay editor of the Chicago American, says about it. He writes: "Samuel S. Hutchinson is right. He sent out a certificate of guarantee that "The Railroad Raiders" is a 'superior production of extraordinary merit —that it is crammed with thrills, alive with action, and has a punch in every chapter.' It is a railroad picture through and through, with a lot of the rough and ready life of the West and livest of detective fiction thrown in. It is all that Mr. Hutchinson guaranteed and then some more. Those who have been fortunate enough to see the first chapter will return to view the rest of the fifteen installments of the best work Miss Holmes has yet done." Any Mutual Exchange is prepared to accept bookings now on "The Railroad Raiders."

"Shackles of Truth" Is Next Russell Film

"Shackles of Truth" is the title of the next vehicle chosen for William Russell, the Mutual-American star. This story was provided by Julius Grinnell Furthmann, who is also the author of the last two Russell productions—"High Play" and "The Frame Up"—the latter soon to be released. In "Shackles of Truth" Mr. Russell appears as a young lawyer, who is willing to sacrifice his own career to save the honor of his father and shield his mother. Opposite Russell appears Francelia Billington. Others in the cast include Alfred Vosburgh, Adda Gleason, George Ahern, Lucille Ward and Frederick Vroom.

LA SALLE COMEDIES Starring Popular Comedians Under Direction of M. De La Parelle RELEASED BY MUTUAL

A brand new series of Mutual Featurettes has just been arranged for. Negotiations have been completed by which Mutual will release LaSalle Comedies produced by the LaSalle Film Company of Chicago and Los Angeles. The new series of Featurettes will begin with three two-reel comedies to be released bi-weekly beginning May 7th. These three productions will be followed by a series of fifty-two comedies, each one reel in length, to be released weekly, commencing June 12th.

LaSalle Comedies will be directed by M. De La Parelle, the same man who directed "The Hoosier School Master," and other successes. On May 7th will be issued a two-reeler entitled "The Prodigal Uncle." This will be followed on May 21st, by "Chubby Inherits a Harem," and on June 4th by "The Flight That Failed." The weekly series of one-reelers will include such titles as "Tillie of the Nine Lives," "The Girl in the Frame," "Discords in 'A' Flat," "When Lula Danced the Hula," "The Kissing Butterfly," and others. Bookings on this new series of Mutual Featurettes can be made now at any Mutual Exchange.

Mutual Exchanges have an unusually large variety of film offerings for the exhibitor seeking serials or productions in series. Theaters can obtain such serials as "The Sequel to the Diamond From the Sky," "A Lass of the Lumberlands" and "Perils of Our Girl Reporters," and such series chapterplays as "Jimmie Dale, Alias the Grey Seal" and "The Adventures of Shorty Hamilton," besides innumerable Featurettes of a comedy, scenic or magazine nature.

"WHOSE WIFE?" FIRST GAIL KANE MUTUAL PICTURE NOW READY

THE FIRST of the Gail Kane Mutual Pictures is ready for release. Its title is "Whose Wife?" Cecil Henry Bullivant, an English author, wrote it. Rollin S. Sturgeon, famous ex-Vitagraph producer, directed it. It is five reels in length and is released the week of April 30th.

Produced by American.

"Whose Wife?" was produced at the studios of the American Film company, Inc., at Santa Barbara, Cal. The story deals with the problem confronting a young woman who, on the eve of her marriage to a successful young attorney, comes face to face with the man whom she had married long before and thought drowned in a shipwreck. Later on, her distress is still farther increased when she is sought as a witness in her husband's defense, to support his plea of self-defense against a charge of murder. If she goes to his aid, her happiness through marriage to the young attorney will almost certainly be destroyed. If she remains silent, her husband is sure to be convicted. The way her problem is solved results in one of the most dramatic scenes ever presented on the screen. Miss Kane is surrounded by a well balanced cast and provided with some wonderful opportunities for the display of her talent.

Released Week of April 30th.

The release of "Whose Wife?" is fixed for the week of April 30th. It is but the first of a series of six Mutual Pictures in which Miss Kane will be starred. Exhibitors booking it are sure to delight their patrons and assure for themselves and their theaters, still better business on the later Gail Kane releases. Bookings can be made now at any Mutual Exchange.

Marjorie Rambeau Starts 4th Feature

Having completed "The Debt," which is released on April 23, Marjorie Rambeau is hard at work on her fourth Mutual Picture. "The Mirror" is its title. It is an original story by Clara S. Beranger and has for its characters many of those who work in the world of the theatre. The supporting cast includes Paul Everton, T. Jerome Lawlor, Aubrey Beattie and others who assisted Miss Rambeau in her earlier Powell Productions.

FIRST GRAPHIC FILM CLEAN, SAY MAKERS

"Our initial State rights production, 'The Woman and the Beast' is melodramatic, but clean," states a representative of the Graphic Features, Room 401, 729 Seventh avenue, New York City. "We will even concede that it is in the class of so-called sensational films, but there is nothing in it that anybody would be ashamed to see; in fact, it simply deals with a pacifist who showed he could be bold in time of need. It is not a political story, as there will undoubtedly be a flood of political stories dealing with pacifists, but our pacifist is a peace-at-any-price husband who has a war-like wife, and the moral is pointed without the slightest reference to the present political situation of the United States."

Marie Shotwell, who is the star of the feature, made her first picture hit in "The Witching Hour." Then came her appearance in "Enlighten Thy Daughter" and just prior to her engagement in "The Woman and the Beast," a stellar role in Edward Warren's production "The Warfare of the Flesh."

FAIR JUNE CAPRICE TO BE SEEN NEXT IN "A SMALL TOWN GIRL"

Little Fox Star of One Year, on First Anniversary of Her Debut Makes Best Picture of Her Career.

Winsome June Caprice has completed just one year as a screen star and in "A Small Town Girl" has excelled anything she has previously done. It was only twelve months ago William Fox announced that he would make her one of the best known stars in the film world. That she and he have made good, exhibitors from every quarter of the globe testify.

Miss Caprice's work in "A Small Town Girl" outshines every effort of the past and will add materially to her host of admirers.

"A Small Town Girl" is a superlative picture, superlatively acted and directed. It is a picture in which exhibitors may have the greatest confidence.

The story is one with human appeal and tells of the hopes and joys of a winsome little western girl drawn into the fascinating and enthralling glamour of the Great White Way. Your audiences will like this picture.

"A ROMAN COWBOY" NEW FOXFILM COMEDY

Tom Mix "Comes Back" as a Comedian after Plunge into Drama

Tom Mix, world champion cowboy, "comes back" as a Foxfilm comedian in the release of May 6th, "A Roman Cowboy." Tom recently jumped out of the comedy corral to support Dustin Farnum, Fox star, in a dramatic production.

Practically the entire cast that supported Mix in his first Foxfilm comedy, 'Hearts and Saddles," is with him in "A Roman Cowboy." Rena Rogers, a new leading woman, will play opposite him

The rest of the cast will include Sid Jordan, Pat Chrisman, Boss Glen, Chet Ryan and others.

The burro that played such a prominent part in "Hearts and Saddles" is also "cast" in "A Roman Cowboy." Thus far, the burro is nameless, but he doesn't seem to mind it.

"A Roman Cowboy" is another of Mix's rollicking western comedies. The great outdoors furnishes him with "sets" that fit his characters. Those who saw "Hearts and Saddles" will agree that an entire state is not much too large for the Mix type of comedy.

"THE HONOR SYSTEM" OFF APR. 29

End of run at Lyric Sets New Record for William Fox.

In completing the run of "The Honor System" at the Lyric Theatre April 29, William Fox has accomplished a feat no experienced theatrical man believed possible. He has occupied a first-class New York theatre an entire season with two spectacular films—"A Daughter of the Gods" and "The Honor System."

This is the most extraordinary record in filmdom. By it Mr. Fox has placed the motion picture on a par with the so-called legitimate attraction.

"THE HONOR SYSTEM" ON STATE RIGHT BASIS

Cinemelodrama Now Being Booked for New York and New Jersey

That sensational cinemelodrama, "The Honor System," which has set all New York talking and which has had a four months' run at the Lyric Theatre, Broadway and Forty-second Street, is offered by William Fox on a state rights basis.

Bookings are now being made direct for the city and state of New York and New Jersey.

This production has received the unanimous praise of the New York City newspaper and trade press. Never in the history of motion pictures have such complimentary things been written about a picture. Some of the dramatic critics declared that it eclipsed even "The Birth of a Nation," while others wrote that it was the motion picture at its best.

The picture owes its great success to its heart interest and the human appeal it makes to every class.

This master drama of Director R. A. Walsh offers real stars—Miriam Cooper, Gladys Brockwell and George Walsh, people whose names mean something.

Virginia Pearson is moving back to her country home because she cannot find room for all her gowns in her apartment in the city.

FOX "KIDDIE" FILMS TO BE RELEASED SOON

Famous Child Players Will Have All Leading Roles in New Wonwer Pictures

William Fox announces the early release of a sensationally beautiful series of "kiddie" features in which all the important roles will be taken by the worlds' best known and most talented screen children.

These will be known as "Fox Kiddie Pictures," and will delight the "grown-ups" as much as the youngsters. Mr. Fox will present the new pictures on an extravagantly beautiful scale and in them will be seen all the children who have become so popular in regular Fox releases. In addition there will be numbers of "kiddies" who will for the first time appear under the William Fox banner.

Mr. Fox promises that these productions will be the equal in every respect to the standard which he has fixed.

The "kiddies" will do everything their elders do—and will add to it the charm of childhood. These pictures will be the treat of the year to motion picture audiences. The gorgeous sets will be built on a scale to correspond with the "kiddies" who make the pictures. There will be all sorts of stories interpreted by the youngsters—fairy stories—adventure—love—nursery rhymes, and all the beautiful children stories that delight both young and old.

Grown-ups will be used like furniture or decorations—only as necessary evils.

The Warfare Of The Flesh

Hundreds of women wept at the Broadway last Thursday morning. All were in accord that it is a great picture for women.

The critics are Unanimous—All say it is a high-class picture and a Big, Smashing Box-Office Winner.

Wid says:

A MONEY-GETTING TITLE WITH A PRODUCTION THAT DOES NOT OFFEND—THE ALLEGORY SCENES WELL HANDLED, WITH FINE NATURAL BACKGROUND—THE UNDERLYING MOTIVE LIFTED THE OFFERING INTO THE SPECIAL CLASS—THE STORY DEVELOPMENT PROVIDES A NICE ELEMENT OF SUSPENSE WITH A GREAT SURPRISE TWIST.

George W. Graves of Motography says:

The Warfare of the Flesh offers both interesting entertainment and a pointed moral argument. A cast of notable players is uniformly strong—a worth while picture and a money-maker for the exhibitor.

George N. Shorey of the Moving Picture News:

Most unusual story—Has deep, human appeal and interest—Will satisfy the most refined and has enough punch for the sensation seekers—Many sympathetic touches—Good all around entertainment.

Robert Whitten in the New York Clipper:

A high standard of feature film—it is in many respects a remarkable picture—the story is away from the beaten track—It is well constructed and well told—the acting is excellent and the direction is a credit to Edward Warren.

Adam Hull Shirk of the Dramatic Mirror:

Well conceived prologue—strong modern story with distinguished players as interpreters of remarkable theme—AS A STATE RIGHT PROPOSITION THE FILM SHOULD PROVE A DECIDEDLY PROFITABLE INVESTMENT.

Edward Weitzel, Moving Picture World:

Everything that money could supply in the way of a fine cast and expensive setting has been given the feature.

Charles Wagner says in the Trade Review:

Each character is vividly portrayed and the whole story blends with the strong contrast. It entertains throughout and while the theme is unquestionably blunt it is so powerfully and artistically handled that it will please even the most prudish. All in all it is box-office attraction of premiere quality.

Miss Agnew, Morning Telegraph:

The production reveals a strength of purpose which can only be appreciated by a personal view. The "eternal story" is told in a novel and wonderfully impressive way and set in a production that is remarkable in every detail. It is another triumph for the photographic art. Many women in the audience wept. Mr. Warren has handled a delicate subject in a delicate way.

Read What The Critics Say!

MORNING TELEGRAPH.—A strong and impressive film of facts and will prove a good drawing card, for exhibitor, as well as a real power in the Government's recruiting efforts.

BOSTON POST.—A stupendous effort on the part of the Government to stimulate recruiting and increase demand for universal training.

BOSTON RECORD.—There is not an American with red blood in his veins who will not be stirred to the top of his enthusiasm by witnessing this graphic enfoldment.

EXHIBITOR'S TRADE REVIEW (N. Y.)—It is better than reading of preparedness measures in newspapers—will stir the emotions as no printed story of facts could ever do.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD.—"How Uncle Sam Prepares" is more than an entertainment. It is a picture with a purpose, and a most patriotic one.

MOVING PICTURE NEWS.—A thrill for every patriot. A most timely offering.

NEW YORK STAR.—No more timely picture than this has, up to the present time, been offered to State Right buyers.

THE BILLBOARD.—The scenes coming in natural sequence, their connection making for one of the most stirring spectacles that has been shown.

BOSTON JOURNAL.—Many war films replete with spectacular interest have been shown on the screen, but none have come to us as does the remarkably interesting series of motion pictures entitled "How Uncle Sam Prepares."

What the Critics Had to Say of

Lewis

Edgar

INITIAL PRODUCTION WITH HIS OWN COMPANY OF

"THE BAR SINISTER"

A Photoplay of the South by Anthony P. Kelly

Miss Hostetter, The Billboard.
It throbs with the sincerity of Edgar Lewis's earnestness. It glistens with the brilliancy of his insight.

Adam M. Shirk, Dramatic Mirror.
"The Bar Sinister" is one of the biggest pictures of the season. The exhibitors may depend upon its drawing under any and all conditions.

G. W. Graves, Motography.
Edgar Lewis's "The Bar Sinister" is superb; a worthy addition to his long line of successes.

Ernest C. Whitton, N. Y. Clipper.
The picture easily takes rank among the great photo features of the day.

Agnes Smith, Telegraph.
A directorial triumph.

Tom Kennedy, Trade Review.
Its masterful and vigorous direction and vivid story make "The Bar Sinister" a photoplay distinctly above the average, and which, once viewed, will make the viewer want to see it the second time.

M. R. Lowenthal, New York Star.
"The Bar Sinister" helps to elevate the motion picture industry to a height and dignity new in its history. Superlative direction, extraordinary photography and a human story have set a standard in "The Bar Sinister" which Edgar Lewis may hope to match, but not beat.

Elaine Ivans, Exhibitors Herald.
A remarkable picture, tense and appealing; with touches of humorous pathos and comedy. It leaves the onlooker with a pleasant sense of having seen life as it is.

Harriet Underhill, N. Y. Tribune.
"The Bar Sinister" is one of the best things that has ever been seen on the screen.

Edward Weitzel, M. P. World.
Author and director are deserving of sincere congratulations. Mr. Kelly's story contains a strong human appeal, and an unbroken list of expert characterizations. Mr. Lewis has transferred the scenario to the screen with a fine appreciation of its attractive possibilities, and the result is well nigh flawless.

Peter Milne, M. P. News.
—worthy in every respect of its multiple reelage. * * * Leaves one impressed by its bigness * * * cannot be judged by the reviewer's usual blind, "the average." * * * Superlatives are justified.

Variety.
It is a feature that will have a tremendous drawing power.

to get your business in the near future, Mr. Exhibitor, we have abolished the cash deposit system which has been your chief complaint against present day methods of distribution;

BECAUSE

BECAUSE

we are putting into operation a flexible modification of the heretofore rigid "program" booking plan, which will enable you to show productions of the more pretentious type without having to pay for your regular program service when you lay it on the shelf unused;

BECAUSE

we are supplying you with productions which are productions in every sense of the word, not merely stars with some weak, badly produced "vehicle" written around their limited personalities; these productions are being made under the supervision of such master-craftsmen as Thos. H. Ince, Mack Sennett and Allan Dwan, directors who are recognized as supreme in their fields; we are fighting hard all the time for ethical, constructive business policies in the film industry and are proving our sincerity by inaugurating such policies whenever and wherever practicable;

BECAUSE

BECAUSE

BECAUSE

we are thinking of your success as well as our own and not trying to exploit you in order to get a little immediate "easy money."

THINK IT OVER, MR. EXHIBITOR

P.S.—Ask us to show you some of our current releases and let us know where you can duplicate such pictures either on a program or in specials, "Happiness," The Pinch Hitter," "The Snarl," "Sweetheart of the Doomed," "The Desert Man," and others. Facts and Comments

DURING such period as the United States is at war—or, for that matter so long as hostilities are maintained by and in those countries in which American films are in large demand—the manufacturers of this nation should bear in mind that subjects are viewed in a light different from that in which they are seen in days of peace. It is a time for the exercise of keen judgment as to the treatment of stories that trench on the military side. Every country is particularly jealous these days of the welfare of its armed forces, of all that pertains to their discipline, their morale.

Manufacturers who give heed to this angle of motion picture production will save time and money and trouble. As proof of this it is necessary to quote but one of the many "Don'ts" that today constitute a part of the military law of Great Britain. What obtains in the way of picture restriction in the "tight little island" under stress of war it is reasonable to assume in course of time will be put into effect in the United States. Already there is in the action of Pennsylvania on three subjects a forecast of what we may expect throughout the country—if not by the States then by the Federal authorities. The British proscription to which we have reference is this: "Don't show films, still pictures or produce stage plays prejudicing discipline in any army."

*

In another column we print a dispatch from Philadelphia setting forth the action of the Attorney General of Pennsylvania barring from the screens of the state all films that in any way may be construed as discouraging enlistments—and exhibitors are compelled to judge for themselves as to what constitutes a violation of the injunction. Revocation of license is the penalty named for breaking the rule. In Camden, N. J., the censor has served notice that "horrible" war scenes must not be shown. A New York State Senator advocates legislation to stop the exhibition of films coming within this latter category. We repeat, producers should exercise keen judgment as to what they incorporate in military pictures. In case of doubt it should be a simple matter to obtain expert advice from army officers—before putting a script in work.

* * *

AS WE have said before, it is small wonder that exhibitors in many parts of the country look askance at any suggestion of becoming affiliated with the Exhibitor's League. The League has been used too much and is being used today by some of its principal officers merely to advance their own selfish interests. Nevertheless, there is not a State in the Union in which the exhibitors will need, if not now, in the near future, and need badly, all the help that can be got from a strong organization.

* * *

TOO much emphasis has been and is being at this very moment placed on the need of Exhibitor's organization to meet adverse conditions inside the trade. To serve their own ends or through lack of knowledge, some of the self-appointed leaders of the exhibitors are continually harping on the greed of the manufacturer and the exchangemen and keeping open a breach that all should work to close up as soon as possible. There should be no quarrel between different branches of the same industry in which the interest and welfare of all are bound up together. Organization of the exhibitors everywhere is needed to meet the outside enemy, the common enemy of the exhibitor, exchangeman and manufacturers alike.

* * *

WHAT a blessed health-giving touch to the whole industry and a wholly satisfying change from the wave of vice and so-called moral films are the productions showing the activities of the army and navy in our present wave of preparedness. The training of men in God's out-of-doors, the clean limbed regiments on the march, the spic and span battleship with her no less spic and span officers and men. Who would want to go back to the vampire filth and the thinly diguised interior of the brothel; who would prefer riding in the New York subway on an August afternoon when they might roam over the Berkshire hills or sail along the Maine coast? Only a few film producers and exhibitors that we know of.

Wolves and Parasites

By Louis Reeves Harrison

THE weakling imitator puts virility out of fashion without the courage of sincerity, a mere copyist, shifting with every fickle breeze of opinion, a slacker at heart yet brazen of speech, his sorry imitations make the public weary of the matter and manner of a subject before its real merits are understood. A thousand illustrations could be offered in pictures now being screened, in stories now being printed, that there are a lot of sneaking animals always hanging on the edge of production to gorge themselves at its expense, to the detriment of all concerned.

No matter where you find him, from author to exhibitor and back again, among producers, directors, actors, distributors, the parasite is sapping the vitality of the business, taking all he can get and giving nothing of value in return. You will find him even among the critics. He imagines that his verdict makes or unmakes the production. He is noisy at the private showing, attempting to influence opinion by yawning, laughing, talking or going out during the exhibition—he is a hanger-on, a malicious sneak at one moment, a fawning flatterer at another, the spawn of small greed, the offspring of impotent conceit.

You will find him in the office, there engaged in the fruitful occupation of mutilating scenarios. He hovers around the studio, there delivering his opinion on directing and acting. He is shouting for bill-board notoriety instead of merit at the exchange and at the theater. He is one who will tell you that skill, workmanship and power of effect, in one word Artistry, is something apart from commercial value, whereas the very essence of artistry is to make the product so acceptable to the human audience that it will find favor wherever shown.

The thief hates most the man he robs, so the parasite hates true artistry, workmanship and skill, on which he thrives by theft. It is estimated that nearly a thousand scripts a day are sent to studios by petty plagiarists. There may be a hope among larger plagiarists to appropriate something from this mass of stuff—no serious idea can possibly be entertained that really great thoughts and feelings can be presented in dramatic form by the unqualified. Large scenario forces are maintained, like a bunch of amateur detectives hunting for a gem lost on Broadway, when money thus expended might be more profitably employed by purchasing gems in a legitimate manner.

There is no artistry in plagiarism; there is none in mutilation; there is nothing but a form of triviality in such methods that belittles the whole art of motion picture production. The big thief despises the little ones from whom he steals, but he hates with all the ardor of envious impotence the man who can draw ceaselessly upon the fullness of experience and an unfailing imagination. Thus, it continually happens that true artistry receives small encouragement and the screen is crowded with a lot of weakling presentations not worth seeing.

The best men in all branches of motion picture production are hoping for some vigorous development of the art which shall sustain it in popular favor and advance it beyond what Munsterberg bitterly characterized as "tasteless and vulgar eccentricities." "Success," he reasoned, "has crowned every sincere and intelligent effort to improve the photo stage; the better the plays are the more the audience approves them." The supreme address of true artistry is to the finest qualities of audience mind and heart, and it cannot come from wolves and parasites.

Where is the manly hero? If he is a gentleman of wealth, he has a valet and smokes cigarettes. He tries to look intellectual, but he is doing nothing in particular. Unable to put the buttons in a dress shirt, he swaggers out and knocks down the villain who has insulted the poor working girl. If he is a chalk-faced tailor's model he is supposed to come from the "East." If he is a "Westerner," he swaggers around in the fancy costumes worn by tough rowdies of the Wild-West shows, who never saw a cow outside of the paternal stable at milking time.

Neither is sectionally representative nor even nationally so. Americans affect neither the valet nor the circus costume. No living being could go out into the streets of New York, or of Los Angeles, and separate the passing crowd into "Easterners" and "Westerners." Like the clown's problem, it can't be done. If a stray bullet crossed the Mexican frontier while it was being defended against invasion, it might hit a manly fellow from any section of the country, more likely from New York than from the mighty state of Texas. The sectional hero is silly.

All this idiotic stuff comes from sychophants who hang around studios and offices and is announced as "what the people like," as if audiences were given any choice in the matter. Out in the audience are thousands of real heroes, men who are putting up a game fight for a creditable place among their fellows, who are making daily sacrifices of personal comfort and happiness for the sake of others, who are contending manfully against injustice and scant appreciation of honest effort, who are creatures of courage under discouraging circumstances, of patient tenacity in the bitter struggle for existence and improvement—what contempt they must feel for the parasite idea of a hero!

The parasite idea of the American hero is that of a man who is nothing and does nothing. His idea of the American heroine is Mlle. Ingenue of the doll face and curly wig, who is in a state of rags and perpetual expectancy until the swaggering hero comes along with an "I'll-show-you" bravado and gets her into a lingerie dance frock and perfect table manners for the last act. All this is simp stuff. There is no revelation of character, no individual struggle for the right expression of personality, no recognizable portrayal of human nature in the completed product, even if these dramatic essentials appeared in the scenario.

Between crafty and destructive wolves who are engaged in robbing honest effort, and parasites who are living at the expense of this beautiful new art without contributing in any degree to its improvement, it is not to be wondered at that so little is presented on the screen to delight the eye, to inspire the heart, to cultivate the mind. There is very little offered to draw us nearer to each other in better understanding of human nature, to modify egotism and make us feel that each of us is merely an integral part of the universe.

Moving pictures are intended to make us see with the imagination, as we must see beyond the facts stored up in past discovery, as Jules Verne saw when accurately describing, over a quarter of a century ago, the submarine now changing the aspect of war. Every art must have original creative effort to thrive as an art in popular favor, yet what percentage of a thousand contemporaneous releases are not stolen? Perpetual theft can only lead to perpetual repetition, until the small exhibitor may be forced out of business between large productions for complete performance and small ones for home presentation.

Awake, Thou That Sleepest!

By Sam Spedon

THE need of an organized industry has never been so keenly felt as it is at the present time. At the mass meeting held by the National Association of M. P. L. at "The Playhouse" on April 16, to take action on the Wheeler tax bill and enroll representatives to attend the hearing of the bill at Albany, N. Y., April 19. Sam Trigger, one of the speakers, said: "If the exhibitors have acted like a bunch of boobs by being indifferent to their business interests, the producers are a bigger bunch of boobs by being more indifferent to theirs. That's all I got to say." This sassy remark was addressed to over one hundred and fifty representative men of the industry, exhibitors and producers.

W. A. Brady, president of the Association, addressed the assemblage in these plain and understandable words: "We must go to Albany and demand our rights. We are being discriminated against by a confiscatory bill that will drive us all out of business and deprive the public of what has become a necessity and a part of its life. We are not going before the legislature to ask to be heard but we are going to demand a hearing. Let us leave our dignity at home, that won't get us anything. Let us go to Albany as men who represent a visualized power equal or greater than the press, that can make itself felt in the election of our representatives and the affairs of the world." At the close of his speech two hundred men were enlisted to go to the legislative halls of Albany.

That's the spirit and talk that win battles and accomplish things. That's the kind of action we should have had two years ago instead of waiting until we are face to face with the problems that we are up against just now. The National Association made no mistake when it chose the man it did as its president. We have some good material in the industry among the exhibitors and producers and we need it, to put the industry right with itself and right with the rest of the world. There are men who will sacrifice themselves and anybody else for gold who wouldn't defend the land that gives it to them, and so it is with some in the industry. They will take everything and give nothing. Wake up, exhibitors, wake up, producers and every other branch of the industry! Legislation has picked us out as easy marks and a few more good swift jolts may wake us up when it is too late to recover. Don't be like the little Hebrew band who said they didn't want to fight, but they would give the boys a good send off by playing "Onward Christian Soldiers."

Let every mother's son of us join the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, our local, state and National Exhibitors' League. There is work to be done at the National Convention at Chicago next July and we want the right kind of officers both in the National Exhibitors' League and National Association for the good of the whole industry.

Don't be cajoled until the eleventh hour and expect to contend successfully with the shrewd and cunning politicians who gain your confidence and then double cross you with a promise to place you in line for future fame and fortune and make life easy for you. Every man who has a vote in the convention should go there as no man's man.

Here we are spilling all this stuff about the convention at Chicago, two months hence, and almost forgot we are facing the Sunday-closing and the Wheeler tax bills that may, if it becomes a law, knock us all out of business and we won't have any use for conventions. While there's life there's hope. You can't kick after you are dead so keep alive and don't let them put you in the hearse with the dead ones. To be forewarned is to be forearmed. Remember we told you so.

"Held Up to Scorn"

WE quote from the last issue of our esteemed contemporary the Dramatic Mirror as follows: "The trade publications were invited not long since to send their reviewers to witness a preshowing of a picture which shall be nameless, but which so offended all the laws of good taste and good sense that one is constrained to wonder if the exploiters of the film were acting upon sane judgment in placing it before the public. It was suggestive, nauseating, indecent and disgusting. It made use of shallow pretext to present a mass of putrescent piffle.

"In the name of common sense why will producers or distributors of screen material thus offend? Have they not been warned sufficiently to realize that such pictures, even if they do pass the censors, will do incalculate harm to the industry, give its enemies additional fuel with which to feed the fires of their opposition, and, beyond that, prove injurious to the public?

"The Mirror declares unrestrained and ruthless war upon such offending films. If the ones exploiting this picture have ordinary intelligence they will withdraw it from the market and save the motion picture business another black eye. If they are unscrupulous and seek only to attract money by their output, then they should be held up to scorn by every decent-minded person connected with the industry."

To all of the above the MOVING PICTURE WORLD subscribes heart and soul. Within the past few weeks we have refused advertising on several such pieces of abominable filth—films which are intended to draw through their appeal to the low, vicious, base and immoral in men and women. That the manufacturers and distributors use titles and publicity propaganda under the guise of teaching eugenic truths, moral uplift or evils of vice is proof only of the depths to which some that disgrace and defile the whole industry have sunk. Rather let us say that it shows the cesspools in which some have always lived and the usual level of their mental conceptions. Such minds are to be found everywhere, but it is to the everlasting detriment of the moving picture business that some of them continue to pollute the springs of this industry with their low-lived, degenerate portrayals.

It is no wonder that a self-respecting producer in testimony before a recent commission said he would get out of business unless it succeeded in purging itself of these elements. Instructions to cut out all advertising in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD were issued recently to their advertising men by the heads of a firm whose copy we refused on a vile production they are now exploiting. We are highly flattered and if the business is to be controlled in future by panderers such as they, we too, will be glad to be out of it.

Unless we are much mistaken, however, there is a continually increasing number of men coming into the industry that have no more intention of making their living in a business at which the finger of scorn is pointed than we have.

We realize that this very article may furnish material for those who are fighting for censorship, to which we are unalterably opposed, but we also realize that the industry must correct its own evils quickly and unflinchingly or outside interests will take a hand.

Water seeks its own level. It also cannot rise higher than its source. We cannot expect fine photoplays from corrupt minds or those who daily wallow in filth and whose mental equipment can only be compared to a cesspool. Keep the pictures clean; or keep out of pictures altogether.

Credit to Whom Credit Is Due

By Sam Spedon.

THE National Association of the Moving Picture Industry is just getting its stride and doing things that count. You have all read in the trade papers that account of its board of legal advisors published exclusively in the Moving Picture World (apologies to the News). That's one of the best and wisest moves made in the industry. This board furnishes us (thanks to the producers) with an aggregation of legal talent and minds unsurpassed by any industry in the world. It does away with the expense of employing special counsel and uninteresting advice.

The National Association is practicing economy and its secretary is not only ornamental but useful. He is proving his efficiency practically, not theoretically, by doing the work himself and not taking credit for what he employs someone else to do.

You have all read in that exclusive report in the Moving Picture World (more apologies) of the mass meeting called by the president of the National Association at which he enrolled a small motion picture regiment to attend the legislative hearing of the Wheeler State Tax Bill at Albany, New York. Maybe that wasn't doing something!

We must not forget the notice of the National Association pictures, published exclusively in the Moving Picture World (some more apologies), soon to be released by the association. The first two just finished are "How the Great Stars Make Love," and "Great Fights of Great Falls," and there are three others, namely, "With the Funny Stars," in three reels, "Daredevil Stunts" and "Great Moments in Great Plays." These are going to make a barrel of money for the association and it will have the nucleus of a fund that it will enable it to do a whole lot to increase its usefulness to the industry.

More power to the N. A. M. P. I., may its shadow never grow less. If it was needed this year it will surely be needed next year. There are weighty matters on foot that it will have to wrestle with.

A Romance of the Wheeler Hearing at Albany

By Sam Spedon.

IT APPEARS to the fellow on the outside looking in that the Wheeler tax bill kills itself by being poorly drawn and illy advised. If it is ever introduced before the legislature it should be redrawn by some person or persons who know all angles of the industry and have exact figures on which to base an equitable taxation.

* * *

The hearing accomplished one good thing to say the least. It shows the National Association that, from the testimony given by its own members, it has a pile of work laid out for itself this coming year to regulate the business of the industry it represents. Everybody who attended the hearing gained a whole lot of inside information that is nothing short of a revelation.

* * *

Senator Harvey Hinman, councillor for the Wheeler committee, in summing up before the Senate committee on the Wheeler tax bill said: "There are two members of the motion picture representation in this room whose combined yearly salary amount to more than the proposed tax on the motion picture industry in this state." This assertion was so unexpected that Billy Brandt, Lou Bamberger and some others present became very nervous and self conscious.

* * *

The question was asked: if the producers cannot afford to pay such big salaries to Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, why do they do it? Some one answered: "Mary and Douglas are now in business for themselves."

* * *

When Ben Hampton gave his testimony before the Wheeler investigating committee, according to report read at Albany, last Thursday, he virtually admitted that the industry was in need of censorship and he and the industry were not capable of regulating this part of it. He expressed the thought that legislation regulation would be very beneficial to the industry as a whole. Judging from the Wheeler tax bill, the Murray Hill inquisitors thought so too. This testimony was more than interesting because it was thought by some of us, when Mr. Hampton took charge of the General Film he was just the kind of man needed to put the industry on a solid business basis. Mr. Hampton has resigned from the G. F. Co.

During Counselor Hinman's summary W. A. Brady reiterated a part of his speech by asking: "Why not tax the theaters and all forms of amusement? "Mr. Hinman said he thought it an excellent idea, worthy of recommendation to the legislative tax committee. Again some one interrupted by asking: "Why not tax the high salaried stars?" Mr. Hinman said no doubt the legislative committee would act upon that suggestion.

* * *

Ex-Senator Hinman quoted from W. A. Brady's testimony before the Wheeler committee that Brady's daughter received such a large salary he was obliged to take half of it away from her and bank it for her. "Good father!" shouted Brady.

* * *

Martin Littleton, counsel for the National Board of Review, made a strong point when he said: The appointment of a state license commission would invest one man with the power of a despot over the destinies of motion pictures.

* * *

The good natured forbearance of Mr. Hinman at the interruptions by the film men and his mischievous responses to their questions, by reading from their sworn testimony given to the Wheeler committee, was more amusing to the onlookers than to the participants.

* * *

Peter Brady, representing the labor unions, was insistent upon asking: "How about the two bucks they propose soaking the poor operators?" Ex-Senator Hinman finally said he would ask an amendment to that section of the bill, making the operator tax ten cents. At another part of the hearing Brady asked permisison to address the chair. The chairman said he had no objections if he (Brady) would promise to say nothing about the two bucks.

Wheeler Bill Hearing Brings Strong Protest

By C. L. Grant

Pertinent Facts and Figures Presented to Judiciary Committee at Albany—An Impressive Turnout of Picture Men

WHEN William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and head of the World Film Corporation, besought the members of the Senate Judiciary Committee in Albany last Thursday not to strangle an industry through unjust taxation in which America was leading the world, not tax the poor man's amusement, he re-echoed the sentiments of the greatest gathering of motion picture representatives that ever came to the state capitol. There can be no doubt but that members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, as well as members of the Wheeler Investigating Committee, realized full well the seriousness which confronts every phase of the industry should the Wheeler bill in its present form be favorably acted upon.

Headed by such men as Mr. Brady, Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Richard Rowland, president of the Metro Pictures Corporation; Hiram Abrams, president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation; Walter E. Greene, president of Artcraft Pictures, and many others of equal prominence the delegation, two hundred or more strong, arrived in Albany by special train Thursday noon. The hearing on the Wheeler bill, which proposes to tax producers, distributors, exhibitors and operators, and which has already been advanced to the third reading in the Senate, was to have been held at 2 o'clock in the Senate Chamber. Other matters, however, resulted in a three-hour delay. It was 5 o'clock before the Senate Chamber was finally cleared and members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, headed by Senator J. Henry Walters, took their places.

The importance of the bill and the interest which is attached to its outcome was most noticeable. Many senators, who have no great interest in the measure, but who are apparently desirous of doing the fair thing to the motion picture industry when the bill comes to a vote, could be seen about the chamber. Attorney George Van Namee, Robert Cummings, both of the State Bill Drafting Commission, were present, remaining throughout the entire session of over three hours. William Orr, secretary to Governor Whitman, was also an interested listener. The galleries were thronged with men and women. The Senate Chamber itself was crowded to the doors.

At the opening of the hearing Senator Walters and Assemblyman Wheeler asked the number who were present to speak in opposition to the bill. It was first agreed to give the opposition an even hour during which arguments against the measure in its present form might be presented. As it later turned out, however, the committee became so interested in the remarks of Mr. Brady, Mr. Irwin and others that more than the allotted time was conceded. From 6:30 o'clock until long after 8 o'clock the bill itself had its innings as represented by, former Senator Harvey Hinman, who has served as counsel for the committee.

Attorney Robert Rubin, of New York, introduced the various speakers opposing the Wheeler bill. The first was Frank W. Thornton, an accountant, who had gone carefully over the situation and explained to those present the effect which the Wheeler bill will have on the business of today.

It was evident from the very outset that Senator Walters and his associates were keenly interested in every phase of the situation. At frequent intervals Senator Walters interrupted Mr. Thornton and other witnesses later on, plying them with questions in order that his fellow associates might have the clearest conception of the measure when it came up for later deliberation. Mr. Thornton said that the Wheeler tax would bring in from $700,000 to $1,000,000 in this state and that if the same tax was adopted by other states the entire country would be forced to pay a tax of over $10,300,000, every cent of which would probably have to come out of the poor man's pocket, a man who is today all but taxed to death.

Adolph Zukor, speaking as a leading manufacturer on the injurious effects of the measure, said in part: "This industry is young. It is still in its infancy. We have had a great deal to contend with, not only in this state, but all over the country. It seems that the moving picture industry is more attacked than any other. We are at the present time taxed by the state, taxed by the national government and pay taxes based on income. This industry should not be singled out as one to be specially taxed. There is no reason whatever why this particular industry should be forced to undergo treatment different from that of any other industry. We are perfectly willing to stand for taxes like any other industry in the state."

At this juncture Senator Ogden Mills, who is regarded as one of the shrewdest financiers in the Senate, interrupted with a number of questions as to just what tax or taxes the motion picture industry is paying today.

P. A. Powers, of the Universal Film Company, addressing the committee, explained in considerable detail just what effect the unfairness of the Wheeler bill would have on the exchange and the distributor. Mr. Powers said that he had been distributing film for the past ten or twelve years, and at the present time the Albany and Buffalo district was distributing about 65,000 feet of ordinary film a week and about 20,000 feet of special features. Mr. Powers said that under the provisions of the bill he would be forced to pay a tax running into the thousands. He said that he knew of no way in which he could continue in business if this tax was levied according to the provisions of the bill. He predicted that the small exhibitor would be forced out of business. His remarks brought forth prolonged applause.

Three speakers during the hearing presented most excellent arguments against the enactment of the measure. One was William A. Brady. The other was W. W. Irwin, of the V-L-S-E. The third was Martin W. Littleton. Mr. Irwin at the outset called attention to the fact that this country is today becoming the world center in the production of the greatest films. "The motion picture is just beginning to come into the proper degree of recognition," said Mr. Irwin. "The film today is the strongest factor in advocating national prohibition. There is not a police officer but who can testify to the many cases where men have been taken from street corners by the attractiveness of the motion picture back to the wholesomeness of his family. We resent being classified with the liquor interests and the race tracks. But this industry cannot be taxed to death. It is a strange thing that the report of this committee goes on to say that the industry is in no condition at the present time to be taxed and yet they turn around and draw a bill bringing a burden and a hardship to every single branch and eventually reaching into the pocketbook of the working man.

"If you hamper and restrict this industry you are injuring the people as well as the business. There is no vehicle of thought transmission equal to the motion picture. Today the movies in presenting the horrors of war are educating the people to a future prevention.

"Every company maintains an exchange in New York city. Every exchange feeds northern New Jersey and western Connecticut. Assume that a New York exchange has five prints to cover that territory. Four of them are booked for particular dates and Poli in Connecticut wants a print of that subject for Monday or Tuesday. We have got to deliver to our customer. We cannot get any made up. We cannot keep prints simply for New York, New Jersey or Ohio. These prints are a circulating library. If Connecticut, Vermont and Massachusetts pass similar bills what we will be paying on a picture that cost more than $16 a foot. It is utterly impossible to designate specific prints for specific territories. Assume that we purchase negatives in Europe; it would be impossible to obtain an affidavit from an Italian corporation furnishing the cost. They don't want to give that cost. Assume that a manufacturer is making a negative and selling under contract at $3 per foot and making it for $2 per foot, the purchaser seeing that he had a profit of 33 1-3 per cent would take care the following year to cut down that profit."

Introducing himself as a speaker who came before the committee to explain the fundamental conceptions on which the Wheeler bill was based, Congressman Littleton commanded the instant attention of the entire audience. Mr. Littleton took occasion to say that the motion picture business was not one that could be classified by the word "outlaw." He said that like all businesses it could be conducted properly and improperly. "I believe that you can search the history of this state in vain," said Mr. Littleton, "before you will ever find a piece of legislation which creates a state department and then turns over to that state department the power to allow a business to begin, the right to allow a business to continue and to leave the business entirely to the arbitrary control of that department."

Mr. Littleton quoted several sections of the bill in substantiating his assertion. He was emphatic in saying that the commission would have the power of saying, "Let there be light, and there was light; let there be darkness, and there is darkness." Mr. Littleton presented some of the best arguments of the entire hearing, speaking in a voice that carried his words to the furthermost portions of the galleries. Throughout his speech not a senator left the room. Secretary Orr remained standing throughout.

Before introducing William A. Brady, Attorney Robert Rubin called attention to the fact that there was no more excuse for licensing a motion picture film than there was for licensing a phonographic record.

In his opening remarks Mr. Brady said that Senator Hinman and Assemblyman Wheeler must have thought that they had discovered a new gold field in the motion picture industry, judging from the tax which they had devised. He said that instead of being a gold field the business was really in a bad condition. Mr. Brady called the committee's attention to the fact that the delegation present at the hearing contained the head of every important motion picture organization in America, and that the firms represented 70 per cent of all the films being produced in the entire world today.

"Why have you selected for special taxation the motion picture business, the poor man's entertainment?" asked Mr. Brady. "Tickets to the Metropolitan opera cost $6 each. I pay taxes on a million and a half dollars in property in New York city. I have been in the legitimate theater business for thirty years. Why don't you tax the legitimate theatrical industry? Why do you tax or rather propose to tax the poor man's amusement and not the rich man's? Why not tax the baseball industry, a business that takes hundreds of thousands of dollars out of this state?

"The legitimate theater needs just as much regulation as the motion pictures. Why don't you go to the roof gardens of New York city? Why don't you tax those bandits who speculate in tickets and force many of you to pay twice the admission price? Tax the cabarets, held on the tenth floor of some building without any fire escapes, without any observance of the fire laws, a place where you pay $7 a bottle for $2 wine and a highball costs you 75 cents? Don't tax poor, insignificant persons who are struggling to make a living.

"Tax all forms of entertainment and we are with you body and soul. Tax everybody, tax baseball, Paderewski, McCormack. But remember that motion pictures are becoming the greatest industry in this world and that New York state has obtained more out of them than all the rest of the world. You cannot afford to cripple, to injure and to kill that industry and at the same time force the hundreds of thousands of poor persons, whose only diversion is the motion pictures, to pay a higher price of admission."

Mr. Brady said that his association was working tooth and nail these days in an effort to eliminate the indecent, the obscene and the obnoxious from the film. "We are members of an industry which in no distant date will be of more importance to the young than the schoolroom itself."

Mr. Brady urged the committee not to pass the bill, saying that other states of the union would certainly follow the lead of the Empire State and that the doom of the motion picture industry would be sealed.

Mr. Brady's remarks were loudly applauded. For the two hours that followed during which Senator Hinman sought to explain the various details of the bill Mr. Brady took the keenest interest, frequently interrupting the speaker and asking him to explain the meaning of some complex sentence or clause. Mr. Brady is, first of all, a fighter. He does not believe in letting any one tread on his toes, nor the toes of the infant industry which he so ably represented.

In Peter Brady, speaking at the hearing for organized labor, and particularly for the operator, who will be forced to pay a fee of $2 if the bill is passed, the operator had a champion. Mr. Brady came equipped with figures which he had obtained from the comptroller's office showing the enormous increase in taxes in this state during the past few years. Mr. Brady said that if the state was going to tax amusements, and particularly one which characterized the working man's idle hours, then tax golf and tennis. He said there was no reason for taxing the operator. If operators were taxed, he said, then bartenders, trainmen, motormen should also be called upon to pay a tax in an effort to get this state out of its financial tangles. The speaker said that the taxation of operators would force many of the competent men out of business. He also called attention of the committee to the fact that taxation would bring about retrenchment on the part of the producers, the distributors and the exhibitors in the printing trade.

Margaret Mayo, the sole representative of the authors, made a brief plea for the motion picture interests. Her talk was to the point and merited the applause which it received. She said that, while the motion picture industry no doubt made enormous profits a few years ago, present day conditions were such that they were not making the fortunes which many imagined. She said that, while a few years ago producers would accept almost anything for a play, the tendency of today was to elevate the industry by getting the very best possible from authors and playwrights. As an example Miss Mayo said that three years ago she had received the sum of $300 for a play and that only a few days ago she had received $10,000 in advance for a play no better and 50 per cent of the profits which it is expected will accrue. Miss Mayo took the stand that the legislature should encourage rather than discourage an industry which was struggling to benefit every person in the state, and that, instead of taxing it to death, it should be given support.

Senator Hinman, in presenting the bill to his audience, offered no apologies, sustaining his reputation along argumentative lines. At one stage of the hearing Senator Hinman made the remark that the committee had not been met fairly and frankly by certain ones in New York.

Mr. Brady jumped to his feet and inquired if he had not met the committee in all fairness. Senator Hinman said that, while Mr. Brady had been most fair, yet there had been one or two others whom he thought were not open and frank in explaining the situation in the motion picture industry.

For two hours Senator Hinman talked, being interrupted time after time by this or that one who wanted a clear conception of just exactly what the bill means to the producer, the distributor, the exhibitor or the operator. Two hundred men and a half a dozen women intensely interested in the situation went dinnerless in order to remain at the hearing until its conclusion. Members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, as well as members of the Wheeler committee, made the statement at the conclusion of the hearing that they had been surprised at the magnificent showing made by the delegation from New York city, and likewise in the clear manner in which the arguments had been set forth by opponents of the measure.

Wheeler Bill May Die

Belief Expressed That It Will Not Come Out of Committee —Bill Poorly Drawn Admitted.

WHAT will become of the Wheeler motion picture bill? A member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, whose name cannot be divulged, made the prediction at the close of Thursday's hearing that the bill will die in committee. Another senator, a member of the Wheeler committee, expressed a like opinion. If the bill eventually passes the legislature it certainly will be in some changed form. The effects of the hearing were apparent on members of the Wheeler committee. A meeting of the committee and its counsel, Senator Harvey Hinman, was held in Albany on Friday to talk over the situation.

There is an attitude among members of the committee that some one has double crossed them. The same sentiment exists among representatives of the motion picture interests. Senator Hinman arrived in Albany on Tuesday. He lost no time in conferring with Assemblyman Wheeler. The latter must have realized the serious predicament of his bill. Later on Senator Hinman said that it might be possible to further reduce the proposed footage tax. Senator Carson, a member of the Wheeler committee, in discussing the situation said that the committee had given the motion picture people exactly what they wanted, as outlined in the testimony furnished the committee during the hearings in New York city. Senator Carson said that after they had devised the bill which they supposed would suit the industry that it was not attacked.

Motion picture representatives were open in declaring that the committee had deliberately double crossed them, saying that Assemblyman Wheeler in his first report stated that the industry was in no condition for taxation at the present time, and then the committee deliberately turned around and framed a measure which would tax them literally to death.

The legislature will probably adjourn the first week in May. Whether the influence of Thursday's hearing will be sufficient to kill the bill in committee remains a question. It is certain, however, that the Wheeler bill is less strong than a few days ago. There is no doubt but that the legislature of this state is today tax mad. They have licensed cats. They propose to double the license fees for pleasure cars and the senators and assemblymen are searching every nook and cranny in an effort to appease Senator Elon R. Brown and Assemblyman Thaddeus Sweet in their plans to enrich New York state's coffers. The legislators feel that the motion picture industry should bear its burden, but if Thursday's hearing through the arguments of Mr. William Brady and others proves itself strong enough there is considerable doubt if this particular industry will stand singled out from all other amusements and be called upon to meet taxes running into the thousands. C. L. GRANT.

WALKER BILL ADVANCED.

Advices from Albany on Saturday, April 21, were to the effect that the Walker bill permitting moving picture shows to run on Sunday had been advanced by the Senate from general orders to the order of final passage on the following week. As "general orders" has been considered the "graveyard" for measures that were to be killed, this action on the part of the Senate is looked upon as a favorable sign by those interested in Sunday exhibitions.

One Senator remarked during the last day or two that opponents of the measure played a crafty hand when the bill was reported out of committee in its widest latitude, making defeat more certain through the votes of upstate legislators, who might possibly have been induced to favor a bill less wide open. We Sacrifice Markets in East, Says Howells

Americans Should Deal Direct With Antipodes and Not Through London, Declares Exporter

THROUGH including or "throwing in" in their London transactions the rights of their films for the Orient American manufacturers are underselling themselves, declared David P. Howells, exporter of American films, at his office in the Candler Building last week. Mr. Howells has just returned from a stay of two and a half years in the antipodes, the greater part of the time in Australia. He left the island continent November 1 last. There he had been handling Metro features, the Drew comedies and the travelogues. Previous to that he had introduced the World Film product to the Australians.

David P. Howells.

Mr. Howells' first stop on his way to the United States was in the Dutch East Indies. He spent a month motoring the Island of Java, where he found excellent roads, visiting the larger centers and many of the villages. He made a close study of film conditions. He spent six weeks in China and Japan and two months in India. In each of the countries through which he toured Mr. Howells was impressed by the fact that American manufacturers are overlooking real opportunities for extending their fields of operations. Owing to war conditions films may be shipped with greater facility from the United States than from London. Yet if an American salesman attempts to sell film in the East he will discover that the showmen there are inclined to wait for quotations from London, with the result that prices are given which make a sale impossible for the direct representative of the manufacturer.

In Java Mr. Howells talked with the showmen and made a close study of conditions. The island theaters are divided into four classes, "like a boat," as the film man expressed it. The fourth class, or cheaper seats, are nearest the screen. The first class chairs usually are in the balcony, with the second class at the rear of the orchestra. The furniture, too, is graded in quality to conform to the amount paid for the seats. American pictures in Java are the most popular. The prevailing demand is for the sensational type. Sex pictures do not count for much; the serials are more to the liking of the inhabitants. Mr. Howells said he found the Javanese one of the most progressive of the Eastern races. The picture business has got a good start in the island.

In India the motion picture industry is in a primitive state, Mr. Howells said. There are great possibilities, but in that country and in fact all through the East careful study and suitable pioneering are required. The house of Pathe has gone at the problem in a most intelligent way, especially in comparison with the manner in which many other manufacturers have tried to handle the situation. There is a tendency on the part of Americans, Mr. Howells declared, to believe they can sit in their offices and dictate correspondence and get substantial results. The same opinion prevails to a large extent in London, with the result that they fail to get the viewpoint of India.

"The manufacturers have failed to make a study of the territory," said Mr. Howells, "but with pioneering and by spending money in acquiring first hand information of the country, giving the people selected pictures suitable to their mental scope, the film business in that country may be built up into a good thing for the manufacturers. India contains many progressive people. I attended a congress in Calcutta and listened to addresses by natives that would compare with anything that could be heard in any body in the world."

China, Mr. Howells found, was less progressive in a picture way than any of the Eastern nations. Japan is probably the most advanced. Eighty per cent of the pictures shown in the latter country are of American production.

"Most of the marketing of pictures in the East is made through London," declared Mr. Howells. "This is a vital mistake on the part of American manufacturers. The prices at which film is offered from London is from 20 to 50 per cent less than those quoted from New York. Naturally the buyer waits for the London quotation. The showmen would be just as willing to trade direct with the manufacturer if they could get an even break. The remedy is for America to limit the London agent in his field of operations and not throw in the whole world outside of the United States and Canada, in which a majority of the producers here seem to be mainly interested. In normal times New York can deal just as advantageously with the East as can London; at the present time it can deal much better. Boat service is rapidly developing in the Pacific.

"The Japanese are the only people in the East making any attempt at producing, so far as I could discover, that is, of course, except in Australia, and there the efforts have not been very successful. There was an attempt at production in Hongkong two years ago, but it did not succeed. In India I only heard of one attempt at production, but that has not yet been declared a success. In that country, however, there are wonderful opportunities for the producer. Atmospheric conditions are ideal and the settings would be most attractive to Western eyes. Mob scenes could be staged at practically no expense. From what we heard in India the country is more tranquil now than it was before the outbreak of hostilities. This is ascribed by Englishmen to the elimination of Teutonic intrigue."

Mr. Howells, while touring in the East, was making preparations for shipping American film. It is his intention to forward the products of United States makers to the Orient, Australia and New Zealand. He emphasized the necessity of Americans carefully guarding their brands and protecting the Eastern markets from the operations of pirates and dupers. "The film pirate and junk dealer had ought to be made to walk the plank in these markets," declared Mr. Howells. "The Easterners would prefer to pay more money to get good copies and to know that they would be protected in their rights to show pictures without the continual fear that some one is going to 'butt in' on them. The trade there knows what is going on in this country. They read our trade papers. I don't have to tell you I found the Moving Picture World all through those countries."

Mr. Howells' brother, Beniamin F., will leave shortly for the Orient, where he will remain a year. At the end of that time he will return to New York and the subject of this sketch will take his place. It is the aim to have the home market and the East simultaneously covered at all times.

Paramount Declares For Open Booking

New Plan in Force August 5—Big Combine Also Gets Control of Artcraft Pictures Corporation

ADOLPH ZUKOR, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announces that commencing August 5 the Paramount Pictures Corporation will inaugurate throughout its twenty-two exchanges situated in all the principal cities of the country the open-booking system of photoplay distribution.

Simultaneously, with this highly important and far reaching plan, Mr. Zukor stated also that Famous Players-Lasky Corporation had acquired control of Artcraft Pictures Corporation. The two biggest distributing organizations in the industry, when the new plan of Paramount goes into effect, will work co-operatively for the exhibitor.

By this step the greatest group of producing and stellar celebrities that has ever been collectively associated with the screen will be offered to exhibitors under a plan that promises economies of a most material sort. It will make possible, through an arrangement of releasing dates of Artcraft productions, for any or all exhibitors to show the unusually popular Artcraft attractions without shelving any of the Paramount releases. In other words, the release dates of the two distributing organizations will be so arranged that there will be no conflict.

"For this important action we have been laying definite plans for many months," said Mr. Zukor. "I feel personally that this is the most important announcement that has been addressed to exhibitors since September 1, 1914, when Paramount Pictures Corporation was organized and the elaborate program system inaugurated."

Announcement is made also for the first time that the attractions, which are presented through Artcraft Pictures Corporation, will be greatly strengthened by the addition of some notable names. To the list that includes the photoplays starring Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and George M Cohan, there will be added new productions by Cecil B. De Mille, in which Geraldine Farrar will appear as the star, the new series of photoplays starring Miss Elsie Ferguson, whose film debut has been eagerly awaited by the public, and the personally directed pictures made by D. W. Griffith, which will be started on the return of the famous director from England.

The Paramount group of film celebrities will consist of the most popular stars who have led its program and several new ones as well. The roster includes Marguerite Clark, Pauline Frederick, Mme. Petrova, Marie Doro, Billy Burke, Fannie Ward, Margaret Illington, Mae Murray, Sessue Hayakawa, Jack Pickford and Louise Huff, Vivian Martin, George Beban, Wallace Reid and Kathlyn Williams, Ann Pennington and others to be announced as engaged.

The acquisition of Artcraft Pictures Corporation by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which some months ago gained control of Paramount, will not mean an amalgamation of the two big distributing bodies, Mr. Zukor explained. Their individual fields have been clearly indicated to the public as well as to the exhibitor. It is possible, however, under the new arrangements to create economies of a far-reaching nature for the exhibitor, who will have the privilege of selection from one or both organizations without incurring unnecessary financial obligations.

The placing of this vast store of production resources upon the open market, where every exhibitor of the country may choose to his needs, marks the first application of the theory of open-booking on a great scale. By this announcement the discussion and theorizing of many months is crystalized into action for the first time, and a new era in the motion picture industry is at hand.

For months the work of mobilizing the foremost literary and dramatic masterpieces of the day, selected from among the efforts of the world's greatest contemporary writers, has been unceasing in order to provide the most advantageous and popular vehicles for the stars and producers whose productions are released through the two distributing organizations.
